PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS
FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 6, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou dost recognize our needs and hast been a present help in time of trouble. We supplicate this morning for that part of our country sitting amid the shadows of a great desolation and humbly beseech Thee for Thy help. We ask that in the midst of this sorrow hearts may be turned toward Thee and out of the calamity may come good to all directly or indirectly connected therewith. We ask Thy favor here this morning. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, June 2, 1921, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE UPPER SILESIAN QUESTION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from yesterday's New York Herald by Frank H. Simonds on the upper Silesian question as it affects the future of Europe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald, Sunday, June 5, 1921.]

"GREATER POLAND AS AN ALLY ESSENTIAL TO FRANCE—ANALYSIS OF EUROPE'S NEW PROBLEM MADE BY FRANK H. SIMONDS REVEALS HOW NECESSARY IT IS FOR THE GALLIC REPUBLIC TO HAVE STRONG FRIEND IN THE EAST TO OFFSET POSSIBLE TEUTON AMBITIONS IN THE FUTURE—BRITAIN'S POLICY AIMS FOR PEACE AND TRADE BUT LEAVES WAY OPEN FOR RENEWAL OF WAR.

"(By Frank H. Simonds.)

"The persistence of the upper Silesian trouble, the most disturbing single element in the European situation of the moment, should surprise no American observer of foreign affairs, for the simple reason that Poland, taking the larger question, of which the Silesian affair is only one of many phases, is, and will remain for the future, the gravest menace to European stability.

"It would be a mistake to charge the responsibility for this to the Poles themselves. In the last three centuries they have been almost habitually the victims rather than the authors of European disorder. Yet the fact remains that the situation in which the Polish race finds itself, its relation to its neighbors, and its importance to France in the new European adjustment combine to make it a source for future dangers even greater than that traditional eastern question, out of which arose the World War.

"Since this situation exists and will continue, there is reason for a brief examination of the Polish question as it now rises once more to trouble the world peace. Looking first at the general European situation one can perceive that, aside from Polish matters, there is gradually coming about an adjustment which might easily be of long duration. True, there remain many disputes between rival countries—disputes between the Italians and the southern Slavs over Adriatic frontages; between the Greeks and Italians over Albanian marches and Ægean islands; between the Hungarians and their several neighbors, who have taken from the Magyar State Provinces which contain Rumanian, Slovak, and Serbo-Croat majorities. There is a Bulgarian question for Serb, Rumanian, and Greek alike. There is a Turkish question for the Greeks.

"FRONTIER PROBLEM OF AUSTRIA LOOMS IN CENTRAL EUROPE AGAIN.

"Looking at the center of Europe, there is the familiar problem of Austria, which is seeking by almost daily demonstration to arrive at union with Germany. The new Bohemian State, too, has a German minority which accepts with ill grace incorporation in the Czecho-Slovak Nation. In a word, all around the edges of the new countries or the newly expanded small States there is friction. There may be readjustments, but time alone can bring about real stability. Yet, aside from the Austrian issue, conditions are plainly approaching a condition of stabilization. The several treaties, the arrangements between small countries, these give solid bases for hope.

"Moreover, when one looks at the larger States the situation is even more promising. Italy has at last established her guards on the crests of the Alps from Fiume to the Swiss frontier. Italia irredenta, that source of many wars in the last century, has disappeared as an issue. If there are now Slav and German majorities within Italian frontiers, as the recent election showed, their claims do not now constitute a European menace. The treaty of Rapallo between the Jugo-Slav and the Italians has been accepted on both sides of the new frontier and has brought an end to intrigue by Italy and unceasing threat by Slav.

"As to France, she has returned to the Rhine, and, with the reconquest of the 'Lost Provinces,' has, like Italy, parted with an issue which has been in the back of all French minds ever since the treaty of Frankfort. Real peace between Germany and France was impossible while Germany held Strassburg and Metz.

"To be sure, there is the German hope of reconquest, but one may take present German threats with a grain of salt. Seated on the Rhine and the Saar, France has an immensely fencible frontier. To attack, Germany must now invade not alone through Belgium but also through Holland, as some of her generals urged in 1914, and this means adding Dutch and Belgian armies to French and almost inevitably insures the reappearance of Britain on the Continent. Even the Saar Basin, which is a thorny problem, can be disposed of when the hour arrives, 13 years hence, without necessarily constituting a cause for war.

"PARIS SETTLEMENT SHOWS A GAIN IN WEST AND SOUTH DESPITE OUTCRY.

"The simple fact is that the geographical settlements of the Paris conference in the west and south, despite all the outcry which they have occasioned, represent a gain for European order as well as for racial integrity. Certainly economic adjustments between the succession States of Austria are essential, must come, but, deduction again being made for Austria, reasonable solutions are not impossible. Accepting for the moment the view that the reparations issue has passed out of the debate, European peace would seem probable were the western obstacles alone to be considered.

"But it is at this moment that the Polish question takes on its true significance. We may believe that Germany, in the end and with reluctance, might accept the Alsace-Lorraine decision of the treaty of Paris because the present and the future dangers of challenging it are enormous, and would not impossibly bring Germany again into collision with the nations which defeated her in the recent war, all of whom have a debt of honor to France, so far as the question of Alsace-Lorraine is concerned. We may believe that the western frontier of Germany would be accepted by Germans as well as by Frenchmen and Belgians, just as it seems probable that what constitutes the natural frontiers of Italy will stand the test of time.

"But can any German accept the Polish settlement? Let us concede at once that this settlement, so far as it has been made, represents an injustice to the Poles rather than to the Germans. The partition of Poland, engineered by Frederick the Great, was one of the supreme political crimes of all history. The steady colonization of Germans on territory which was clearly Polish has represented only the second step in the wrong done the Polish people. If upper Silesia in whole or in part is retained by Germany, more Poles will still live under German rule than Germans within the frontiers of the new Polish Republic.

"But this does not in the least change the fact that the treaty of Paris cut Prussia in half. It separated East Prussia from the main mass of the old Hohenzollern monarchy, thrusting the notorious Danzig 'corridor' northward. In giving the Poles Posen, a Province in which the Slav majority was overwhelming, the Paris conference made Berlin almost a frontier city. Granted that only a portion of the Silesian mineral fields fall to Poland ultimately, Germany will lose a considerable source of wealth and a portion of her resources for modern war, which is founded upon coal and iron beyond all else.

"Every German statesman from Frederick the Great onward has spoken of all other problems of his country as minor by comparison with the Polish question. To believe that sixty or seventy millions of Germans will permanently endure a situation in which their country is divided by the Danzig strip, will accept the loss of Danzig, Posen, Thorn, Bromberg, to say nothing of other lands that may be lost in upper Silesia, is to believe what is on the face of it impossible. Moreover, whatever be the expansion of Poland in the next two or three decades, whatever the gain in consolidation and reintegration, Poland can not hope to be a match for the Germany which must presently become again a world power.

"In this situation the French policy makes itself felt. France, too, with a prospective 40,000,000 of people a few decades hence, can not resign herself to impotence in the presence of a Germany of 70,000,000, setting out on a new career of conquest, with Poland as the first objective and the whole of middle Europe as an attractive artichoke, to be eaten leaf by leaf. Granted that the restored Germany might long delay an attack in the west, given its dangers, the time might well come even there when even British intervention would have no peril, no threat for a Germany expanded to cover all the lands between the Vistula and the Rhine and between the Baltic and the Black Sea.

"Following 1870, French policy sought and found in the Russian alliance the only possible counterweight to German menace. France could not then stand alone against Germany; she can not to-morrow. The British alliance will not suffice, for Britain does not and will not maintain an army based upon conscription. In 1914 Britain could get only four divisions to Mons in August, she had but six at the Marne in September, and the seventh did not reach Belgium until October. This small but infinitely precious reenforcement, moreover, was not sufficient to bridge the gap between German and French effectives.

"It was the Russian offensive in East Prussia, not the British divisions, which saved France at the Marne, by compelling the Germans to send two corps and a cavalry division east before the decisive battle. To-day, with Russia gone, France must still seek an eastern ally, and that ally is, in the nature of things, Poland. With 30,000,000 of people, with a system of conscription, with an army trained under French direction, Poland can supply the numbers essential to insure French safety, to take off enough of the German mass to enable France to make good the Rhine barrier at the very least.

"There, after all, is the naked truth of the new European situation. French safety depends upon Polish strength. If France is to be insured against a new German menace, that insurance must be found in Poland. But to obtain the Polish insurance France is bound to lend all her assistance to the Poles; she must stand with them against the Russians, as she did in the crisis of last summer, when Weygand and Jusserand went to Warsaw; she must stand with them in upper Silesia. Every ounce added to the weight of Poland is an ounce taken off the burden of France on her own frontiers when Germany regains her strength.

"But—and the fact is capital—Germany can not and will not accept the Polish settlement. If an accident of war should bring an American defeat, and as Zimmermann in his notorious proposal suggested, California, New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona should be returned to Mexico, can anyone imagine the American Nation accepting the decision? I am not suggesting the situations are intrinsically identical. Polish rights to Posen, West Prussia, and upper Silesia are something far more solidly founded on present ethnic conditions than the Mexican title to certain American States, but the German feeling in the present situation is precisely what the American would be in the instance I have suggested.

"Prussia remains the dominant factor in Germany and will remain. The greatness of Prussia was founded on the seizure of Silesia and the partition of Poland. Berlin, the Prussian as well as the German capital, is an open city barely a hundred miles from the new Polish boundary posts. East Prussia is divided from Pomerania by the Danzig corridor, and Danzig, one of the truly great German cities, is lost to Germany, while Konigsberg, which has a peculiar hold upon Prussian sentiment, is to-day the capital of an enclave in Slav territory.

"Now, British policy, as contrasted with the French, has always looked at the question of peace. France has sought and seeks security. Britain, secure within her islands, aims at such adjustments in Europe as will avoid any war, and, above all, any war which may affect Britain. A century and a quarter ago British policy consented to the last partition of Poland because it was a detail in obtaining Prussian and Austrian assistance in the war against the French Revolution, which was a menace to British security. At Paris two years ago Britain was ready to make any sacrifice of Polish interests to avoid the certainty of a later German challenge to the Versailles settlement.

"The American must clearly grasp the essential difference in objective of the Briton and of the Frenchman to see the truth in the latest European affair. Britain desires to avoid another continental war, so perilous to her commerce and her industry. In any war between Germany and France she would almost inevitably be dragged in, as she was before, because a victorious Germany at Calais and Antwerp would be a deadly peril for her. But such a war is almost inescapable if Poland be erected into a State, occupying most, if not all, of the truly Polish lands which were stolen by the Prussians under Frederick the Great and have been held in political servitude and against the will of their inhabitants ever since.

"Recall British policy in the Balkans and the parallel is illuminating. The British under Beaconsfield were always ready to turn back Christian populations to Turkish butchers because British policy aimed at restraining Russian advance on Constantinople, and the Christian populations of the Balkans, being mainly Slavs, seemed to British eyes certain to become tools of Russian ambition. British policy in the Baltic to-day is quite like British policy in the Near East in the days of the Congress of Berlin.

"At Paris the British were ready and eager to make Poland the sacrifice essential to insure a going peace. They fought both the French and the Americans successfully, seeking reductions of the territories assigned to Poland, because they saw in such assignments the certainty of a later German war, which would involve the rest of Europe, almost ineluctably. And they were just as ready to sacrifice Poland to Russia when the Red armies approached Warsaw and European stability seemed endangered by the bolshevist invasion.

"French policy, on the contrary, supported the Poles in all cases, not primarily because there was a profounder French appreciation of the immiment justice of the Polish claims but because Poland was a factor, a vital factor, in French security. As for the Americans, they wandered between the two policies, on the whole seeking larger concessions for the Poles than were allowed, because Mr. Wilson adhered to his 14 points, of which self-determination was one of the nearest to his heart. In the end it was Lloyd-George who prevailed upon the President to reduce the Polish corridor and provide a plebiscite for upper Silesia, originally assigned to the Poles.

"To-day in upper Silesia, British policy follows the same course. It will necessarily continue to follow it. The more that is taken from Germany, irrespective of the moral claims of Germany to it, the more certain Germany is, when she becomes strong, to seek to recover the lost ground. But such an effort spells a new European war. Therefore, the British deem it the wise course to take as little as possible from Germany. Even the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France found British unofficial opposition before the armistice and finds present critics to-day for precisely the same reason.

"A week ago I dwelt upon the other phase of British policy, the desire to restrain France, become the greatest military power in Europe, the return to the traditional policy of the balance of power. This, too, is a dominating influence, but beneath all else lies the British instinct to avoid war by concessions, concessions which may sacrifice principle to practical considerations, but serve an obvious and unmistakable purpose.

"POLAND ALREADY HAS ENOUGH TO EXCITE GERMANY TO SEEK REVENGE.

"It remains true, however, and here is the source of much contemporary British criticism of French policy, that the solution which has so far been arrived at in the matter of Poland negatives all British purpose and wish. To be sure Poland has not acquired all that France, or even the United States, as represented by President Wilson, would have assigned to her at Paris. But she has enough to insure German pursuit of revenge, of a new European settlement. Her frontiers can be maintained against Germany, when Germany recovers, only by force and by the force of France as well as of Poland. Even this force will not in the long run restrain Germany from trying to regain what she has lost of her old stealings. And this means a new continental war.

"Take the British view from the British standpoint: Before and during 1914 Russia supported Serbia. Serbia was in dispute with Austria; the merits of the dispute are clear, but they are unimportant. As a consequence of this dispute came the Sarajevo tragedy, the Austrian ultimatum, the decision of Russia to support Serbia, of Germany to back Austria, of France to remain faithful to her Slav ally. Then came the invasion of Belgium and finally Britain was driven into a war, which in its origins did not touch her at all—that is, in its apparent origins. While the question was Serbian, Sir Edward Grey manifested actual sympathy with the Austro-German case. While it was still Russo-German, he stood unmoved. Even when it became French half of his cabinet were cold. But becoming Belgian, it became British.

"Now here, beginning under British eyes, is a new condition quite comparable with the old. The British are not interested in the frontiers between Poland and Germany. They are not prepared to fight to sustain Poland, either against Germany or against Russia—just as the United States is not. But French policy makes an eastern policy a western question. If Germany acts against the Poles, France will move against the Germans. Germany can only fight France through Belgium, and in a moment we are back at all the old evil circumstances of the World War, with all its terrible consequences.

"REPETITION OF GREAT WAR MEANS DESTRUCTION FOR BRITAIN AND EUROPE.

"Put the thing very simply. The British want peace in Europe; peace because peace is essential to their own domestic existence, let alone prosperity, since the closing of the European markets brings ruin to British industry. To obtain that peace they are prepared to sacrifice Polish interests to Germany, just as they subordinated the interests of the small Balkan people to Turkish when Turkey was a vital factor in British foreign policy in the Near East. A continuation of present European unrest, a repetition of the recent war any time in the next century, means the ruin not alone of Europe but of Great Britain itself.

"The French, on their part, want security. This security can be obtained only by the construction and maintenance of a Poland sufficiently strong to bridge the wide and ever-growing difference between German and French population. France, therefore, must support and maintain all Polish claims which have a basis in right or a relation to French necessities in the matter of Germany. If Poland is crushed then France can no longer maintain herself against Germany, save as the British consent to an alliance and to an adoption of conscription—and the British will do neither.

"As for the Germans, they will not accept Poland as it has been constructed; they would not have accepted any Poland which contained territory once included within German frontiers, although stolen by Prussian sovereigns in the past. And Poland without such territory would be economically first and politically later the mere creature of Germany, which would hold the Danzig gateway to the sea and possess all the coal, or most of it, which is essential to the development of Polish industry.

"There, in a nutshell, is the real situation with respect of Poland and the truth about British and French policies. This is the chaos into which we Americans have just come after having stayed out of European discussions for many, many months. If you read British newspapers you find great and always increasing irritation with the French because of their championship of Poland. Stripped of all camouflage this means that Poland constitutes in British eyes a danger to world peace, a possible occasion for British participation unwillingly in a new world struggle. It is the fact of Poland that the British with their unerring instinct in foreign politics object to, because the fact of Poland constitutes the greatest single danger to European peace henceforth as far as one can see.

"Read the French newspapers, again eliminating all the portions of the articles which deal with moral and sentimental issues, and it will be seen that Poland is for France the cornerstone of the new Europe, and French resentment at British policy, which has been constant at the Paris conference and since, grows out of the fact that, for the French, Britain in her readiness to sacrifice Poland seems in reality to be sacrificing France.

"Actual European history to-day is beginning to revolve around a new pivot. New alliances are taking shape, new policies are coming to the surface, but most important of all political questions—accepting the reparations dispute as henceforth economic, which is a large assumption—is the Polish problem, of which the upper Silesian dispute is only a detail."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6567) to amend section 407 of the transportation act of 1920, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

BERNARD M. BARUCH.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short editorial from the Charleston News and Courier of South Carolina in regard to Mr. B. M. Baruch. I beg to state that Mr. Baruch was born in the State of South Carolina; his father was a distinguished physician there, was the president of the South Carolina Medical Society and chairman of the State board of health, and lived in our State many years. Dr. Baruch died last week, and in his death the Nation has lost one of its most distinguished physicians. Some time ago some one at the other end of the Capitol was unkind enough to make charges which we believe to be untrue and unfounded against Mr. B. M. Baruch. The editorial is a very clear and dignified refutation of those charges and sets forth the high esteem in which he is held in the South. It is very short, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, June 3, 1921.]

"MR. BARUCH CONFOUNDS HIS CRITICS.

"One of the meanest and lowest of the campaigns of slander which raged at Washington, and in lesser degree throughout the country following the war, was that which had for its object the tarnishing of the good name of Bernard M. Baruch, who had been one of the most able and influential of President Wilson's advisers in the prosecution of the war and in the making of peace. The vituperation directed against Mr. Baruch was fomented, there is every reason to believe, by the vicious political element which was bent upon destroying Woodrow Wilson at any price and which thought to do him harm by traducing Mr. Baruch.

"For months all sorts of outrageous falsehoods were whispered about as to Mr. Baruch's activities at Washington in such a way as to create deep and widespread prejudice against him, yet without offering him a chance to meet and refute these slanders, as he easily could have done. Mr. Baruch's bearing throughout this bitter experience has been admirable. He has not murmured or complained and has trusted confidently to time to do him justice. Usually it does, nor is Mr. Baruch's case to prove an exception. Most of the farmers and business men in the South who railed against him because they believed he had been responsible for the break in the price of cotton have found out their error, and there has just been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter written by Mr. Baruch to Senator KENYON in which it is shown how false and malicious was the charge that Mr. Baruch had anything to do with fixing the price of copper, the story which his enemies rolled under their tongues.

"Few men in America did as notable war service as did Mr. Baruch, and the economic sections of the peace treaty which he helped frame have yet to be subjected to criticism. It is interesting to learn authoritatively that not only does the record show that Mr. Baruch had no part whatever in price fixing, but he gave up his own business absolutely from the time the war started, disposed of his every interest that might possibly have affected his activities in Washington, neither bought nor sold any stocks, bonds, or commodities, and paid every cent of his own expenses in Washington, at Paris, and in all his journeyings while engaged in Government service, including rent for his office and the salaries for his secretary and stenographer.

"It is a disgraceful thing that men like Bernard M. Baruch and Charles M. Schwab in their effort to serve their country patriotically should have had to encounter such outrageous and indecent attacks as have been made upon them. It is comforting, however, to feel that Jefferson was right in his conviction that only the truth has power to harm permanently."

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation increasing the maximum number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue from 64 to 74, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Joint resolution 41, relating to the recognition of the Irish republic by the Government of the United States.

Whereas for upward of 700 years the people of Ireland have asserted, through force of arms as well as through parliamentary procedure, their incontestable claim to a free and independent government to which the nationhood of Ireland entitles them, and through which they might secure to themselves those inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness which are inherent in all peoples; and

Whereas the people of Ireland, possessing all the attributes of nationhood, have set up within the confines of their own country an Irish republican government to which they have pledged their allegiance, and such government, known as the Irish republic and sanctioned by the ballot of a vast majority of the Irish people, now is functioning as a de facto government and is, in fact, the only government recognized by the Irish people; and

Whereas for upward of 100 years it has been the settled policy and principle of the United States of America to acknowledge any government to be rightful which is founded by the will of the nation substantially declared; and

Whereas the people of the State of Wisconsin, firm in the conviction that the principle of self-determination in government extends to every nation whose people are united by common political ideals and that the people of Ireland are so united, believe that the Government of the United States, without violating any of the practices or usages of international law and without giving any other nation just cause for ill-will, can and should do everything in its power, consistent with its own principles and traditional policy, to encourage the recognition of Ireland as a free and independent republic: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature voicing the sentiment of the people of the State of Wisconsin, urges and requests the President of the United States, acting for and on behalf of the Government of the United States, by proclamation or in such other manner as may be proper, to formally recognize the Irish republic as a free and independent nation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly engrossed and authenticated, be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, and to each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Wisconsin.

GEO. C. COMINGS,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
RILEY S. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Joint resolution 44, memorializing the Congress of the United States not to repeal the excess profits and surtax laws and not to pass the sales tax law.

Whereas a concentrated effort is now being made to induce the Congress of the United States to repeal the excess-profits tax as well as the surtax; and

Whereas the main reason given for such repeal is that such taxes tend to cause men of wealth to invest their money in tax-free municipal bonds and securities instead of in business enterprises; and

Whereas it is a well-known fact that public improvements of all kinds were postponed during the war and that municipal corporations are now anxious to secure needed money with which to construct many needed public improvements; and

Whereas it is highly desirable that municipalities, in order to construct public improvements, be enabled to borrow money at reasonable rates of interest, which can be done when municipal securities are tax free, thereby helping to keep down the burden on the taxpayer and also give work to the thousands who would otherwise be idle because of industrial depression; and

Whereas neither of the taxes attempted to be repealed will affect the business man who does not make excessive profits, while they will affect the business man who is opposed to a return to normal business conditions and who desires to maintain high selling prices and excessive profits: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested not to repeal either the excess profits tax law nor the surtax law; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress is hereby requested not to adopt the so-called sales tax law or any other law which will shift the burden of taxes from higher incomes and excess profits to the consumers; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the two Senators and the Congressmen from this State.

GEO. C. COMINGS,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
RILEY S. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolution 23, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to construct, erect, build, and maintain a bridge across the Mississippi River between the city of Prairie du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin, and the cities of McGregor and Marquette (North McGregor), in the State of Iowa.

Whereas the Mississippi River is a navigable stream constituting the boundary between the States of Wisconsin and Iowa, and there being no highway bridge of any description between the cities of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, and La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, a distance of more than 120 miles; and

Whereas the cities of Prairie du Chien, McGregor, and Marquette (formerly North McGregor) are just halfway between the cities of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, and La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and are situated approximately 60 miles north of Dubuque, Iowa, and 60 miles south of La Crosse, Wis.; and

Whereas State highways Nos. 19, 27, and 60 of the State of Wisconsin have western termini at the city of Prairie du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin, and State highway 19, of the State of Iowa, has its eastern terminus at McGregor and Marquette (North McGregor), in the State of Iowa, and there being no bridge connecting such highways; and

Whereas there are thousands of automobilists, tourists, and interstate travelers annually going and coming from the eastern part of Wisconsin and other States to the east of Wisconsin, traveling westerly upon the above-designated highways across Wisconsin and Iowa and other States to the West of Iowa and vice versa; and

Whereas public necessity demands a highway bridge at these points to serve the interests of the public in traveling from one State to the other: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the members of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin do hereby petition and earnestly pray the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to construct, erect, build, and maintain a bridge across the navigable waters of the Mississippi River between the cities of Prairie du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin, and McGregor and Marquette (North McGregor), in the State of Iowa.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial, properly attested by the presiding officers and chief clerks of both houses, be forwarded by the secretary of state of Wisconsin to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

C. B. BIRD,
President of the Senate Pro Tempore.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
RILEY S. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
FIFTY-FIRST LEGISLATURE.

Senate concurrent resolution 4, relative to conditions in Mexico.

Whereas there has existed in the past in our neighboring Republic of Mexico a period of revolution, bloodshed, and misunderstanding in which life, liberty, and commerce were at all times in jeopardy; and

Whereas in an election recently held in that Republic there was elected to the Presidency the most honorable Gen. Alvara Obregon, a man of the people, who has devoted himself most vigorously to the task of bringing order out of chaos; and

Whereas President Obregon enjoys the entire respect, confidence, and whole-hearted backing of all classes of his countrymen; and

Whereas a new era of peace, prosperity, and friendly relationship has been brought about by His Excellency President Obregon; and

Whereas the people of the great State of Michigan are overjoyed at the splendid manner in which President Obregon is directing the affairs of his country, and therefore the State of Michigan joins her sister States in a formal expression of friendship to the people of Mexico, and commendation and confidence in President Obregon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Michigan declares itself to be most pleased with the election of, and the administration by, President Obregon, and takes pleasure in congratulating the people of Mexico upon the new era of peace and prosperity, and particularly for the friendly relationships which have been established; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives are hereby directed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of Michigan's Senators and Representatives in Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives be, and are hereby, directed to send to President Obregon a copy of this resolution.

Adopted by the senate June 2, 1921.

DENNIS E. ALWARD,
Secretary of the Senate.

Adopted by the house of representatives June 2, 1921.

CHARLES S. PIERCE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARREN presented a letter in the nature of a memorial of James A. and Minnie M. Crawford, of Alcova, Wyo., remonstrating against a proposed tariff of $10 per ton on amorphous graphite, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted at the convention of the Massachusetts State Court, National Order of the Daughters of Isabella, at Boston, Mass., May 23, 1921, favoring the recognition by the United States of the republic of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution of the Blair County Medical Society, of Altoona, Pa., opposing the sale of beer as a medicine, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Geneva, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lubbock County, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KEYES presented a petition of the annual convention of District No. 4, of the Hillsborough County Sunday School Association, of Hudson, N. H., praying for the enactment of the so-called Towner-Sterling educational bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nashua, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of sundry citizens of Milford, N. H., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McLEAN presented a resolution of the New Haven Musical Protective Association, of New Haven, Conn., requesting that the War Department be authorized to make the Army band a separate unit of company, so that the bandmaster would be in full command, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting held May 23, 1921, of the Woman's Club of Greenwich, Greenwich, Conn., favoring the calling of an international conference looking toward the reduction of armaments, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition voted at the regular service Sunday morning, May 29, of the pastor and congregation of the Hill Church, of Woodstock, Conn., praying that Congress take immediate action to bring the influence and power of the Government to bear to prevent the impending tragedy in the Near East, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the New Haven County League of Agricultural Fairs, of New Haven, Conn., favoring the enactment of legislation imposing a tariff duty on poultry and poultry products, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of William H. Murray, chairman, Organization United National Association of Post Office Clerks, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of the so-called Steenerson bill providing for the restoration to the "special clerkship" grade of all clerks who were demoted by the Post Office Department's ruling of June 20, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of Freja Lodge, No. 17, International Order of Good Templars, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to strengthen the Volstead prohibition enforcement act, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions of Russell Council, No. 65, Knights of Columbus, of New Haven; Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Torrington; Division No. 3, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of New Haven; and Padriac Pearse Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Torrington; all in the State of Connecticut, favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution of the Women's Auxiliary, American Legion, of Sabetha, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented six petitions of sundry citizens of Lorraine, Haven, Wichita, Colwich, Mount Hope, Minneola, Wheaton, Frankfort, Concordia, and Bigelow; sundry members of Hackberry Farmers' Union No. 1392, of Hackberry; Lamoreaux Local No. 1961, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Stafford; and Local No. 1770, Farmers' Union, of Stanley, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Wheatland and Lakeview, Wyo., favoring early action by Congress upon the Capper antigrain gambling bill, which I move be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

FERTILIZER IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a resolution transmitted by the commissioner of agriculture of the State of Florida with reference to a bill which is now before Congress regulating the shipment of fertilizer in interstate and foreign commerce. I ask that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it has come to the attention of the commissioners of agriculture of the Southern States that a bill has been introduced in Congress "to regulate the sale and shipment of fertilizer in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent the adulteration and misbranding thereof, and for other purposes": Be it

Resolved, That we, the undersigned commissioners of agriculture, protest against the passage of this measure for the following reasons:

First. It may cause unnecessary duplication of work, as the States themselves have fertilizer laws that amply protect the public.

Second. The individual States have different fertilizer laws and regulations which amply protect the public, and against which the proposed Federal law would come into conflict and cause endless confusion.

Third. The commissioners believe that the existing State laws governing the manufacture and sale of fertilizer have been well worked out to meet the needs of the different States, and that these amply protect the public of these States and prevent adulteration and misbranding and fill all requirements.

W. A. McRAE,
Commissioner of Agriculture, State of Florida.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., June 9, 1921.

BELLEAU AND BELLEAU WOOD.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is the anniversary of one of the greatest events in history in its far-reaching effect. The German Army had made its great and wonderful drive, and it seemed that our Christian civilization was about to be destroyed. Victory was about to perch on the German banners. Amiens, France, was about to be captured and the English Army and the French Army were about to be divided by reason of this wonderful drive. If these two armies had been separated and Amiens taken, the result of the war would probably have been different. Gen. Foch was given command of the troops of the allied and associated powers, and he selected the American troops to enter the fight for the great wedge that saved Paris and stopped the German drive, which was the beginning of the end of this Great War. After this the Germans never won a victory or made another drive. It was on that day at Belleau Wood when 2,000 American soldiers, our heroes, fell in battle and are now buried there.

A number of patriotic women of the United States have formed themselves into an association for the purpose of rebuilding the little village of Belleau, which the American troops were compelled to destroy in order to reach their objective, and it is to be reconstructed as a monument to the 2,000 patriotic, heroic dead who sleep there.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum of this great event that really stopped the German drive and saved civilization, won the victory, and won the war.

I desire at the proper time to call to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the request that the president of this association be given the privilege, hardly ever accorded, of franking, in order that they may send letters to the patriotic people of the United States for the purpose of securing contributions and subscriptions to this splendid effort that is to be made. That is something unusual, but I think, inasmuch as they are asking for no appropriation, we ought to grant this privilege to the patriotic women. Therefore, in order that this may be thoroughly understood, I ask that the memorandum which I present may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorandum was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"In the American Military Cemetery near Belleau and Belleau Wood lie 2,000 American soldiers and marines. They represent the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Eighth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-second, Thirty-sixth, Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, Seventy-sixth, and Ninety-third Divisions, all of which fought gloriously in the cause of civilization in those fateful days of June and July, 1918.

"The actual deeds of the troops of the Second and Third Divisions during the fighting in June to check the last German rush toward Paris are beyond praise. But their moral significance and their moral influence on the war were so far-reaching and profound that they take rank with the important military events of history.

"On the 21st day of March, 1918, the Germans made their great drive against the British Fifth Army. The collapse of Russia had made it possible for the enemy to mass 65 additional divisions on the western front. The Allies must be crushed before the Americans should come. The great drive nearly split apart the French and British Armies at Amiens. On the 9th of April another terrible blow fell at Armentieres. At this time only 300,000 American troops were in France. But they were coming fast. By the end of May they had risen to 600,000, when the third German offensive came on May 27. This third blow was the great rush from the Aisne to the Marne. Gen. Pershing had offered the American Army to Marshal Foch. The time had come to use it. The enemy pressed on to Chateau-Thierry and seemed on the point of breaking through to Paris and victory. The Second Division was in reserve northwest of Paris. It was rushed to the vicinity of Meaux on May 31, and early in the morning of June 1 was deployed across Chateau-

Thierry road near Montreuil-aux-Lions in a gap in the French line, where it stopped the German advance on Paris. At the same time the partially trained Third Division was placed at French disposal to hold the crossings of the Marne, and its motorized machine-gun battalion succeeded in reaching Chateau-Thierry in time to assist in successfully defending that river crossing.'

"The enemy having been halted, the Second Division commenced a series of vigorous attacks on June 6, which resulted in the capture of Belleau Wood and Bouresche by the marines, and Vaux by the Third Infantry Brigade after very severe fighting. In these operations the Second Division met with most desperate resistance by Germany's best troops.

"Many hearts were filled with terror as the German avalanche thundered on through the Aisne and Marne to Chateau-Thierry and threatened Paris. The news of the performance of the Americans in this crisis ran like an electric shock of encouragement and hope throughout the allied armies and civil population. Corresponding dread and apprehension filled the German hosts. The Americans had come. The Americans could fight. The Americans could hold the best and bravest of the German armies, pin them where they stood, and overthrow them. German prisoners taken from raids hundreds of miles from the scene of the fighting knew the result. By the rapid grapevine of army rumor the news had traveled as if by telegraph. The tidal wave of American intervention had begun to gather. The enemy knew in his heart that it was the beginning of the end; that the final reserve of outraged civilization had been brought to bear; and that overwhelming disaster awaited him.

"On July 15 came the last great German offensive. The German masses met a disastrous repulse in the Champagne and south of the Marne, where the Thirty-eighth Infantry of the Third Division earned the title of 'the Rock of the Marne.' On July 18 Marshal Petain, under directions from Marshal Foch, assumed the offensive, victoriously attacking with the First and Second American Divisions and the First French Moroccan Division the flank of the enemy line southwest of Soissons, and repeatedly attacking with American divisions the enemy forces during their retreat from the Marne to the Vesle. In this advance the town of Belleau was captured by the Twenty-sixth Division.

"Let us not forget those fateful days of June and July. Therefore the Belleau Wood Memorial Association, with headquarters in Washington, D. C., has been formed with the approbation of the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and Gen. Pershing to honor and perpetuate the memory of these men and to erect near the spot where they made the great sacrifice a memorial to their memory.

"It was felt in these days of dire need and suffering that the most suitable memorial would be a useful one. Close by the cemetery of Belleau lies the little village bearing the same name. It is the work of this association to rebuild this little village of Belleau near where so many Americans died that France and civilization might live. The living and the dead of the American Expeditionary Forces made possible the rebuilding of France. The rebuilding of this little village will be a symbol of that great historic fact."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words, supplementing what has been so well said by the Senator from North Carolina.

This is the anniversary of the great fight at Belleau Wood, or one of the days of fighting there. It was one of the bloodiest fields of the whole war. The Second Division and the Seventh Infantry of the Third Division were engaged in the attack upon Belleau Wood, and the wood and the hill itself now bear the name of the American marines, whose losses there were very heavy. The Second Division and the Seventh Infantry were relieved at the northern end of the wood by the Twenty-sixth Division, a New England division, which began the counter offensive on July 18 from these positions.

There is hardly a State in the Union that is not represented in the little cemetery of the dead near the wood. Indeed, I think every State is represented there. From my own State there are 200 Massachusetts dead buried there. It was part of a very great battle, one of the greatest of the war. Indeed, there and at Chateau-Thierry was the turning point, when the offensive passed into the hands of the allied and associated powers, including, of course, the United States.

There is an effort being made by patriotic women to restore the little village of Belleau, which is in the immediate neighborhood of the wood. There were four villages there completely destroyed. I can only say that it is one of those objects with which everyone must feel the deepest sympathy. I am very glad the Senator from North Carolina has had printed this account of the work, and I hope that the women who are engaged in it may receive every possible encouragement. They are raising the funds by private subscription. It is one of the most memorable battles of the war, and it is one where the loss of American lives was particularly great. It ought to be commemorated by a memorial, and there is no better part for a memorial than the restoration of the little village which went to destruction under the fire of the contending armies.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 252) to amend an act approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States," reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 93) thereon.

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 745) to amend section 24 and section 256 of the Judicial Code, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 94) thereon.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 1978) granting to the State of Georgia the Point Peter Military Reservation, to be used by the State of Georgia as the site for a proposed public warehouse; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROPOSED MILITARY RESERVATION AT YORKTOWN, VA.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I introduce a bill providing for the creation of a military reservation or park at Yorktown, Va.

The bill (S. 1967) declaring the battle field of Yorktown a national military park upon the acquisition of the site at a cost not exceeding $100,000 was read twice by its title.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to make a brief explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I think the object to be attained, as favored by them, is a splendid and patriotic one. I visited the battle field of Belleau Wood last year and saw the absolute desolation of its ruined village near the beautiful cemetery which lies at the foot of the wood where so many American lives were sacrificed. I think that battle should be commemorated as a great event in the history of the world; but, Mr. President, I am proposing by the bill which I have introduced that Yorktown be preserved and made a military reservation. The committee on the preservation of historic spots of the Daughters of the American Revolution, headed by Mrs. Morris, of Minneapolis, have caused a survey to be made and have prepared this bill for introduction in order that we may preserve what there is left of this great historic battle field.

I wish to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that a small appropriation is asked in order that that battle field may be acquired. There is now situated upon this battle field a small village, I believe, consisting of only about 120 people.

The fortifications were built by Cornwallis, and were great fortifications in that day, but they are being plowed under, shoveled down, and destroyed, and soon this historic spot will be a complete ruin.

Let me remind the Senate that while we have six or seven great military reservations commemorating the battle fields of the Rebellion, such as Gettysburg, Antietam, Chattanooga, and others, we have only one, at Guilford Court House, N. C., commemorating the great war for our independence.

Many historic battles were fought during that great struggle, but on the battle field of Yorktown culminated the war for our liberties, and yet there is no reservation to mark and preserve that spot which has been sanctified by the blood of American patriots.

We talk about the "cradle of American liberty" and the "birthplace of the Nation," but the Nation was born at Yorktown. The conflict which there took place marked the close of the historic struggle which made possible this Union, which lifted its light into the Western skies.

It is well for us to preserve these historic spots, to renew our allegiance, and to draw inspiration from these battle fields in order that we may remember the principles upon which the Republic is founded. In this day when the world seems to be chasing strange gods and following strange doctrines which are so at variance with the principles for which our race struggled for generations, I think it is well for us to return and to draw inspiration from these battle fields, and there is no more historic spot in the United States than that at Yorktown. The ladies who comprise the membership of the Daughters of the American Revolution are entitled to great credit for their work in this behalf, and I hope the Committee on Appropriations will give the bill immediate attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. KELLOGG I have been informed that bills carrying appropriations must be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In the House a bill similar to that which I have introduced was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Committee on Military Affairs handles military appropriations.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota belongs to the Committee on Appropriations. It involves the purchase of land.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Minnesota that the bill which provided an appropriation to establish the reservation at Guilford Court House was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I presume the bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota would follow the same course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment providing that the Secretary of War be authorized, upon request of the Secretary of the Treasury, to transfer all buildings, equipment, and grounds at Fort Meade, S. Dak., to the Treasury Department for the purpose of furnishing hospital facilities for sick and disabled veterans of the World War, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 52, at the end of line 3, add the following proviso:

"Provided further, That the following proviso, relating to medical and hospital services in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, to wit:

"'Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the payment of commutation of quarters, subsistence, and laundry or quarters, heat and light, and longevity to any employee, other than the commissioned medical officers provided for by statute,' contained in the act approved March 4, 1921, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.'"

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROPOSED JUDICIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. STERLING submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint commission is hereby created which shall consist of six Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate and six Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to consider such legislation in relation to the courts of the United States, the procedure therein and the judges thereof, as would tend to improve the administration of justice, and to report to the Congress a bill to carry the recommendations of the joint commission into effect.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE POLICIES.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I present a resolution and ask that it be read, and, in view of the fact that it simply seeks information of a public character, I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered and acted upon at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the following information:

1. How many Government war risk insurance policies have been issued prior to May 1, 1921, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a bureau of war risk insurance in the Treasury Department"?

2. How many Government war risk insurance policies were effective and in force on November 11, 1918?

3. How many, if any, Government war risk insurance policies were issued between November 11, 1918, and May 1, 1921?

4. How many of the Government war risk insurance policies that were effective and in force November 11, 1918, lapsed between November 11, 1918, and May 1, 1921?

5. How many of the Government war risk insurance policies that lapsed after November 11, 1918, have been reinstated under the provisions of existing laws?

6. How many who held Government war risk insurance policies and whose policies have lapsed, have actually applied for reinstatement but have not been reinstated on the ground that the applicant was not in as good health as at the date of discharge from service or at the expiration of the grace period of his insurance?

7. In how many cases where, after reinstatement of insurance and the policy became due by reason of the death of the insured, has payment been refused for the reason that the purported reinstatement was invalid?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, briefly, the resolution seeks to secure information in regard to the extent to which Government war-risk insurance policies have lapsed. It also seeks to get information as to how many former service men have been refused reinstatement because of the poor physical condition which the applicant has developed since the date of discharge from service. I have been very much surprised to learn that in the case of many ex-service men whose original policies had lapsed but were subsequently reinstated, although premiums were paid for a period of time, payment of the principal sum named in the policy was refused at the time of death because of information which had come to the Government that the reinstatement was invalid by reason of the poor health of the applicant for reinsurance at the time of his reinstatement. I think it would be very beneficial and helpful in preparing the way for future possible legislation to have the whole history of the extent to which war-risk insurance policies have lapsed; and that is all the resolution seeks to accomplish.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that one of the subdivisions of the resolution calls for information as to the number of insurance policies which have been reinstated under existing laws. Knowing the conditions in connection with the War Risk Insurance Bureau as I do, I suggest to the Senator that perhaps there ought to be added there the words "or regulations." I think there have been more policies reinstated under regulations than have been reinstated under existing laws.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I presume "existing laws" includes regulations, "existing laws" being a broader term than regulations.

Mr. SMOOT. It ought to, I will say to the Senator; but I am fearful that is not the case.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have no objection to the words suggested by the Senator from Utah being added to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am attracted by a statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts to the effect that some of the applications were rejected because the applicant was in poor health at the time he sought the reinstatement of his insurance. Do I understand that that applies whether the applicant lost his health during the war and because of war conditions?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It does. For an applicant to have his insurance reinstated it is necessary to prove at the time the application is made for reinstatement that he is in as sound physical condition as at the date of discharge from the service. Many applications have been made for reinstatement and rejected because of this provision of law, which I believe should be changed, and I presented recently two bills to bring this about.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the following information:

1. How many Government war risk insurance policies have been issued prior to May 1, 1921, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a bureau of war risk insurance in the Treasury Department?

2. How many Government war risk insurance policies were effective and in force on November 11, 1918?

3. How many, if any, Government war risk insurance policies were issued between November 11, 1918, and May 1, 1921?

4. How many of the Government war risk insurance policies that were effective and in force November 11, 1918, lapsed between November 11, 1918, and May 1, 1921?

5. How many of the Government war risk insurance policies that lapsed after November 11, 1918, have been reinstated under the provisions of existing laws or regulations?

6. How many who held Government war risk insurance policies and whose policies have lapsed have actually applied for reinstatement, but have not been reinstated on the ground that the applicant was not in as good health as at the date of discharge from service or at the expiration of the grace period of his insurance?

7. In how many cases where, after reinstatement of insurance and the policy became due by reason of the death of the insured, has payment been refused for the reason that the purported reinstatement was invalid?

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNES of Tennessee were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the bill (S. 1154) for the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near the city of Dumas, Mo., and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 656) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of the Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1021) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] entertains objections to this bill, and two or three or four weeks ago sought certain information from me about it, which thus far I have been unable to get. I think, in justice to him, that the bill should go over. He does not seem to be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 724) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 725) for the relief of Orion Mathews was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 582) to repeal section 5 of the act approved June 22, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ESTATES.

The bill (S. 158) for the relief of certain estates was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 4, line 18, to strike out "Hooper" and insert "Hopper," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the personal or legal representatives of the estate of I. White, the sum of $282.93—all late of Pennsylvania; to the estate of John Scowcraft, late of Utah, the sum of $603.93; and to the estate of Susan E. Crozier, late of the District of Columbia, the sum of $3,111.50, or so much thereof as may be due each of the foregoing estates under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States (see Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S., United States v. Jones, and McCoach v. Pratt, reported in 236 U. S. Rep., decided in January, 1915).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF ARMS AND EQUIPMENT.

The bill (S. 1574) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange with foreign nations desiring the same samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to furnish to a foreign nation by loan, sale, or exchange, for exhibition or study, such articles of arms, matériel, equipment, or clothing as have been issued from time to time to the United States Army or which have been or may hereafter be produced for the United States Army: Provided, That this authority shall not be construed to require such loan, sale, or exchange of any article in the production of which there has been embodied any method or idea which public interest requires to be kept secret or confidential: Provided further, That this privilege shall not be extended to a nation which does not reciprocate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL LIVE-STOCK COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 659) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AWARD OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS, ETC.

The bill (S. 1360) authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal, provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the cases of officers then in the Army who were nominated to the Senate by the President for brevet commissions for service during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition for extraordinary heroism or gallantry in action or especially meritorious services, such as to justify the award of the distinguished service cross or the distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, such cases may be considered and acted on under the provisions of said act, notwithstanding that such recommendations may have been made more than three years before said cases shall have been considered as authorized by said act, but all consideration of, and action upon, any such case shall be based exclusively on official records of the War Department.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether this bill meets the approval of the committee unanimously?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not recollect any opposition to it. This same legislation passed the Senate as a rider on another bill upon another occasion in the last Congress. It now is presented as a separate bill. The committee thought it was a desirable and proper procedure.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no additional compensation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None at all. There is no money cost involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UMI

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1737) for the relief of Con Murphy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1806) to further amend the interstate commerce act, as amended, to provide for seasonal rates for the transportation of coal, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

The bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that I do not expect to have the Senate take up this bill now, but at some time during the session I shall ask the Senate to proceed with its consideration.

There are before the Judiciary Committee many bills asking for increases in the salaries of United States marshals and district attorneys, so we concluded that we would give a hearing and prepare an omnibus bill applying to every State, wherever the Attorney General, after looking into the business done by the courts, should recommend that that be done. He sent his experts down there and went over the business transacted by the district attorneys and marshals in every part of the United States, and we have tried to equalize the salaries upon the basis of the business done. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the bill involves very little increase, but the salaries are equalized. There is not much more appropriation called for.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that there is considerable increase. Let me inquire of the Senator whether the Department of Justice or the Government find any difficulty in filling the offices that are being vacated by Democrats?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think even if the salary were made no more than $2,000 we would find somebody who would take the office for $1,500. It is a question of whether we are paying these men what we ought to pay them. The Attorney General has recommended the passage of this bill, and has recommended each salary, and has taken up the matter and based the salary upon economic principles; that is, according to the work that each district attorney does in his district, and the work that each marshal does, and according to the work done in each State. It affects every State in the Union, and has been framed in order to get rid of these local bills. As the Senator knows, when he was on the Judiciary Committee we had bills from a great many of the States asking for increases of salary; so we concluded, instead of passing separate bills, that we would pass what is known as an omnibus bill, affecting the salary of every district attorney in the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Does this bill for the United States marshals cover the United States attorneys and the clerks of courts, who are all subject to similar legislation?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is only as to marshals and district attorneys. I will ask the Senate to take up the bill at some other time.

Mr. WARREN. Has the matter of the clerks' salaries been considered?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is a law which provides that the Attorney General shall fix the salaries of the clerks.

Mr. WARREN. I know that; and let me say that the Attorney General, after fixing their salaries, discovered errors in perhaps a dozen or, I think, exactly 13 instances, and undertook to remedy those errors, but the Comptroller of the Treasury stated that having once decided what they were to be, he could not change them without further legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the law ought to be amended in that respect, because we gave him permission and authority to fix the salaries of these clerks upon the basis of the business they did, and if he made an error it ought to be corrected.

Mr. WARREN. They made errors in calculating, as the law provided, what they received in the way of fees, and so forth; and while there were not great amounts at issue, yet the errors should be corrected. I hope the Senator or his committee may take up that matter, because as to the clerks there is really a worse state of affairs than in the case of the marshals.

Mr. OVERMAN. It ought to be corrected. I remember that in the Senator's State, especially, it ought to be corrected, where an error was made by the Attorney General himself. He ought to have some margin, some discretion, as the business increases.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows that the Attorney General has not only acknowledged his mistake but has asked that it be corrected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; he has asked for an increase himself.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest that there is another injustice or inequality in the present law. Under the present law deputy marshals may be allowed $4 a day expenses, as I recall, whereas deputy clerks are allowed only $3 a day. They ought to be on the same basis.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so. That is a matter with the Attorney General. He has authority to change that. He has authority to fix the salaries of the clerks; but, as the Senator from Wyoming said, having fixed the salaries, the Comptroller of the Treasury says he can not fix them over again. He can not increase or decrease the salaries, but has to let them remain just as he fixed them. In the case of Wyoming, where he evidently made an error and admits that he made an error, there ought to be some correction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not call this bill up for some time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not intend to call it up now.

Mr. KING. I think it would be very unfortunate to pass a bill now for an increase in the salaries of Government officials. In the light of the lack of employment throughout the country, falling prices, and industrial depression, I think the effect would be bad. I shall have to give notice to my friend that if he calls up the bill I will oppose it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will read the bill.

Mr. KING. I have done so.

Mr. OVERMAN. When he reads it he will find that the increases are very small, comparatively.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from North Carolina a question, I do not quite understand the theory on which the bill is framed. For instance, in my own State, with a population of nearly 6,000,000 and two districts, with the work increasing all the while, the salaries which are fixed are not as large as those in the Senator's own State.

Mr. SMOOT. Or in Oklahoma.

Mr. POMERENE. How does the Senator explain that?

Mr. OVERMAN. The salaries in my own State were not fixed by me; I had nothing to do with it. The Attorney General recommended the increases. I think if the Senator will examine my report, in which is set forth a statement of the business done in every district in the United States, he will find that the western district of North Carolina stands third in the list of districts in the United States, and that there is more business done by the court in that district than in any United States court except in New York and Illinois.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be true as to a certain kind of unmentionable business, but it does seem to me——

Mr. OVERMAN. Moonshiners have to be prosecuted by somebody.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly; and I do not think any of us are in a position to throw stones at the Senator's State.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think you will find that violations of the law are going on everywhere.

Mr. POMERENE. I suppose that is true. I do not agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that there ought not to be some increases of salaries. If there are not, we shall have serious difficulty in having these offices filled. I know, for instance, in my own State, while you can always find some one, perhaps, who will accept an appointment as district attorney or United States marshal, there is very serious difficulty in getting the right kind of men to fill the places of the deputies; and something must be done to take care of that situation, otherwise it is going to be a serious one.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think you will find that everywhere, Mr. President. I remember when I had to recommend a man for appointment as district attorney I could not get a man of the right kind to take the position because it did not pay enough; and you will find that to be the case everywhere. Of course, you can get men to take the positions, but whether they are proper men or not is another question. I want the Senator to take this bill, look at it, and read the report and see what business is done in his State in the different districts, so that he will see that the bill is so framed, upon the recommendation of the Attorney General, as to be based upon the business done in each district in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice, Mr. President, that for the district attorney in the eastern district of Oklahoma the bill carries a salary of $6,500, and for the marshal in that district $6,000. For the district attorneys in both districts in Ohio it carries $5,000 for the district attorneys and $4,500 for the marshals. In other words, the State of Oklahoma has two districts, and they certainly can not do more work than is done in Ohio.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is speaking from what appears in the report, but the fact is that Oklahoma is trying to get another judge. The one judge can not do the work that has to be done down there, and they are trying to get another district.

Mr. SMOOT. Most of the States are asking for another district judge.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, what measure is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no measure before the Senate.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the call of the calendar. The next bill on the calendar will be announced.

Mr. POMERENE subsequently said: Mr. President, if I may make a request of the Senator from North Carolina, I notice in looking over his report it gives the statistics as to the number of cases pending and disposed of for the years 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918. I hope that when this matter comes up again the Senator will have from the Department of Justice the statistics for 1919 and 1920. I think they will tell a very substantially different tale.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is a good suggestion. I will say to the Senator that the bill was prepared two years ago, and has never been changed. These statistics were given at that time.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not finding fault with them, but I know there has been a tremendous increase in the business in the Ohio courts in the last two years.

Mr. OVERMAN. There has been in every court in the United States, I suppose.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 257) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge for the district of Montana, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That in case of disagreement in relation thereto between the judges of said district court the senior circuit judge of the ninth circuit shall make all rules for the transaction of the business of said court and all necessary orders for the division of the work and the assignment of cases for trial.

SEC. 3. That the clerk of the district court for the district of Montana and the marshal and district attorney for said district shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said court.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Montana whether the business is so great and so important as to warrant the appointment of another judge?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not only that, but a very large economy will be effected by the appointment of another district judge. Some time ago, when a similar bill was passed by the Senate—it having been passed twice heretofore—I took occasion to disclose to the Senate that the expense of running the district court in the State of Montana is greater than the expense in any other district in the country and ranks next to the district in Alaska, because the distances to be traveled are so very great. So that it really would mean a very great economy if this bill should be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the Attorney General does not recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The former Attorney General recommended it repeatedly.

Mr. SMOOT. The former Attorney General recommended it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He did.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the present Attorney General does not recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is a matter of no very great consequence, either one way or another. The bill is a measure of economy. In connection with the measure, when it was up before, I introduced into the RECORD, and it is found here, a letter from the present district judge, appointed during the Taft administration, in which it was represented by him that it would effect a saving of $50,000 a year in the conduct of the business of the court. A similar bill has twice been passed by the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTIONS FOR PERSONAL INJURIES.

The bill (S. 258) concerning actions on account of death or personal injury within places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of the death of any person by the neglect or wrongful act of another within a national park or other place subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, such right of action shall exist as though the place were under the jurisdiction of the State within whose exterior boundaries such place may be; and in any action brought to recover on account of injuries sustained in any such place the rights of the parties shall be governed by the laws of the State wherein the exterior boundaries of which it may be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think there is a misprint in the bill. The word "wherein" should be "within" in line 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 11, strike out the word "wherein" and insert in lieu thereof the word "within."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

The bill (S. 1183) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended, be, and it is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 107. The State of Tennessee is divided into three districts, to be known as the eastern, middle, and western districts of Tennessee. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bledsoe, Bradley, Hamilton, James, McMinn, Meigs, Polk, Rhea, and Sequatchie, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Anderson, Blount, Campbell, Claiborne, Grainger, Jefferson, Knox, Loudon, Monroe, Morgan, Roane, Sevier, Scott, and Union, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Carter, Cocke, Greene, Hamblen, Hancock, Hawkins, Johnson, Sullivan, Unicoi, and Washington, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the southern division of said district shall be held at Chattanooga on the fourth Monday in April and the second Monday in November; for the northern division at Knoxville on the fourth Monday in May and the first Monday in December; and for the northeastern division at Greeneville on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September. The middle district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bedford, Cannon, Cheatham, Davidson, Dickson, Giles, Hickman, Humphreys, Houston, Lawrence, Lewis, Marshall, Maury, Montgomery, Robertson, Rutherford, Stewart, Sumner, Trousdale, Wayne, Williamson, and Wilson, which shall constitute the Nashville division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Franklin, Warren, Grundy, Marion, Coffee, Moore, and Lincoln, which shall constitute the Winchester division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clay, Cumberland, Dekalb, Fentress, Jackson, Macon, Overton, Pickett, Putnam, Smith, Van Buren, and White, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the Nashville division of said district shall be held at Nashville on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September; for the Winchester division at Winchester, on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in November; and for the northeastern division at Cookeville on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in November: Provided, That suitable accommodations for holding the courts at Winchester and Cookeville shall be provided by the local authorities without expense to the United States. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Dyer, Fayette, Haywood, Lauderdale, Shelby, and Tipton, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Carroll, Chester, Crockett, Decatur, Gibson, Hardeman, Hardin, Henderson, Henry, Lake, McNairy, Madison, Obion, Perry, and Weakley, including the waters of the Tennessee River to low-water mark on the eastern shore thereof wherever such river forms the boundary line between the western and middle districts of Tennessee from the north line of the State of Alabama, north to the point Henry County, Tenn., where the south boundary line of the State of Kentucky strikes the east bank of the river, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the western division of said district shall be held at Memphis on the fourth Mondays in May and November; and for the eastern division at Jackson on the fourth Mondays in April and October. The clerk of the court for the western district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside at Jackson. The marshal for the western district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside at Jackson. The marshal for the eastern district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside at Chattanooga. The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Knoxville, at Chattanooga, and at Greeneville, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation in regard to the measure.

Mr. NELSON. That bill simply rearranges the districts in Tennessee, and provides for an additional term of court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 205) relating to the fiscal system of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 834) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GASTONIA, N. C.

The bill (S. 924) for the acquisition of a site and erection of a public building at Gastonia, N. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or of the Senator from North Carolina, how it comes about that this bill has been reported, when we are generally given to understand that no consideration whatever would be given at this session to bills for public buildings?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no appropriation whatever called for by this bill.

Mr. WARREN. It will bring money into the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will bring money into the Treasury and take none out. It allows an exchange of buildings.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We are very badly in need of an addition to the Federal building at Helena, Mont. We are very much overcrowded.

Mr. OVERMAN. If this asked for an appropriation, I would have no idea at all of getting it through, but it provides for no appropriation. It simply provides for an exchange of buildings. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from North Carolina has discovered a way by which to bring money into the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. It gives us a better building without appropriating any money. This bill practically passed at the last session. The citizens propose to pay for the building themselves, $175,000. It provides for the exchange of an old building. The comptroller held that they must pay the $175,000 down. The bill allows them to pay the money as the building progresses. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read from the bill, as follows:

That upon the said new site, when acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, etc., for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices in said city, at a limit of cost, exclusive of the site, of not exceeding $175,000. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts in the limit of cost hereby fixed for said building.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is not a dollar appropriated out of the Treasury. The $175,000 is paid into the Treasury by the Citizens' National Bank.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That the Senator may understand me perfectly, I will state I am not contending that the United States Government ought not to have a very suitable public building at Gastonia, N. C., but I maintain that if an individual or a corporation came into any of our important towns throughout the country and declined to erect a building of its own, but rented buildings or offices or quarters here and there or anywhere that it could get them and did not contribute in some way to the upbuilding of that particular city, that individual or corporation would be justly subject to criticism and to incur the odium of the people within the community in which it did business.

The Government of the United States, I insist, ought at least to observe a similar regard for decency in the conduct of its business. I think it a wise public policy to construct public buildings, wherever those are required by ordinary conditions, within which the offices of the United States Government can be housed. I do not think it is a very commendable policy at all that we have been pursuing now for a period of eight years to decline to spend a dollar upon the ordinary public buildings. I was hoping that this evidenced some change from the policy heretofore pursued.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator. The fact about this matter is that the Government owns the site and the old building in which it is absolutely unable to conduct the business. The building is not large enough for the business necessary to be done there. It being impossible to get an appropriation for a new building, the citizens of Gastonia have donated a site and $175,000 in money of their own to erect a post-office building there. At the last session we passed a bill allowing them to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the present building and site worth?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea, but the Secretary of the Treasury sent the men down there to look at it and investigate it and appraise both sites and buildings. I wish I had the letter that accompanied the report on the bill which we passed at the last session of the Senate and which passed the House of Representatives. The only question involved here is that the comptroller has said that the $175,000 to be paid by the citizens must be paid in cash at once, whereas we want time to pay it in as the building progresses.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the department agreed to the exchange?

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course they have, and recommended it. They sent their own appraisers down there and appraised both buildings. The Government is making by it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the report to show that.

Mr. OVERMAN. We passed a bill at the last session authorizing it to be done, and this is only fixing the terms of payment of the money as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KING. Will the Government have to reimburse the citizens for this money?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it will not.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee, but I was not present when this bill was acted upon. It seems to me that two amendments are made here to the existing law. The law at present provides that the Government shall have the use of the old building until the new one is completed. That is stricken out of the bill here by a proposed amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not suggested an amendment like that.

Mr. LENROOT. Why was that done?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no intention of running the Government out of the building.

Mr. LENROOT. There is another change that is proposed. While the Senator says there is no appropriation out of the Treasury, yet it gives them time, and might give them 10 years, in which to pay the $175,000, and during that time we will pay out of the Treasury $175,000 in leasing the building.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the Senator knows there is no appropriation here for $175,000 or any other sum.

Mr. LENROOT. There is an authorization for the Secretary to make a contract and there will be nothing left for us to do but appropriate to meet that situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The understanding and agreement is as I have stated. The bill which passed at the last session, as the Senator will remember, so provided. He was a member of the committee, and I have no doubt remembers that it was heartily recommended by the department to take this $175,000 and erect a Government building on a better site than the old site.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but we have that law now, and here it is proposed to make the Treasury liable for this $175,000, with possibly a very long term for payment upon the part of the town.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bank wants time instead of paying the $175,000 down in cash, and that is all there is to it. They want to pay it as the building progresses, and the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended it.

Mr. LENROOT. Evidently the phraseology as it now is would certainly create a liability on the part of the Government, irrespective of whether the $175,000 is paid in or not. Furthermore, if the bill passes in this form, as the Government owns the building now, after the exchange it will be paying rent for the building it now owns.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, referring to Senate bill 924, while that bill was prepared by the Treasury Department, I feel that there is a great deal of merit in what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said, and I feel that the bill ought to go back to the committee, as I do not want the Government to be liable for a cent. I ask, therefore, that the bill be referred back to the committee, and they can amend it so as to carry out the ideas suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks that Senate bill 924 be rereferred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so referred.

ORDNANCE STOREKEEPER IN ARMY.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, a moment ago objection was made to the present consideration of Calendar No. 62, the bill (S. 834) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army. Objection was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the bill was passed over under a misapprehension on his part of what the bill really is. If the bill may be again reported, I shall be very glad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to read the bill and the accompanying report, so I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the senior Senator from Utah, and the bill will be passed over.

SALE OF POST-OFFICE SITE, BETHLEHEM, PA.

The bill (H. R. 89) for the public sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have some explanation of that measure.

Mr. WARREN. The chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is not present at this moment, but when the bill was considered in the committee I was present. As I remember it, there are two post offices in two small, I will not say villages, but localities, which have lately become one, and they desire only one post office. Therefore this one is to be sold and the proceeds go into the miscellaneous funds in the Treasury.

Mr. KING. This is not preliminary to asking a larger appropriation for a more expensive site and a more expensive building?

Mr. WARREN. If so, it will fail.

Mr. KING. On the assurance of the Senator I do not object.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell at public sale the post-office site and buildings thereon erected, situate on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa., after proper advertisement, and at such time and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, for a sum not less than $20,000, and to execute and deliver to the purchaser the usual quitclaim deed therefor, and to deposit the proceeds derived from such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED CROSS BUILDING IN CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have a little information about this.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator want to know what the building is?

Mr. SMOOT. I know what the building is, but is there a limit of time? In my opinion, we do want a limit of time on these matters. I have no objection if there be a limit of time named in the bill. I will ask that it may go over temporarily now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: I should like to return to Calendar No. 65, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C. I see that there is a provision in the resolution that it shall be removed within such time as may hereafter be provided by Congress. I would prefer a definite limit, but this, I think, will be satisfactory. If it becomes necessary to remove it we can pass the resolution very quickly through Congress.

Mr. WARREN. It is to be used in connection with the offices of the Red Cross.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Whereas by joint resolution of Congress approved the 22d day of May, 1917, authority was granted to the American National Red Cross to erect temporary structures upon square No. 172 in the city of Washington, D. C., for use in connection with its work in cooperation with the United States Government, provided said buildings erected under said authority should be removed and the site or sites thereof placed in good condition within such time as may hereafter be provided by Congress; and

Whereas the buildings erected pursuant to said resolution are still needed for use in connection with its work in cooperation with the United States Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That authority be and is hereby given to the central committee of the American National Red Cross to continue the use of such temporary buildings as are now erected upon square 172 in the city of Washington for the use of the American Red Cross in connection with its work in cooperation with the Government of the United States: Provided, That any building or buildings the use of which is extended under this authority shall be removed and the site or sites thereof placed in good condition within such time as may hereafter be provided by Congress: Provided further, That the United States shall be put to no expense of any kind by reason of the exercise of the authority hereby conferred.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JOHN B. H. WARING.

The bill (S. 667) for the relief of John B. H. Waring was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

MEMORIAL TO FIRST DIVISION DEAD, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces in the World War, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to add at the end of the joint resolution a second proviso, so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant the Memorial Association of the First Division, United States Army, permission to erect on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., south of the State, War, and Navy Building, and east of the Corcoran Art Gallery, a monument to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the monument and pedestal shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts: And provided further, That the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of such memorial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FARM LOAN ACT.

The bill (S. 1811) to amend the Federal farm loan act as amended was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. McLEAN. Do I understand the Senator from Utah objects to this?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I desire to offer an amendment to it. It will take a longer time to attempt to do that now than it will to let it go over and be considered later.

Mr. McLEAN. The bill is the twin sister of one we passed last week, and really should have been enacted at the same time. It does not seem to me the Federal Farm Loan Board can operate unless it is passed, if representations made to the Committee on Banking and Currency are correct, and I think they are.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator now agree to accept this amendment to be added at the end of the bill?—

The income from joint-stock land banks issued after June 30, 1922, shall be subject to all graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

Mr. McLEAN. I shall be very glad so far as I am personally concerned to have that amendment added to the bill; but the Senator knows very well that there will be serious opposition in the Senate until the amendment is fully understood.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will go over.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN PENNSYLVANIA AND DELAWARE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) ratifying the reestablishment of the boundary line between the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Congress hereby consents to the reestablishment of the boundary line between the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware, as heretofore agreed upon by said States, and as reestablished and confirmed, fixed, and determined according to the terms of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania entitled "An act providing for the acceptance, approval, and confirmation of the report of the commission appointed in pursuance of the act approved the 4th day of May, A. D. 1889, authorizing the examination, survey, and reestablishment of the circle of New Castle as the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Delaware," approved June 22, 1897, and an act of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware entitled "An act providing for the acceptance, approval, and confirmation of the report of the commission appointed in pursuance of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware, approved the 25th day of April, A. D. 1889, authorizing the examination, survey, and reestablishment of the circle of New Castle as the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Delaware," approved March 28, 1921.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The joint resolution will go over.

DANISH STEAMSHIP "FLYNDERBORG."

The bill (S. 997) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I dislike very much to object to the consideration of this measure, and I will reserve my right to object in order that the Senator from South Carolina may make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that this bill passed the Senate at the last session, and it has been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee at the present session. The bill merely proposes to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina for the claimants named in the bill to establish, if they can, a claim for the payment of damages which are alleged to be due them. The course proposed was recommended by the former Secretary of the Navy in a letter which the committee had before them. I read briefly from the end of the letter as follows:

The record clearly shows that the U. S. S. Prometheus was wholly responsible for the collision with the steamship Flynderborg and the damages sustained by that vessel, and it appears that the claim submitted is reasonable and just.

However, as H. R. 15575 is for the purpose of authorizing the claimant to have its claim passed upon by courts, this department makes no recommendation as to the amount to which the claimant is entitled.

In view of these circumstances, it is respectfully recommended that H. R. 15575 receive favorable consideration and action by Congress.

I can see no harm whatever in the bill.

Mr. KING. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina. As I understand this bill, it proposes to confer the right of bringing a suit against the United States Government upon some foreigner or some foreign Government, I do not know which.

Mr. DIAL. It proposes to confer that right upon a foreigner.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire of the Senator whether in the long history of our Government there are any precedents for such action; and, if there be any, how have claims for damages by nonresident foreigners been presented when they alleged that the Government of the United States or some of its officials had been guilty of a tort? How have such claimants presented their claims in the past and obtained compensation?

Mr. DIAL. Such claims may have been adjusted by arbitration or been settled with the department which had jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. DIAL. I do not know that foreigners have heretofore gone into the Court of Claims, but all that is proposed in this instance is to permit the case to be tried by a court of admiralty which ordinarily exercises jurisdiction in such matters. I can see no objection to letting anybody have a day in court. If the Government has done no wrong, of course the claimants will not recover; but if it has done a wrong, the damages ought to be paid.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I have been advised of certain Mexican claims arising out of the allegation that American troops have done damage either to the persons of Mexicans or to their property, and they, of course, hold the United States Government responsible. They are expecting when a joint commission shall be appointed, under treaty or otherwise, to adjust the disputes between the two Governments or the nationals of the two Governments, that they will have an opportunity to appear before that joint commission and present their claims against the Government of the United States. It seems to me if we pass this bill there would be no reason why we should not permit any Mexican to bring suit in the courts of Texas or Mexico or Arizona for damages alleged to have been sustained as the result of the wrongdoing of the Army of the United States or some of the soldiers of the Army. The bill may be wise; it may be just; but it seems to me that it establishes rather a dangerous precedent. It will be followed by many measures which will seek some sort of relief such as is sought by this bill.

Mr. DIAL. In the case to which the Senator from Utah refers I take it that a commission will be appointed before which such claims may be brought. In this case I do not know of any commission being contemplated which would have jurisdiction of the matter, and the people involved would have no remedy other than by legislation.

Mr. KING. I confess that I should be very reluctant to put the United States Government into the courts constantly at the request of foreigners.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator deny the owner of a foreign vessel the opportunity to get justice in case he had suffered injury?

Mr. KING. No; I would not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All this bill proposes to do is to give an opportunity to a foreign vessel owner to obtain justice.

Mr. KING. I was about to say that if the Government of the United States commits a tort against an alien there ought, perhaps, to be some method for the recovery by him of damages.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the only method.

Mr. KING. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can assure the Senator that is so.

Mr. KING. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator from New York, who seems to be familiar with this matter. During the course of our Government's history have there been claims presented by persons against the Government of the United States for tort, and, if there have been such claims presented, have those claimants gone into the courts for the purpose of presenting them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, that is a matter which is within the power of Congress. If we desire to make an out-and-out appropriation and settle the matter, we may do so, but possibly the committees of Congress and Congress itself deem it wiser to let the matter be passed on judicially by the courts in order to ascertain with a greater degree of exactitude just what the Government should pay the person who alleges the injury. So the Committee on the Judiciary have reported this bill requiring the claimant to appear in a United States court and sue the Government. It has been done time and time again, as I recollect; indeed, I know of no other judicial manner in which the matter may be settled.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think the common and ordinary procedure is to present such claims as that covered by the pending bill in the form of a bill to be referred to the Committee on Claims, and then the Committee on Claims proceeds to make inquiry. It has been suggested in this case, as indicated by the Senator from New York, that, instead of having a hearing before the Committee on Claims, the liability and the matter of the amount of the liability could better be determined by proceeding in court. It seems to me that such procedure would be much more likely to insure accuracy in the determination of the question than any hearing before the Committee on Claims. The only point that I make about it is that I believe the method is so eminently just that we might enact a general law instead of passing a special act.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the senior Senator from Montana?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that it is a matter of public knowledge that Congress has several times voted appropriations to the citizens of foreign Governments residing in the United States who have had relatives lynched by mobs in this country. As a matter of fact, there have been several such appropriations.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that. The ordinary course has been, as suggested to me by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]—and that was my recollection—for claims on account of a tort to be presented to the State Department. In the cases to which the Senator from Montana refers, the claims were presented by the Government of China, representing the Chinese, and by the Government of Italy, representing the Italians who were lynched in New Orleans a number of years ago; and the Government of the United States, after making an investigation, made an appropriation to pay the claims.

Mr. MYERS. Would the Senator rather trust Congress in a matter of this kind than to trust a court of the United States? If a bill is introduced here it must be investigated by some committee of Congress; and does the Senator think that Congress is more economical in providing for payment than would be a judicial body like the Court of Claims or some other United States court? If the Court of Claims or the district court in South Carolina adjudicates this case, I think the determination could be relied upon. In any event, it must be passed on by some forum, just as would be done by Congress if a bill were introduced here. It seems to me that the bill is so eminently fair that, if there is no precedent, we ought to establish one.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DIAL. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota, but before doing so I should like to state that the owners of the Danish vessel in question presented an itemized statement along with the papers in the case. That statement, with the other papers, was referred to the Secretary of the Navy, and the Judiciary Committee had all of those documents before it. Now, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to say that section 3 of the pending bill providing for an appropriation is proposed to be stricken out by an amendment reported by the committee.

There are two ways of paying such claims as that involved in the pending case: One is to allow the claimant to go into a court of admiralty, as in this case; and the other is to present the matter to the Committee on Claims. When it goes to the Committee on Claims, that committee considers the subject as an entirety; it can make a much larger allowance than can an admiralty court. A court of admiralty under the rules of admiralty can apportion the damages; for instance, if both vessels are at fault, the court will apportion the damages in proportion to the blame; while in the case of the bill before the Committee on Claims the whole claim is allowed as an entirety. So, the Government is much better off by going into a court of admiralty than it would be if the case were acted upon by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he construes this bill to direct the court to apply admiralty procedure and admiralty rules in determining the facts of the matter rather than the common-law rules with respect to such matters?

Mr. NELSON. This case will be tried according to the rules of admiralty, as in the case of collision between vessels owned by private parties. In the case of such a collision between vessels in private ownership, they go into a court of admiralty, where the case is tried according to the rules of admiralty, and damages are apportioned. It is entirely different from the common-law procedure. If we allow the claimant to go into the court in this instance, the case will be tried in the same manner as cases of collision between vessels owned by private parties.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The bill so expressly provides. It says:

> and jurisdiction in admiralty is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear, consider, and determine such suit upon the principles of liability and in accordance with the practice.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to ask the Senator from Minnesota another question?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Minnesota suggests that there are two methods by which action may be taken. May I inquire of the Senator whether he finds precedent for such action as is contemplated by this bill?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; in the last Congress we passed one or two bills—I do not recall just how many—reported by the Committee on Claims, allowing damages in case of collision; and I have known years ago of other cases of that kind.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not understand my question. Does the Senator find any precedent for referring such a case to a court and permitting the court to assess damages against the Government of the United States as between the Government and a foreign citizen?

Mr. NELSON. We have; we have taken such action heretofore, and I regard it as much safer and better for the United States to have such cases go to a court of admiralty than to have them submitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KING. If that is the proper method or the safer method, may I inquire of the Senator why there has not been a general statute passed to that effect?

Mr. NELSON. I can not account for that. My own opinion is that there ought to be a general statute on this subject, but it is difficult to get everybody to agree. We have a general statute in reference to cases growing out of contracts. In such cases the claimants can go into the Court of Claims; but in cases sounding in tort we have excluded the claimant from the Court of Claims.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I understand, the collision in question occurred in the waters of South Carolina within the jurisdiction of the court of the eastern district of that State?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And it is proposed to give jurisdiction to the court where the damage actually arose, and where all the witnesses and all the testimony and everything else are available?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; the Senator is correct. The collision occurred in the waters of South Carolina, and my recollection is—and the Senator from South Carolina will correct me if I am in error—that it occurred in the harbor of Charleston.

Mr. DIAL. That is correct.

Mr. NELSON. And the collision was between a Government vessel and a Danish ship.

Mr. DIAL. The Senator is correct. The bill merely gives jurisdiction to the court for the eastern district of South Carolina to hear and adjudicate the case.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. DIAL. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, two or three years ago I objected to a number of similar bills, but they finally went through Congress. I did so because, if it is right to pass particular bills upon this subject, we ought to have a general statute covering it. It ought not to depend upon whether some friendly Senator can be found to introduce a bill and work it through a committee, while an equally meritorious case may not be able to get a hearing at all.

I am inclined to think that the only way that we can procure a general statute is to object to bills such as that now pending. Perhaps action along that line would secure the enactment of a general statute. I am not, however, going to object to the pending bill; but I want to give notice now that I am going to object to all other bills of similar character, in the hope that by such action we may bring about the enactment of a general statute upon the subject, because either such bills as the one now pending ought not to pass, or there should be a general statute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has kindly placed in my hands the fourth volume of Moore's International Law Digest; and the authorities there collated seem to bear out the view which I imperfectly expressed a few moments ago, that in cases of this character the claim is presented to the State Department.

The first section says:

> A citizen of one nation wronged by the conduct of another nation must seek redress through his own Government. His Government must assume the responsibility for presenting his claim, or it need not be considered. The claim of an alien, when presented to the State Department, must come through the diplomatic representative of the country to which he belongs.

And here is a long list of incidents showing that that is the course which has been adopted in the past; and I discover, too, that where Americans have been injured by other Governments they have adopted the same course which it is suggested here by Mr. Moore has been pursued when claims have been presented to the Government of the United States for torts, and, indeed, for contracts. Unquestionably the course has been for claims for damages growing out of tort or growing out of contract to be presented through diplomatic channels to the Government of the United States. American citizens are compelled to pursue that course. If they have sustained damages by reason of the wrongs of nationals or of Governments, their claims are presented through diplomatic channels. I grant that too often they do not obtain justice, and it may call for an adjustment of the method of obtaining damages for these wrongs.

I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, Mr. President, but I think it is a very unsafe practice. I think it is a precedent that may challenge the attention of Congress, and the wisdom of it I think may be seriously questioned.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all of section 3, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Dampskibsselskabet Dannebrog, of Copenhagen, Kingdom of Denmark, the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg, are hereby authorized to bring suit in personam against the United States, within one year after this act becomes law, to recover damages for any injury to such steamship Flynderborg which may have been caused by the U. S. S. Prometheus, of the United States Navy, in a collision which took place between the U. S. S. Prometheus and the steamship Flynderborg on December 4, 1919, in Charleston Harbor, S. C., eastern district of South Carolina, and jurisdiction in admiralty is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear, consider, and determine such suit upon the principles of liability and in accordance with the practice obtaining in like suits in admiralty between private parties and to enter a decree or judgment for or against the United States or such Dampskibsselskabet Dannebrog, including costs.

SEC. 2. That the suit herein authorized shall be brought and prosecuted in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, as amended, in so far as such provisions are applicable thereto, unless otherwise provided herein. The right of appeal and review shall be afforded as now provided by law in like suits in admiralty between private parties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISABLED EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate resolution 59, providing for the appointment of a select committee to investigate all bureaus and agencies of the Government dealing with the welfare of the veterans of the World War. As the hour of 2 o'clock is approaching, it seems to me that if any action is going to be taken, it ought to be taken to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I call attention to the fact that this subject matter has been pending before the Senate since April 27.

Mr. SMOOT. We may be able to reach it before 2 o'clock.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF SALMON.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) requesting the President to negotiate a treaty or treaties for the protection of salmon in certain parts of the Pacific Ocean was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have just had an opportunity to examine this joint resolution. Unless the Senator from Oregon will consent to strike out the words "both within and," in line 11, I shall have to object to its consideration. There is a treaty here now affecting the waters of the State of Washington that has been shown to be so unjust that the Committee on Foreign Relations saw fit to ask the State Department to withdraw it, and yet this joint resolution calls for the negotiation of just such treaties.

Mr. McNARY. In answer to the statement of the Senator from Washington, I will say that I should regret to have any objection made to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, because it vitally affects a very large and profitable industry on the Pacific coast.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall not object if the Senator will strike out the words "both within and." If he will not, I shall object.

Mr. McNARY. That is, within the 3-mile limit?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Beyond that the Senator has no objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection beyond that.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the idea and purpose of a treaty negotiated between the Dominion of Canada, the United States, and Great Britain is for the protection of the salmon beyond the 3-mile limit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But it says "both within and beyond." I understood that the object was to protect the salmon outside of the territorial limits, and I was surprised to find those words here.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to that amendment being made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the words "both within and," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to negotiate on behalf of the United States, as promptly as is practicable, such treaty or treaties as may be necessary for or appropriate to the purpose of protection from unnecessary destruction, through wasteful practices, devices, and methods of capture, of salmon in the waters of the Pacific Ocean off the coasts of the United States, including the Territory of Alaska, and of the Dominion of Canada, beyond the limits of the territorial waters of the United States, including the Territory of Alaska, and of the Dominion of Canada, to the extent requird for protecting adequately the interests of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to this joint resolution. I invite the attention of the Senators, however, to the fact that a great deal of timidity has been sometimes expressed by the Senate as to the possibility of the legislative department trenching upon the rights of the Executive. It was suggested by some, when the Borah resolution was before the Senate, that it was a question for the President to determine whether he would take up with foreign nations the question of disarmament or the limitation of armament, and that the Senate and Congress had no right to express their views upon any of those questions. This joint resolution asks the President even to negotiate a treaty. The Senator is clearly within his rights in introducing the joint resolution, and the Senate is clearly within its rights in passing it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I observe in the report of the bill by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and he has also called my attention to it, that it is reported as a Senate joint resolution. It ought to be a Senate resolution; and I ask for a modification of it so that it will be a Senate resolution instead of a Senate joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification? The Chair hears none, and it will be so modified.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out "Senate joint resolution 4" and insert "Senate resolution 85."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would it not be necessary to change the resolving clause also? The resolving clause reads:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

Mr. McNARY. Yes, Mr. President; it should read simply "Resolved." I ask that that change be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would the Senator object to making it a concurrent resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Yes. It is entirely unnecessary, and we will get prompter action by initiating the matter through the expression of the view of the Senate. It is not necessary to go to the House.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "Resolved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXPOSITION AT PORTLAND, OREG.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 5) authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to take part in an exposition at Portland, Oreg., in 1925, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will withhold his objection. It is a matter which I think requires and has sufficient merit to receive prompt attention by the Congress. The Foreign Relations Committee made a unanimous favorable report upon the joint resolution, and the people of the State of Oregon are anxious to have a status fixed for the fair. Preparations have been made, and all we are requesting Congress to do is to ask the President to invite foreign nations to participate.

Mr. SMOOT. All of these joint resolutions that we have passed lately have had incorporated in them a provision that there shall be no obligation to the Government in issuing the invitations. I think, under this joint resolution as it is worded, if there should be an expenditure of money by those in foreign countries and a request should be made on their part to have the Government of the United States pay it, we would be in rather an embarrassing position. These joint resolutions in the past have always contained that proviso.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is no desire upon the part of the good people of the Northwest to call upon the Government to assume any liability whatsoever, and I shall be very happy to accept the amendment the Senator has indicated.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution if the usual amendment is incorporated in it.

Mr. McNARY. I was not conscious of any provision of that character, though its purpose suits me very well.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the purpose of the amendment. I will get the wording, if the Senator has no objection, and have it incorporated in the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. I shall be glad to have that done if the Senator will withhold his objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Or, if the Senator desires it to go over temporarily, or until I can get the language to which I refer, I will get it quickly.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to have it acted upon to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Chair will let it be acted on with the understanding that I will furnish the amendment later, I have no objection.

Mr. McNARY. That will be very satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be agreed to. The joint resolution is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator interested in this joint resolution will lose no time, and may avoid a catastrophe, if he will postpone action on the measure temporarily until we know what the amendment is to be.

Mr. SMOOT. I will write it out.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not like to vote for an amendment that is still inchoate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah stated precisely the principle which is involved in his amendment, and I am willing to accept it; but if there is objection I ask that the matter may go over temporarily, and during the course of the day I shall ask unanimous consent to take up the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 73, Senate joint resolution 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 5) authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to take part in an exposition at Portland, Oreg., in 1925.

Mr. McNARY. I offer an amendment, in line 9, to follow the word "energy," which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "energy" and before the period, insert:

Provided, That the United States Government shall be put to no expense by reason of the extending of the invitation, so as to make the joint resolution read:

"Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite foreign countries to participate in an exposition to be held in the city of Portland, State of Oregon, in the year 1925, to celebrate the completion of transcontinental and Pacific highways, the centennial of the invention of the electromagnet, and to exemplify the development of hydroelectric energy: Provided, That the United States Government shall be put to no expense by reason of the extending of the invitation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRIAL OF OFFENSES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (S. 657) to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to authorize the issue of a warrant for the arrest and removal of persons under indictment for offenses against the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 17, after the word "law," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That if the offense charged in said indictment is bailable the judge of said court shall fix the amount of bail and cause the same to be indorsed on the warrant so issued, and upon request of the person arrested under said warrant, he shall be taken before a United States commissioner or district judge in the district where arrested for the purpose of being admitted to bail for his appearance for trial in the court in which such indictment is pending: Provided further, That if the person charged with such offense fails to appear according to the terms of the bond or undertaking given for such appearance, and such bail is thereby forfeited, he shall not again be admitted to bail unless by the judge of the court in which such indictment is pending.

On page 3, line 16, after the word "witnesses," to insert the following words:

Together with his necessary maintenance from the time of his arrest until his discharge and immediate return by the most direct route to the place outside said district from which he was removed, said maintenance to be at the rate of not exceeding $5 per day.

On page 3, line 20, after the word "allowance," to insert the words "for mileage and maintenance," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"That whenever it shall be made to appear in any court of the United States that any person or persons under indictment therein can not be found within the district where the offense is to be tried, the judge of said court shall examine, upon motion of the United States attorney, a transcript of the proceedings, testimony, and evidence before the grand jury upon the finding of such indictment, and if such proceedings shall appear to be regular and such testimony and evidence sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the accused he shall enter an order directing a warrant to issue for the arrest of the person so charged wherever found and for his removal forthwith to the district where the trial is to be had. Every warrant so issued shall be accompanied by a copy of the order directing the same, duly certified by the clerk of the court, may run into any other district, may be addressed to any marshal or deputy marshal of the United States, and may be executed in any place within the limits of the United States or subject to the jurisdiction thereof by the arrest of the person named and his removal forthwith to the district wherein the indictment is pending, there to be committed, let to bail, or otherwise dealt with according to law: Provided, That if the offense charged in said indictment is bailable the judge of said court shall fix the amount of bail and cause the same to be indorsed on the warrant so issued, and upon request of the person arrested under said warrant, he shall be taken before a United States commissioner or district judge in the district where arrested for the purpose of being admitted to bail for his appearance for trial in the court in which such indictment is pending: Provided further, That if the person charged with such offense fails to appear according to the terms of the bond or undertaking given for such appearance, and such bail is thereby forfeited, he shall not again be admitted to bail unless by the judge of the court in which such indictment is pending.

"That if any person so arrested and removed shall be acquitted upon trial of the indictment under which he is arrested, or if the indictment shall be quashed or dismissed without trial, and no other complaint or indictment be lodged or found against him during the term of court at which he was so discharged, he shall, upon the entry of order discharging him from custody, if he then desires to return to the place in which he was arrested, be allowed and paid mileage from the place of arraignment or trial to the place of arrest, the same to be computed and paid by the marshal of the district to which he was removed upon the same basis as mileage of witnesses, together with his necessary maintenance from the time of his arrest until his discharge and immediate return by the most direct route to the place outside said district from which he was removed, said maintenance to be at the rate of not exceeding $5 per day, such allowance for mileage and maintenance to be paid by the marshal out of the funds in his hands for miscellaneous expenses, United States courts.

"That the arrest and removal of offenders not under indictment, but proceeded against by complaint or information, shall continue to be accomplished in the manner first hereinbefore provided.

"That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF CERTAIN SEDITIOUS ACTS.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I interposed an objection to the consideration of Senate bill 1807 and Senate bill 425 because they could not properly be considered under the five-minute rule, and I for like reason object to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN TRADING CO.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit a brief explanation of this matter, may I say that this same joint resolution passed the Senate at the last session of the Congress and was reported favorably by the House committee after most extensive hearings in both bodies.

Here is the situation: In the early part of May, 1920, the Department of Justice, under the direction of Attorney General Palmer, embarked upon a campaign to bring down the high cost of living. Among other things which they tried to affect by that campaign was the price of sugar, which at that time was in the neighborhood of 25 to 30 cents a pound.

One of the officials of the Department of Justice, who in the early part of May had direct charge of this campaign, requested an American commercial concern to purchase some sugar in the Argentine and to bring it to the United States and help break the price. In making the request of that concern, which the Government made, certain rules and regulations were laid down at the same time by our Government for the distribution of the sugar in the United States and the price at which it must be sold.

The concern, namely, the American Trading Co., agreed, upon the request of the Government, to purchase the sugar in the Argentine, bring it to the United States, and sell it here only to persons designated by the Department of Justice, and to sell the sugar thus imported to these persons designated by the Department of Justice at a net profit of but 1 cent a pound, and at the price of about 20 cents a pound, the ruling price in the open market of the United States at that time being in the neighborhood of 26 to 30 cents a pound.

The company which the Department of Justice asked to perform this service at a rate of profit which certainly was not attractive, and which would not attract anybody in an ordinary commercial transaction, agreed to do it. They purchased the sugar in the Argentine upon the assumption that the United States Government had secured the permission of the Argentine Government to export the sugar from the Argentine. The Government officials here at Washington had told these people that they had such permission, and, indeed, a message to that effect had come through the American embassy at Buenos Aires. When they had purchased the sugar, however, about the middle of May, it turned out that the Department of State, which carried on the negotiations with the Argentine Government, through our own ambassador in Buenos Aires, was in error and that the Argentine Government had not given an export license.

Two months were consumed by our Department of State in arranging with the Argentine Government to get the export license. In all of the cables and dispatches this company is referred to by our Government as the agent of the United States Government, acting on its behalf and under its control.

The price of sugar in the United States went down very, very severely during that two months' period when these people could not get the sugar out of the Argentine. When it started to go down in the United States, and they found themselves facing a loss, they asked the Department of Justice whether they could not resell the sugar in the Argentine and get out of the transaction. The Department of Justice informed them that the representatives of the State Department insisted that they must keep that sugar and bring it to the United States. They were forbidden to resell the sugar in the Argentine, and were compelled to bring it to the United States and face a loss, when they got here, of over a million dollars. From start to finish they were helpless in the entire matter. From start to finish they represented the Government of the United States, and the dispatches described them as its representatives.

Mr. WARREN. How much would the Government be obligated for by the passage of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a matter which could be calculated.

Mr. WARREN. Approximately?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will tell the Senator as closely as I can. They brought 13,000 tons of sugar here. They managed to dispose of something like 5,000 tons of it, as I recollect.

Mr. WARREN. Nearly 14,000 was wl t they brought, was it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Thirteen thousand nine hundred; and the estimates made by the counsel of the Sugar Equalization Board, who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and earnestly advocated the passage of this joint resolution, as did the Attorney General himself, were to the effect that the Sugar Equalization Board should take over and dispose of the sugar remaining, at a cost to the Government of approximately one million to one million two hundred thousand dollars.

It so happened that the Sugar Equalization Board made money by its general transactions. I think they have turned into the Treasury of the United States something like $30,000,000, and they have about ten million more to turn in. This loss would be paid out of the profits of the Sugar Equalization Board.

The American Trading Co., and the B. H. Howells Sons & Co., who acted with the American Trading Co., and again in entire agreement with the Department of Justice, are entirely helpless in this matter, and the action of the Government of the United States itself, and no other agency involved, has inflicted this immense loss upon a commercial concern.

Attorney General Palmer appeared before the committee, as did Mr. Glasgow, the counsel of the Sugar Equalization Board, and Mr. Zabriski, the president of the Sugar Equalization Board, all of whom were completely familiar with this transaction, and all joined in saying that the only decent, fair thing to do is for the Government, through the Sugar Equalization Board, to take over this transaction and save this concern.

The committee has twice reported it, upon each instance only one Senator objecting to the report, not on the ground that these people had not been hardly treated, but on the ground that the Department of Justice, in the first instance, should never have undertaken such a contract.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator state whether the transaction really did have any effect toward bringing about a lowering of the price of sugar?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The unanimous testimony in that regard is that the importation of this sugar, together with the announcement of the Department of Justice that this was merely a forerunner of vast importations from the Argentine, did more, perhaps, than anythnig else to smash the price of sugar in the United States. It was advertised far and wide all over the country. The price of sugar was smashed. The American people got the benefit of it, and these commercial people stand to lose $1,200,000 because, forsooth, they were an agent of the Government of the United States, and were not their own masters.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any correspondence from the State Department showing that they were actual agents of the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely, and it is in the hearings. I shall read one or two of the dispatches if the Senator cares to hear them.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean from the State Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; from the State Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In order that I may answer the question of the Senator from Utah, I will postpone making a statement about the Army bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not wish to delay action on the appropriation bill, but I will ask the Senator from New York if he will not let the joint resolution go over that has been under discussion? I have an amendment to offer to it. I believe that the legislation should be general and not specific, because there are other instances of injustice to concerns to which the Government has been under obligation and which have imported sugar. One was a firm in my own State——

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I interrupt the Senator? If he intends to offer an amendment to the joint resolution, I shall not press it for consideration to-day. I may say to the Senator that the offering of that amendment will cause extended debate, because I think it was once considered and rejected by the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think we ought to go on with the joint resolution now. We ought to take up the calendar on next calendar day where we leave off to-day. There are a number of very important measures on the calendar that I should like to reach, and a number have gone over.

POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD BRIDGE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the motion which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1847) to amend an act approved February 12, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co. in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," and that the said bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill relates to the highway bridge and the use of it by certain connecting companies, and in that the District of Columbia has a certain interest. So the bill should have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia in the first instance. The Interstate Commerce Committee fully realize that and ask that it be so referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HARRISON AT MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, on last Friday the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] delivered a very able address in Montgomery, Ala., at the dedication of the first White House of the Confederacy. It is a historic address, which should be preserved, as the history of our country should be preserved, for the common heritage of the children of the soldiers on both sides of the War between the States. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that the copy of the address which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR HARRISON AT WHITE HOUSE DEDICATION EXERCISES FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Senator HARRISON said:

"The South is grateful to Alabama for this occasion. If the spirit of the men who now sleep on the hallowed battle grounds where they made the supreme sacrifice could witness this event, they would know they 'did not die in vain.'

"To you noble women whose patriotic souls conceived and whose loving hearts nurtured and whose tender hands wrought this splendid work, a grateful people pours forth its benedictions of sincere appreciation. And for your chief executive, the members of the first White House of the Confederacy commission, the Legislature of Alabama, and every citizen in your State who aided, encouraged, and cooperated in making possible this occasion, southerners everywhere entertain to-day deepest feelings of appreciation.

"Lack of sentiment, forgetfulness of traditions, unappreciativeness of heroic deeds, are characteristics of only decaying people. A nation whose soul is unmoved by its history and unstirred by its achievements is doomed to failure. The South is a great section, rich in natural resources, commanding in wonderful advantages. It bows to no section in the rapid progress of its development; it yields to none in the opportunities presented. Numberless acres of untilled land, millions of feet of virgin forests, limitless energy in unharnessed waters, and countless miles of unearthed minerals are waiting to be touched by the welcome exploiter. No feeling of sectional narrowness stalks this land; no spirit of ostracism grips our people.

"But necessary as is added capital and more and new and enlarged industries, I would rather see its commercial supremacy deferred than for it to be attained by surrendering those priceless traditions and imperishable principles upon which our glorious history is founded. I never want to see the glories of the South forgotten in the maelstrom of industrial strife. I never want to see the principles for which our fathers sacrificed supplanted by a yielding to the commercial exigencies of the hour. I never want to see the shrine that was builded by our splendid men and noble women torn down and in its stead one erected to the god of Mammon. The sentiment of the South is too dear, its heritages too priceless, its sacrifices too great, its principles too precious and enduring to be bartered, however large and alluring the price. The conviction of the men for the right who molded the destinies of the South is dyed in blood too pure to ever fade, the cause for which they suffered was too just and too righteous for its children ever to suggest excuse or offer apology.

"As one who reveres the memories of our fathers, as one who shall ever strive to keep fresh the events that made its history great, as one who loves every sentiment connected with it in every pore and fiber of his being, I am glad to come from the bosom of your twin sister State, from the shadow of historic Beauvoir, and share with you the warmth and enthusiasm with which our hearts are filled to-day in the dedication of this historic home, dear to every southerner, and around which cherished memories will ever cling.

"It is peculiarly fitting that this event should take place on this day. Beautiful, historic old Montgomery! Dear, grand old Alabama! We salute you to-day, and I speak as a Mississippian, jealous of your wonderful resources, yet proud of your imperishable history. Oh, the statesmen and scientists and jurists and scholars and warriors and glorious women that you have given to the Nation!

"Your skies have been blackened by the smoke of invading foes. Your streams have run red with the blood of your patriotic sons. It was along the banks of the Tallapoosa, at memorable Horse Shoe Bend, than your brave backwoodsmen, fighting side by side with the intrepid Tennesseans and led by 'Old Hickory,' subdued the red man in his last stand, wrenched the scepter from his hands and opened up this fair land to civilization.

"In the Mexican War few States furnished to the Nation more soldiers and none braver than did Alabama. In '98 you were among the first to furnish your quota to avenge the sinking the Maine and succor poor, outraged, persecuted Cuba. From Santiago to Manila Alabamians played nobly their part, and the gallantry displayed by Joe Wheeler in leading his men to victory at San Juan Hill, and Richmond Pearson Hobson in the sinking of the Merrimac will remain an imperishable legacy to your State.

"And in the late World War no braver lads ever marched to the tune of martial airs or fought beneath the folds of any flag than those from Alabama. They maintained the splendid traditions of their fathers and shed undying glory not alone upon Alabama, but the Nation as well. Great as is the number of heroes of that mighty conflict enshrined on the pages of history, the name and fame of Gen. Robert L. Bullard and the Alabamians of the Rainbow Division will ring down the corridors of time.

"Inspiring as are those deeds, wonderful and soul stirring as are those events—lasting in the memory of future generations as they will be—they fail to stir the emotions, to fan the flames of enthusiasm, or grip the impulses of the heart as those circumstances and events incident to the War between the States. Just think of them! What a feeling is kindled! What emotions are aroused!

"It was here, in the 'cradle of the Confederacy,' where the new republic was nurtured. Here it was that the representatives of a proud and indomitable people met in convention and framed and adopted its constitution. Never before was a work of such import accomplished in such a masterly way in such a brief time as was the framing and adoption of that instrument. And to-day, in reading the principles then and there enunciated, the unselfish instinct of the section, the economic spirit of the day, the masterly intellect of the delegates is revealed. What a needed reform would be wrought if the Congress and the States would to-day amend the Federal Constitution and follow the principles enunciated in the Confederate constitution, extending the term of the President and Vice President to six years and making them ineligible for reelection. What an economy it would effect and what a saving to the taxpayers of the country if that part of the Confederate constitution could be adopted by the Federal Government requiring a two-thirds vote of the Congress to make Federal appropriations; and oh, that some of our present-day Democrats who, in their selfish desire to enrich a few at the expense of the many, protect one section to the detriment of another, who have joined the ranks of those who believe in a protective tariff, would read and memorize that part of the Confederate constitution that condemned in the strongest possible language a protective tariff and unanimously laid down the rule that the passage of any such law was forever prohibited by the Confederate Congress.

"It was here that William L. Yancey, that mighty genius, a star of the first magnitude, the unrivaled orator of the Confederacy, from whose lips words fell like rushing water down the mountain side, introduced the first and only President of the Confederacy on the occasion of his first and only inauguration. What memories are revived on this occasion! What patriotic specters are revealed! In yon historic resting place sleeps this matchless orator, the most eloquent man of his day, Alabama's 'priceless jewel!'

"Here it was that the great intellects of the South met and laid plans to meet the momentous problems of that stormy period.

"I am sure I will be pardoned if I assert that subsequent events demonstrated that a fatal blunder was made by those in whose grasp the future of the Confederate government was held when the capitol was moved from this city to Richmond. Left here, it would have compelled the enemy to operate from a distant base of supplies, upon lines of communication 800 miles long, while it would have liberated to be used as occasion demanded a magnificent army which was constantly required for the defense of Richmond. Located as Richmond was, within little more than a hundred miles of the enemy's base, upon a river which permitted the approach of formidable war crafts and within a short distance of a strong fortress on a fine harbor, it was a constant invitation for aggressions which required the energy and most of the resources of the South to combat.

"But this is not the time or place to criticize. There is nothing we need regret. No government ever accomplished more against such overwhelming odds with fewer mistakes than did the Confederacy. Entering the war with little money, without an army or navy, no set of men ever displayed greater qualities of leadership than they. For four long years these men and you old grizzled veterans and your comrades in arms held at bay a section many times larger than yours, an area three times as great and a foe richer in every resource. You were fighting an enemy with forces magnificently equipped and thoroughly trained. You were fighting a government well established and the machinery of which was minutely organized. No government could have sustained itself so long without its people having an abiding conviction of the righteousness of their cause. You believed in it. You knew you were right. You knew that the principles for which the South had taken up arms were guaranteed in the Federal Constitution—had been advocated by the statesmen of other sections, and which for 40 years following the adoption of the Federal Constitution had never been denied. You knew that the South believed and held with unrelaxing grasp to the fundamental principle that the Union was composed of separate and independent sovereign States, and that the Federal Government was one of delegated powers specifically and clearly defined; that that guarantee had been clearly expressed in the Articles of Confederation and universally recognized in the Constitutional Convention. You knew that the New England States from 1795 to 1845 had proclaimed the right and threatened the action of secession; that Richard Griswald, a Representative in Congress from Connecticut, had declared that he was 'in favor of the New England States forming a republic by themselves.' You knew that Justice Joseph Storey, who in after years graced the Supreme Court of the United States, in speaking against the admission of Louisiana into the Union as a State, definitely said that if the bill passed the bonds of union would be broken, the States which composed it would be free from their moral obligations, and that 'as it will be the right of all, so it will be the duty of some to prepare definitely for a separation, amicably if they can, violently if they must.'

"You knew that the Hartford convention had declared the inalienable right to withdraw from the Union, and that Daniel Webster, in a speech to a Virginia audience in the forties, made the emphatic declaration that 'if the Federal Government fails to abide by the provisions of the Constitution, the South would no longer be bound to observe the compact. A bargain could not be broken on one side and still bind the other side.'

"As often as it has been repeated, it is not true that slavery was the cause of the war. Although slavery was interwoven, there were larger and greater questions involved. It was the unquestioned right of a State to exercise those powers not expressly delegated by the States in the Federal Constitution to the Federal Government. Without suggesting that slavery comports to the spirit of the times and the human progress of to-day it is a remarkable fact of history that at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution every State, save one, sanctioned it by law and practiced it in principle. Little respect can be given to those whose consciences were too sensitive to own slaves as property but who permitted themselves to become enriched by selling them at high value to others.

"The Southland believed that property of whatever kind should be respected and protected under the laws of the land. They resisted any invasion of the right of the States to control their own domestic affairs as a violation of the Federal compact. And so, fighting for such principles, the men and women of the South demonstrated to the world qualities of greatness unexcelled and courage unsurpassed.

"The South did not want war. It much preferred settling the mooted questions without war. It tried in every way through its leaders to avert the catastrophe. The leader of the cause, whose birthday we here commemorate, was a distinguished Senator from my State, who deferred resigning his seat as a United States Senator until all hope of settlement had vanished. But when the war was inevitable and the conflict began, the southern soldier made it his religion to fight, and the world has never seen such bravery and heroism as was displayed by him. No painter can ever paint the sufferings he endured. No orator can ever describe the courage he displayed. No bard can ever sing the praises he so richly deserved. No historian can ever write the true story of his valor in that awful drama. Suffice it to say that from the first angry shriek of the cannon at Fort Sumter until taps were sounded at Appomattox the southern soldier shed glory and luster on the Southland. He kept watch over it as long as he could and only sheathed his sword and returned to his home when nothing else remained for him to do.

"It was a dark day when the flag of southern hope and glory went down in clouds and tears. Then and there one of the most brilliant civilizations that ever flourished staggered and fell with broken lance and shattered shield.

"Fame, unrecorded, still is fame,
Truth, though unknown, is truth the same,
And the grandest glory known to man
Is heroism, though it win
No victor's wreath, nor conqueror's crown.

"And by the side of those immortal men through those four long years of anxious suspense were the noble women of the Confederacy. Heaven bless them!

"Nay, tell it as you may,
It never can be told.
Sing it as you will,
It never can be sung,
Nay, no singer yet has sung
Song to tell how heroes bled,
When our soldiers home among,
Wept eyes waiting for the dead.

"The terrible suffering that they endured will always excite the wonder and admiration of the world. Shut in from everyone, practically at home without protection, subjected to want and privation, the loneliness and suffering of fearful suspense—yet she never murmured, never ceased in her devotion, and never faltered in her duty. These wonderful women were the sentinels back home, and no human interest was ever more faithfully guarded. No comforter had they save their God, and no resource but unwearied prayer and hope.

"Glorious womanhood of the South. And thus they stood behind our intrepid armies and were their inspiration from Fort Sumter with its blazing fire of hope to the cruel and heartrending surrender at Appomatox, where all was darkness and despair.

"The Athenian women in great emergencies used their beautiful long hair to make rigging for vessels. The women of Poland stripped the jewels from their beautiful fingers and snowy white necks and threw them into the famished treasury of their bleeding country. Our grandmothers, in revolutionary times, molded their pewter spoons into bullets and sent their sons with Washington to fight the battles for our independence. But the women of the Confederacy plied their willing hands and made for the soldiers warm and comfortable clothing. They devoted themselves to toil in the fields that they and their loved ones might have food. Not only were they active and watchful at home, zealous in the cause of southern rights, but when occasion required they were the same ever watchful guardians around the sick and dying in every form that presented itself in that great struggle. If it were hospital service or if it were just after some great battle, these good women were on the spot, either to administer substantial aid to the living or Christian comfort to the dying. No word of complaint ever fell from their lips during that eventful epoch, only words of inspiration to their husbands or fathers or sons or sweethearts to keep up the fight. Every message from them carried with it the thrilling appeal to stand by the cause. The beautiful and patriotic sentiments that they uttered were more inspiring to the soldiers and fired them to more heroic action than the ringing words of Lord Nelson to his men, when sailing into Trafalgar Bay: 'England expects every man to do his duty.' And Napoleon, amid the pyramids of Egypt with their 40 centuries of glorious achievements looking down upon him, could not have thrilled his armies more than the tender words from these heroic women.

"Men of gray, and women of the sixties, by your magnificent examples of devotion and bravery and sacrifice, you made humanity better. By the qualities and virtues you exhibited in that great struggle, patriotism was made more sublime, and let me say to you 'whose faltering footsteps are turned toward the grave,' fear not that in this materialistic age the children of the South will ever forget the principles for which you suffered and the priceless heritage that you have given us. We and our children will revere the spirit of your service and devotion. We will remember that your marvelous self-abnegation, heroic sacrifice, and unyielding patriotism is the most glorious legacy with which the South is endowed.

"While most wars produce one or two heroes, the war between the States produced thousands of them and brilliant leaders by the score. There was Forest, Beauregard, Longstreet, Johnston, Stuart, Van Horn, Walthall, Gordon, Morgan, Pettus, Oakes, Clanton, Pelham, and a host of others, whose names will be cherished by the sons and daughters of the South throughout time. But like the century plant that blooms but once in a hundred years, such a general as Lee is born. Cool in judgment, scholarly in attainments, careful in action, wonderful in military instinct, Robert E. Lee ranks to-day and always will rank as one of the greatest generals the world has ever produced.

"And by the side of him in history there will ever stand one other, a consecrated Christian, a tactful disciplinarian, a brave and great leader, and when he 'crossed over the river and rested in the shade of the trees' at Chancellorsville, Robert E. Lee lost his ablest lieutenant and the southern cause one of its greatest generals—Stonewall Jackson.

"And by the side of these two illustrious and immortal names history will record the name of the man whose memory we hallow to-day; the man who has probably been more maligned throughout the North than anyone who aided or sympathized with the southern cause. No American has been so little understood and maliciously misrepresented as Jefferson Davis. While living his detractors and enemies hurled their anathemas of malignity at him, and in death and even after death they tried to besmirch his character and reputation. They charged him with embezzlement, with extortion, and even with treason. No accusation was too slanderous for them to make and no crime too heinous for them to accuse him of. All the sins of the South were piled upon his shoulders and every mistake was branded upon his brow. Not only were the accusations made against him wholly false and unjust, but they treated him more cruelly. His imprisonment at Fortress Monroe—cruel, unmerciful, and inhuman—is only exceeded in debased mockery by one incident in the annals of history, and that the crucifixion of the lowly Nazarene. When he was arrested, after the war, he was mocked and derided, kicked and cuffed, and in iron chains thrown into a cold dungeon cell. There within that dismal prison he was surrounded only by the iron walls of his cell, visited only by loneliness, nourished by bread and water, accused of the highest of all crimes—and yet a trial was denied him. For days and weeks and months he was kept in chains that wore the thin flesh from his bones. At times his guards mocked him and exhibited him to curiosity seekers, who took from his cell even the tin cups from which he drank and the pewter spoons from which he supped as relics of the loathsome place. And when finally liberated, derided and blasphemed, he carried his heavy heart back to the land he loved to await the inevitable hour when his sad and persecuted life would end. And in after years, when he crossed the eternal river, carrying with him the heart throbs of a generous section, although he had served his country with distinction as Secretary of War, for the first and only time in this Nation's history under such circumstances was the flag of our country on public buildings, on the order of the then Secretary of War, not lowered to half-mast.

"But the day of retribution has come, and thousands to-day do honor to the memory of Jefferson Davis while scarcely any remember the name of the Secretary of War who issued that order.

"But why should Jefferson Davis have been selected or singled out to carry the alleged sins of the South? What was there in his deportment or his utterances that were not found in the deportment and utterances of tens of thousands of others? What act of his touching the South and the cause for which he stood and fought was there that was not sanctioned and approved by every southern officer and every private in the Confederate Armies? What principle did he advocate that did not meet the approval of Robert E. Lee, that splendid Christian character, that general whose placid spirit a generous world commends? What action of his did not meet the approbation of Stonewall Jackson, whose martyred spirit now lives with the angels and whose unsurpassed military leadership is the admiration of the world? What speech was ever uttered by Mr. Davis that did not find enthusiastic acclaim in the burning heart of every southern man?

"No true southerner in those days could be found who did not sincerely believe as did Mr. Davis and who did not approve of his acts, his utterances, and his deeds.

"It is a sad commentary that a distorted public opinion should measure one man by one standard and all the other men of the same section who stood for the same thing by another. I am not unaware that a certain glamor attaches to a military hero which elicits the admiration of all. A statesman of the highest order, a benefactor in achievements unsurpassed may return to his home from his labors unheralded, unwelcomed, and unapplauded, but the military hero, be he of the highest or lowest rank, is received with wild and enthusiastic acclaim. It is but natural that after the thundering roar of cannon, the flickering illumination of ghastly battles, and the sharp rattle of clashing musketry we love to hear the steady tramp of the returning battalions and the stirring music of martial airs. Our souls are stirred with emotion and the natural instinct of a generous heart finds expression in tumultuous and patriotic enthusiasm.

"For 240 years the unanswered question in England was, 'Shall Cromwell have a statue?' It required 240 years for public opinion in England to reach a just estimate of Oliver Cromwell, the mightiest man who ever led England's legions to victory or changed the course of her civil history. Cromwell died and was laid to rest with royal honors in Westminster Abbey, but when Charles the Second ascended the throne his body was disinterred, gibbeted, and his head was placed on Westminster Hall. But to-day a magnificent statue of Cromwell stands opposite the place where his head was exposed to the jeers of the passing crowds. Jefferson Davis is truly the Oliver Cromwell of America.

"What a wonderful character he was! What qualities of leadership he possessed! Ben Hill said of him, 'He was the most honest, the truest, gentlest, bravest, tenderest, manliest man' he ever knew.

"In that day when Webster, Calhoun, Clay, Benton, and other giant intellects graced the United States Senate, Prescott, the historian, pronounced Davis 'the most accomplished Member of the body.'

"Ridpath, another historian, who knew him personally, said of him:

> "He was a statesman with clean hands and pure heart, who served his people faithfully from budding manhood to hoary age, without thought of self, with unbending integrity, to the best of his great ability. All who knew him personally were proud that he was their countryman.

"He was an attractive orator, a great debater, highly educated, well read, with a remarkable memory. His mind was a storehouse of information. He detested hypocrisy and loathed deception. He despised sham and spurned pretense. Candor, frankness, and directness were the natural qualities of his character. Truly what he said of Franklin Pierce applies most fittingly to himself: 'If treachery had come near him, it would have stood abashed in the presence of his truthfulness, his manliness, and his confiding simplicity.'

"Jefferson Davis had a noble, proud, chivalrous, and tender nature. No citizen was so poor, no soldier so humble, no man so obscure as not to have ready access to his presence and sympathetic attention.

"And, oh, the lie that he exhibited approval at the assassination of Lincoln. Gen. Reagan, in speaking of this injustice, says that when the news of Lincoln's death reached Mr. Davis, his face expressed surprise and horror in the most unmistakable manner. 'It is too bad. It is shocking. It is horrible,' he declared. 'This is bad for the South. Mr. Lincoln understood us, and at least was not an ungenerous foe.'

"And history tells us that the next morning the little daughter of Gen. Reagan, in terror, came running in and climbed upon his knee and said to Mr. Davis that some one had told her that 'Old Lincoln was coming to kill everybody.' Mr. Davis soothingly brushed her forehead, and patting her upon the cheek, said, 'You are wrong, my dear. Mr. Lincoln is not a bad man. He would not willingly harm anyone, and he dearly loves little girls like you.'

"This incident and the one told by Dr. Craven, the Federal physician attending Mr. Davis at Fortress Monroe, reveal his gentle disposition.

"How true to his character was the incident when, as he was held in chains in his prison cell and fed upon bread and water, as related by Dr. Craven, he requested the attendant who threatened one day to kill a mouse that happened to play in the cell eating the crumbs that fell from his plate not to kill it, that it was 'the only living thing to which he could now administer comfort.'

"And how like the justice of the man when, as plantation owner at Brierfield, he refused ever to inflict punishment upon his slaves before giving them trial by a jury of their peers, with a judge and sheriff of their own color.

"Some one has said that 'his genius was most resplendent when the clouds were darkest, the tension greatest, the danger nearest. When passion swayed the hour he was in most perfect command of his highest powers and seemed to exercise the coolest judgment. He was cautious without timidity, intrepid without rashness, courteous without condescension, pious without pretense.'

"Jefferson Davis was a remarkable man. He loved the Union with all the devotion of his heart. He had given the best years of his life in its cause. He had served it in its highest legislative body, in one of its most important administrative positions and upon the field of battle. And be it said to his glorious memory, whose deeds are engraven in the hearts of his countrymen, that he never failed to measure up to the responsibilities of the hour nor faltered in the discharge of his duties.

"As a student at the West Point Military Academy, as a lieutenant on the wild western frontiers subduing the warlike savages and carrying comfort to the lonesome frontiersmen, as commander of Mississippians under the Stars and Stripes upon the plains of Mexico, winning glory for himself and shedding luster on our country by his magnificent leadership at Buena Vista and Monterey; as a Member of Congress; as Secretary of War under Franklin Pierce; as president of the southern Confederacy; as a prisoner at Fortress Monroe, tortured and persecuted for the sake of those who love his memory; as an old man at his beloved and beautiful home at Beauvoir, where the magnolia and jasemine perfumed the air he breathed and the waves from the Gulf sang wierd songs of applause to his constancy and devotion; as an invalid upon his deathbed in New Orleans, in every relation of life he was, all in all, a Christian gentleman, a gallant soldier, a matchless leader, and a great statesman.

"His life was a benediction, his name is fixed in history, and his services will be an inspiration to the children of the South forever. He loved Montgomery. He loved its people. It was here that he came in the full zenith of his power, the giant intellect of his day, the unquestioned leader of his people and received the wild acclaim of a loyal populace. It was here that he lived, laid plans, and counseled action in the most dramatic period of our country's history. It was here that he came as an old man, a nation's outcast, but the pride and idol of the South. And, true to the patriotism of Montgomery, your gates were again thrown wide open to him, your hearts burned with the warmth of your unfaltering love for him.

"It was in that old statehouse, after his stormy life had ended, the criticisms of unjust enemies and the wild ovations of a generous section could be heard no longer, that his body rested in state, peacefully sleeping so near his friends and among many of the scenes of his eventful career.

"It was, I believe, on yon balcony of the old Exchange Hotel, in his last public address to the people of Montgomery, that he said:

"'As I came here to-day I felt like I was coming home to where liberty dies not and heroic sentiment lives forever.

"This occasion attests the correctness of that noble expression, and as you men and women of the sixties and your children have seen this once torn country reunited and day by day become stronger and greater and more powerful, may the spirit of him whose best days were given in her services hover over us and guide us in realizing the hope that he expressed when he said that he wished for the time to come when an arch on the basis of fraternity and faithful regard for the rights of the States would be built and that it would stretch from the North to the South and on it in blazing letters inscribed, 'Esto perpetua.'"

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I again call up the Army appropriation bill, which was temporarily laid aside.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read first for action on the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Before the reading is commenced I should like to make a statement with respect to the bill and Army appropriations in general.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators who desired to be present when the bill was taken up. If the Senator from New York does not object, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harreld	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Broussard	Hitchcock	Moses	Stanley
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sutherland
Cameron	Kellogg	Nicholson	Trammell
Capper	Kendrick	Norbeck	Underwood
Curtis	Kenyon	Oddie	Wadsworth
Dial	Keyes	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	La Follette	Phipps	Warren
Ernst	Lenroot	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Shortridge
Gerry	McCumber	Simmons
Hale	McKinley	Smith

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN], who is unavoidably detained from the city. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

I wish to announce also that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained on account of illness in his family, and that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is absent on official business.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending bill, and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, when the absence of a quorum was suggested I was about to indulge in a brief statement concerning Army appropriations in general.

The pending bill is the third Army appropriation bill presented to the Congress since the close of the Great War. Of course, the first of these bills, the bill of 1919, reflected in its provisions extremely abnormal conditions, involving, in part at least, the return from France of large numbers of American troops and supplies, their demobilization in this country, and various other conditions which of course followed immediately upon the close of the war. Therefore it would not be fair to state that the first bill following the close of the war was an accurate measure of what the Army was costing as a going concern. Nevertheless, I think it might be of interest to Senators to be reminded of what the two Committees on Military Affairs have done during the last three years with estimates of the War Department.

For the Army appropriation bill of the fiscal year 1919 the War Department earnestly urged an aggregate in appropriations of $1,300,000,000, and supported those estimates with arguments and pleadings before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and likewise of course before the House committee. The Army appropriation bill of that year as finally passed carried in round figures $900,000,000, a cut from the estimates in that one bill of $400,000,000. For the fiscal year 1920 the requests of the department were in the aggregate in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000. The Army appropriation bill carried $392,000,000, a cut of the estimates in round figures of $600,000,000, which I may say were urged with spirit and determination. So in those two years the Military Committees of the two Houses cut off in the aggregate $1,000,000,000 of Army expenditures.

The estimates for the fiscal year upon which we are about to embark and which are the third set of estimates which have been sent in since the war were in the neighborhood of $690,000,000. That was the figure pleaded for by Secretary of War Baker and by the chiefs of the different branches of the service. Those estimates were gone over very carefully, and lengthy hearings were held by the House committee at the last session and by the Senate committee at the last session. As a result, the Army appropriation bill finally passed Congress a few days before March 4 last, carrying, in round figures, appropriations aggregating $346,000,000. President Wilson declined to approve it; it failed to go into effect. Hence we are going all over the ground again.

My understanding is that the former President refused to approve that bill largely on the ground that the committees and the Congress had reduced the appropriations too much, and that the Army under the amount provided for its support would not be adequate for the needs of the country. The bill was introduced again at this session, Mr. President, and passed the House of Representatives a few weeks ago, carrying in round figures $320,000,000, as contrasted with the bill which passed both Houses at the last session of Congress carrying $346,000,000. Upon the bill being referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, we extended a special hearing to the new Secretary of War, the Hon. John W. Weeks, and also to the new Assistant Secretary of War, the latter being summoned before us for a particular purpose, to discuss one or two special items. We received from the Secretary of War the last view of the War Department, under the new administration, with the result that we report to the Senate this bill, which carries an aggregate of $335,000,000—$11,000,000 less than the bill which passed both Houses of Congress at the last session and $15,000,000 more than the bill passed by the House at this session.

I think this recital of what the committee has done during the last three years, and especially with respect to the reconsideration of this bill—for it is, in effect, a reconsideration—will indicate that the committee has not been tending toward extravagances, for the fact is we have in three years cut the appropriation $1,350,000,000 below the estimates earnestly urged by the administration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator whether the present administration has made any estimates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present administration did not have time to submit detailed estimates to the committee of either House. The Secretary of War, however, did make one plea, and practically one plea alone. This was his position, and this is his position to-day: He has said to us, in effect, "I would not urge you to appropriate one dollar more than you showed your willingness in both Houses to appropriate at the last session; indeed, I would be glad if it were possible to reduce that amount; but I beg of you that a certain rearrangement of the items of the bill be made, cutting savagely in some places and adding the amounts saved by those cuts in other places, notably in the pay items, in order that I may not be compelled to reduce the Army during the next fiscal year below a strength of 175,000 men." It is fair to say that the House of Representatives ignored in very large part that request of Secretary Weeks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that request was not accompanied by any formal estimate, as I understand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was accompanied by a letter showing where, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, certain severe sacrifices could be made in appropriations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But there was no estimate of the total appropriation requested?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What was that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was $346,000,000, but detailed estimates, of course, were not forthcoming, because the new Secretary of War could not possibly have them made up. He, however, made certain suggestions to the House, in which he pointed out that he was willing to sacrifice some of the activities of the Army in order to keep the Army from going below a certain strength in the number of men. The House accepted his suggestion concerning savage reductions and sacrifices, but did not give him the men, leaving him and the War Department and the Army in a much worse position, in an infinitely worse position, than if the Secretary had never made any offer to cooperate with the Congress in the direction of economy.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs does not meet the views of the Secretary of War in their entirety. In short, the bill as presented to the Senate contains appropriations in the pay item sufficient to prevent the strength of the Army falling a trifle below 170,000 men, the Secretary of War having begged us not to let it fall below 175,000. We attempt to give him appropriations sufficient to pay the men upon that basis. At the same time we take advantage of the savage cuts which he himself pointed out he would be willing to endure if we let him have the men under the other appropriations. So the bill is before the Senate, carrying in the aggregate $335,000,000. It will keep the Army from going below a figure of about 169,000 men during the next fiscal year.

The Army to-day contains about 226,000 or 227,000 men. No recruiting is going on. It is being reduced by normal causes, notably, of course, by the expiration of enlistments. On July 1 next the Army will number 215,000 enlisted men.

Mr. KING. July 1 of this year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. July 1, next, the date upon which this bill will go into effect. If the normal rate of shrinkage continues, it will reach the figure of 175,000 men about the middle of January, 1922, and 170,000 or 168,000 about the middle of February, 1922. This bill proposes to stop the shrinkage at the point last named.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Perhaps I have not a correct understanding of what the appropriation will do, but is it not true that the appropriation of $83,000,000 will be only about sufficient to pay 158,000 or 159,000 men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President, it will pay for more than that when we consider the point which I have not reached yet, namely, that the bill proposes to repeal the reenlistment bonus provision.

Mr. LENROOT. How many will it pay for?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have the table here showing the figures exactly. I can come very close to the figures, so that the Senator and I may be quite clear in our conclusions. An Army reduced to a minimum of 170,000 men and held there will cost in the item pay of enlisted men $85,944,000. An Army reduced to a minimum of 165,000 enlisted men and held there will cost in the item pay of enlisted men $84,880,000.

We appropriate $83,000,000 for that item, and on the page just opposite that appropriation we repeal a provision of existing law relative to the payment of reenlistment bonuses, and by that repeal we save $1,800,000 during the next fiscal year; so that in effect we are appropriating $83,000,000 plus $1,800,000, which makes $84,800,000, which is just about sufficient for 165,000 men or a trifle more as a minimum.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I thought; but the Senator stated that the minimum under the appropriation would be 169,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We thought it would be between 168,000 and 169,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Would it not be much less than that because we are appropriating for an average?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. LENROOT. We are appropriating for 165,000 or 166,000 during the year. That is true, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. For how many?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The average would be about 180,000, but I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to this provision in the bill, designed to expedite discharges:

> And the Secretary of War is authorized, under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe, to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men serving in the continental United States without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges until the number in the Army has been reduced to 170,000 enlisted men, not including the Philippine Scouts.

It was the idea of the committee that the money we are appropriating under the item of pay would necessitate reducing the Army to a figure somewhat below 170,000 men. That number is somewhat of an estimate, but it is apparent that unless the management of the War Department can save some little sums out of other pay items—and all the pay items are transferable one with the other—they will come down to about 165,000 men. The estimate of the finance department is that, starting with 215,000 men on July 1 next, the Army can be reduced and held at 165,000 men, and $83,000,000 plus $1,800,000 saved by the repeal of the reenlistment bonus will pay them.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the way I understand the matter—that this $84,000,000 would pay for between 165,000 and 168,000 men, beginning on the 1st of July, throughout the year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. That is where I do not follow the Senator. Is not the estimate of $84,000,000, which the Senator had, and which I examined, based upon 165,000 men throughout the year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator read it again? He has it before him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here is the way the column from which I read is headed:

> Minimum of 170,000: Average, 182,000; appropriation, $85,944,000.
> Minimum of 165,000: Average, 180,000; appropriation, $84,880,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The average under this bill will be about 180,000 men for the entire year, starting with 215,000 at the beginning of the year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator, if it will not interrupt the continuity of his observations, whether it would be a difficult thing to cut down the number to 160,000 by the 1st of July, or are the enlistments so graded that it would be impossible without violating the contract?

Mr. WADSWORTH. You would have to violate the contract, so called; you would have to discharge arbitrarily the difference between 215,000 men and the number you wanted to reach.

Mr. KING. Are there not enough applications for separation from the service to bring down the number to 160,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the applications for separation from the service are fewer, proportionately, than ever before.

There are some, and the Senate committee agrees with the House committee in putting in here a provision permitting the Secretary of War to grant applications for discharges according to any rule or regulation that he wants to promulgate, regardless of the provisions of existing law which limit his authority in that respect. That will expedite the reduction of the Army a little bit, but mighty little, in my judgment. The service is pretty popular. The pay is pretty good. The prospects on the outside are not as good as they have been at other times, and men are not applying to be released from the Army in the way they used to apply. It will undoubtedly get a few more men out, no one can say how many, but I do not anticipate that it will have a marked effect.

Mr. KING. The House, as I understand, passed this bill with a minimum of 150,000 officers and men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; the number is much lower than that, and that ought to be understood. Just what this situation is under the House appropriations has not been mentioned in one newspaper article or dispatch of any kind. We hear a lot of talk about the House of Representatives standing for an Army of 150,000, but that is not what they do in the bill. They stand for an Army for the next fiscal year averaging 150,000; but as the Army must start at 215,000 at the beginning of the year, under the appropriations of the House bill it must go down to 120,000 by the end of the year, in order to establish the average of 150,000. So the House bill reduces the Army to 120,000—95,000 men in 12 months' time. That, in the eyes of Secretary Weeks, spells utter disaster to the Army. He begs us not to do it. He points out that if discharges are forced at that rate and in those numbers, there can not be in the United States a combat unit large enough to take the field and be effective in case of an emergency. Such a drastic and savage reduction would result in the skeletonization of every regiment and squadron and battalion and battery and troop and company to such an extent that they would be, comparatively speaking, little squads of men.

In any event, under the Senate bill the War Department is compelled to reduce somewhat the number of units. That is conceded. They organized, in my judgment, too many divisions under the new law. Discretion was left with them. They organized nine. I think myself they should have organized not more than five. And, of course, they organized or continued the existence of appropriate constituent units of nine divisions. Under the Senate bill I think they will have to reduce the divisions to five, perhaps to four. They will have to reduce the number of regiments, and combine men from two or three regiments into one regiment. That is an expensive proposal by itself, because you have to transfer the officers and men back and forth over the United States, but at that I think it is a wise thing to do; but if you take the House figures, you skeletonize what is left so savagely and severely, that, as a matter of fact, by the end of the next fiscal year it is the judgment of everybody who has studied it up there that you will not have a real army at all.

The Senate committee begs the Senate to save the Army from that situation; and we are only $11,000,000 apart from the House in the matter of the appropriation for pay of the enlisted men. That is all that stands between the two houses in the item of pay of enlisted men, $11,000,000; and at that the Senate committee asks you to pass a bill smaller than the bill which both the Senate and the House passed at the last session.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I am unable to follow the Senator in the explanation which he makes of the difference in the number of enlisted men which the House provides for and the number which the Senate provides for. I call his attention—of course, he is familiar with it—to page 16, where the bill says:

The Secretary of War is authorized—

The House had it "directed"— under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe to grant applications for discharge * * * until the number in the Army has been reduced to 150,000 enlisted men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but then they do not appropriate enough money to pay that number.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, well; that would not make any difference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it would. It makes a difference to Secretary Weeks, and he is the Army.

Mr. BORAH. I know; but the deficiency bills are coming in here just the same as they always did.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is again mistaken.

Mr. BORAH. I know what they are doing. They are coming in here, and we are passing them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not from the War Department.

Mr. BORAH. The time has not arrived yet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can assure the Senator from Idaho, if he does not trust the Secretary of War, that I do.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a question of trusting the Secretary of War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is the only man who is in control of the submission of deficiency estimates.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a question of trusting the Secretary of War; but we know that when these conditions arise the departments universally, under all administrations, take care of them by deficiencies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can assure the Senator from Idaho that that will not be the case in the War Department under Mr. Weeks. He has assured us to that effect; and if any man's word is good, it is that of John W. Weeks. If the Senator does not believe it, very well.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I am not going to be put in the position of questioning the word of John W. Weeks. In my judgment, it is not relevant here at all. It does not enter into the proposition. If an emergency should arise, and John W. Weeks should think that the public interests required a deficiency, John W. Weeks would unhesitatingly provide for it. The statute authorizes it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not in "Pay of the Army."

Mr. BORAH. If Mr. Weeks thought that the public service justified it, he would undoubtedly do it, and that is always the basis upon which deficiency warrants are issued.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. I happened to overhear a remark which perhaps prompted the Senator from Idaho to make his observation.

Mr. KING. I think the law authorizes incurring a deficiency if in this bill we authorize an army in excess of the appropriation which is carried. If we authorize an army of 180,000, and then make an appropriation for an army of 150,000, notwithstanding the good purposes of Secretary Weeks and his honesty and his integrity—and I join in all the eulogies which the Senator has pronounced upon Mr. Weeks—he would feel constrained, if the exigency arose, as the Senator from Idaho says, to continue the Army beyond the limits which would be authorized by the appropriation, with a statute there upon the books which authorized a minimum army of 180,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Idaho have forgotten—and it is peculiarly interesting that the Senator from Idaho should have forgotten—that this bill contains a proviso which reads as follows. It will be found on page 23:

Provided further, That the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that the sum herein appropriated shall defray the entire cost of the pay of the officers and enlisted men of the line and staff during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

And the Senator from Idaho is the author of that amendment.

Mr. BORAH. How does that change the situation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It means that he can not incur a deficiency. It must be reduced so that the money appropriated for "Pay of the Army" shall be sufficient to pay all the men that are in the Army during the year, and the Senator from Idaho wrote that himself. Now, I say the Secretary of War will not incur a deficiency.

Mr. BORAH. Then it does not depend upon the integrity of the Secretary of War, but it depends upon the fact that he has not the power to do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He has the integrity to obey the law. That is what I meant by his integrity.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. I presume in that respect he is no different from other department heads. I concede that he has that integrity, but suppose he did not have it; could he do it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not without being liable to impeachment. There is the law laid down by Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York whether he does not think it would be wise, if he is limited in the amount which may be expended, to limit the number of officers and soldiers so that it would be impossible for him, even if he had the inclination, in the face of the statute to retain more in the Army than would absorb the appropriation made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, the Senator from Utah believes that the Army appropriation bill should carry provisions stating how many men should be in the Army?

Mr. KING. The Senator from Utah believes that if the appropriation bill limits by the appropriation itself the strength of the Army it ought to state the limitation of the personnel not merely in figures with respect to dollars and cents but in numbers with respect to personnel.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator may believe that, but I do not see what that adds to this bill in the matter of restrictions. This bill says that so much may be paid to soldiers and that the number of soldiers must be reduced until the amount appropriated is sufficient to pay them. If the Senator's suggestion were put into appropriation bills we would not only have to say how many men should be in the Army, but we would have to say how many master sergeants there should be, how many first sergeants, how many corporals, how many privates, first class, and how many privates, because the pay of the different grades is different. You would have to go into the detail of organizing the Army all over again in every appropriation bill, and I see nothing to be gained by it. We have tied the thing so tight in this bill that the Secretary of War and the other officials of the War Department can not spend a cent for increasing the number of men in the Army without being liable to impeachment by the Congress as violators of the law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if my colleague on the committee will yield for a moment, I do not see how you can tie it up any stronger than that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the first time it has ever been done in the history of appropriation bills for the Army.

Mr. WARREN. I have never seen it done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No Secretary of War has ever been treated that way before.

Mr. WARREN. I do not remember any time when there was a deficiency in the pay of the Army, because the department has always kept within the appropriation. There are always deficiencies in other items in the War Department, but in the pay of the Army I do not recollect any.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say on that point, because the Senator from Florida stated a little time ago, I think, that deficiencies might be incurred, that the law permits the incurring of deficiencies for the Medical Corps, which cares for the health of troops; also deficiencies for subsistence, under which item the troops are fed; and also, I think, for clothing. Of course, men must have clothes. They must be fed. If they are ill or injured, they must be treated in the Army hospitals; and quite properly, I think, the Congress in statutes passed many, many years ago, authorized the Secretary of War to incur deficiencies in things of that kind, because it is entirely possible that an emergency may overtake the Army. A transport may be wrecked and the men's clothing lost, and a vast quantity of food and supplies and medical stores lost, and they must be instantly replaced, and the replacing of them will incur a deficiency. It is a wise discretion to leave to the Secretary of War.

We have just had a catastrophe at Pueblo, Colo. The War Department always, as everyone knows, stands ready to ship supplies, without asking any questions, to afflicted areas like that out of its own stores and send them right away. They do not ask any payment. The Secretary of War on yesterday gave complete power to the corps area commander, in the area in which Pueblo is situated, to send to Pueblo anything he has that they need. That may create a deficiency in clothing, or medical supplies, or food, and the Congress permits such a deficiency; but not in pay. It never has, and I think it never will.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the House provided $72,678,659 for pay of enlisted men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The Senate committee recommended $83,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The difference between the two sums pays how many men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have stated that result exactly.

Mr. WARREN. Did the House undertake to get at it with exactness?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. The House makes its calculations on an entirely different basis, let me say to the Senator from Idaho. They are always figuring on the average strength of the Army for the next fiscal year. They appropriate enough money to pay an Army averaging 150,000 in strength for a year. But that is all they appropriate. Naturally, it will have to go down to 120,000 at the end of the year in order to meet that average. The Senate committee appropriates enough money to pay, on the average, 180,000 for the year, the minimum figure to be in the neighborhood of 168,000. That is the difference between the bill as it passed the House and the Senate committee bill.

Mr. BORAH. The difference between the two appropriations is $11,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, there may be something about this that is difficult for a man who is not more familiar with the Army than I am to understand, but I do not understand why it is that the House appropriation of $72,678,000 will not pay 150,000 men when the Senator says that $83,000,000, only $11,000,000 more, will pay 150,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator must take into account that the Army is in a state of flux, and it is going down, down, down, all the time in its numbers.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And that makes it seem rather mysterious why $72,000,000 will pay 150,000 for the year, and $84,800,000, the Senator should have said, taking into account the saving by the repeal of the existing reenlistment bonus, will pay an average of 180,000. They are figuring averages; we are figuring the Army reduced to a minimum and held there for the remainder of the year. Then next year, if the Congress wants it to go lower, it may so provide; but the Senate committee believed that a minimum of 120,000, which it must reach, as conceded under the House bill, is too low; it is dangerous.

Mr. BORAH. The actual difference, then, between the size of the Army under the bill as it passed the House and the Senate committee bill is 50,000 men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; at the end of the year, the last day of the last month of the next year, and not for the whole year.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. As a matter of fact, then, the popular belief that there is a difference of only 20,000 is a mistake. The supposition has been that the House provided for 150,000, and that the Senate committee increased it only 20,000 more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. As a matter of fact, the House provided for 120,000, and the Senate committee has increased it 50,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The popular belief that the House has appropriated money for an Army which shall be reduced to 150,000 men is wrong. It must be reduced to 120,000 to get inside their figures.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Idaho brought out the fact I wanted to bring out, that the actual difference between the bill as it passed the House and the Senate committee bill is represented by a minimum of 48,000 men; that is to say, the difference between the two plans is 48,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What reasons did the Secretary of War give why 48,000 men should be added to the minimum?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To the minimum the House suggested?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To the minimum of the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The minimum suggested by the House?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, what reasons did the Secretary of War give why the Senate should support an Army whose minimum should be 168,000 men——

Mr. WADSWORTH. He recommended an Army of 175,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why did the committee report in favor of an Army of 168,000, while the House deemed only 120,000 men as a minimum proper? What reasons did the Secretary of War give?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the Senator was not in the Chamber a few moments ago, when I discussed the effect of the drastic reduction imposed upon the Army by the House provision, and I think in the discussion I stated the belief of the Secretary of War. I will state it again, Mr. President. It is just this: If the Army is reduced to that tremendous extent, the units in the Army, the companies, the batteries and troops, the battalions, squadrons, and regiments, will be so attenuated, so starved of men, that by the end of the year they would not be fit to take the field and do any effective work for any purpose.

For example, a reduction from 215,000 to 120,000 in 12 months is a reduction of about 40 per cent. You take 40 per cent of the men out of every company of Infantry in the Army and then detract the number of men who inevitably are assigned to kitchen police or fatigue duty, special details, and the companies that are left are almost useless, they are so small. You say, "Well, we will combine the remnants of companies." They will have to do that to a considerable degree under the Senate committee bill as it is. We are compelling them to reduce the number of units in the Army by this reduction in the appropriation as contrasted with the plans which they made a year ago for the tactical organization. They think they can get along with the reduction which we impose upon them, because it does not compel them to combine in that short period too many units into new and single units of sufficient strength to be any good. But they say, "If you impose upon us the House method and the House rate of reduction, we will be in such a state that for an entire year we will be useless for the defense of the country or any portion of it." And it is easy to see what would happen if you did that.

In addition to that, it appears from an examination of the present rate of normal shrinkage that the Army could not reach 120,000 men by the end of the next fiscal year; that in addition to the normal shrinkage they would have to walk into the ranks and fire men out in order to get it down, and when once you do that, in addition to tearing the units to pieces, you tear the morale of the men to pieces. The Senate committee thinks that is too savage.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, the Senate committee thinks it is too precipitous?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; too precipitous.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator would not take the position that if sufficient time were given we could not at some time or other reduce it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I would not take such a position.

Mr. BORAH. If by combining companies, and so forth, you could reduce it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have to combine a good many companies and regiments as it is under the Senate committee bill. But we think it is too savage to compel them to go to the House figures in one year.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, what they might be able to do in two years the Senator thinks would demoralize the Army to do in one year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I do.

Mr. BORAH. Then I understand the point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then the reason the Senator thinks it is undesirable to fix the minimum of 150,000 provided for by the House——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is not the minimum.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is stated here in the bill to be the minimum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That has to do with applications for discharges.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The provision on page 17?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. They have to go down to 120,000 to stay within the appropriation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then the chief objection is that the bill as it passed the House does not provide for a minimum of 150,000 but provides for a scaling down until you get to 120,000, and then coming up to 150,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If that is true, why not fix the Senate committee bill so that the minimum shall actually be 150,000, and shall not go below that, and the pay be made adequate for that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a matter for the judgment of Senators themselves. The committee thought it should not go below the figures that they fixed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The objection to that, as the Senator states, is that it would make the unit too small?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, the companies would be too small?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the combinations of companies into regiments would be too small?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the appropriations were made so as to actually hold the number of men up to 170,000, instead of reducing it to 120,000, if the appropriations should correspond with the 150,000 provided for on page 17, does not the Senator think that that could be carried out without destroying the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say very candidly to the Senator that I think it is too far to go in one year. I really do.

Mr. BORAH. I would agree with the Senator from New York that perhaps it would be unnnecessary to do it if it were not for the fact that we are in a distressed condition with reference to finances, and so forth, where we have to be drastic.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator, the Senator does not appreciate how drastic this bill is.

Mr. BORAH. I think I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is savage in other items, where we have saved money.

Mr. BORAH. I know it is savage, and nothing but savagery will save the situation, so far as the finances of the country are concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the Secretary helped us in that.

Mr. BORAH. I appreciate what the Senator has done in that regard. But here is the situation: We appropriated about $100,000,000 for the Army prior to the war, and now we are appropriating $335,000,000. It does seem to me, in view of the distressed situation in which we find ourselves with reference to revenue—and the revenue bills will be coming along in a short time—that we could afford to go down to 150,000. Of course, my judgment on these matters is not worth anything, but I think we can go much lower. But the difference could be very readily taken care of by increasing the appropriation. But to reduce it to 150,000 seems to me to be wholly within reason.

I can not understand, Mr. President, how the presence or absence of 20,000 men in an army, while it makes a very large difference in the matter of dollars and cents, would absolutely destroy it, demoralize it. It looks to me as if, if they did not feel some pride in keeping the Army up to where it is, and did not have a militaristic view of it, but would look more at it from the standpoint of the taxpayers of the country, in view of the fact that everything has to be cut, in view of the fact that everything has to be reduced, we could afford to reduce the Army to 150,000 men. That is my opinion in the matter. I do not hesitate to say that I would cut it to 100,000 without any hesitancy whatever, and I would feel that in doing so, while I was doing that which the Army men think unjust to the Army, I would realize that I was doing that which is supremely just to the taxpayers of the country, whom we must take care of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And protect.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, and protect; and the best protection in the world, Mr. President, for the United States right now is not a man in uniform, but is a contented citizenship.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not deny that, but occasionally a man in uniform is mightily needed.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with that; but the able Senator from New York stated at the last session of Congress, and I have no doubt stated correctly—I hope he did, because I agreed with him—that the only object of an Army at this time was for police service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said in continental United States.

Mr. BORAH. So far as those in Europe are concerned, we had better bring them home as soon as we can; but the only object of having an Army is for police service, so far as continental United States is concerned, and, of course, if we are going to have trouble abroad the Senator would not stop for a moment with 170,000 men. He is following the rule that we have them for police service in continental United States——

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the overseas possessions.

Mr. BORAH. But we have the Philippine Scouts and others there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not in the $83,000,000 appropriated. Their item is a separate pay item.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator has 170,000 men exclusive of Philippine Scouts.

Mr. KING. And we have of marines 27,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Senator is mistaken. The 170,000 men are inclusive. It includes——

Mr. BORAH. I read:

Not including the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. BORAH. Page 17 of the bill:

One hundred and seventy thousand enlisted men, not including Philippine Scouts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That paragraph has no control over the size of the Army or its cost. That is merely the paragraph that authorizes the Secretary of War to grant applications for discharges, irrespective of the provision of existing law, until the Army has been reduced to 170,000, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts. The appropriations which we make will pay an average Army of 180,000 men, including the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but how many of them are there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That would be an Army reduced to a minimum of 165,000 men and held there.

Mr. KING. One hundred and sixty-five thousand or one hundred and sixty-eight thousand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are a little above 165,000. It is very difficult to say down to the last dozen how many men we are going to have, but the committee can tell within 1,500 up or down, and that is pretty close.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to get the Senator to repeat the reason, or to correct me if I make an erroneous interpretation of it. The reason, then, that the House minimum of 150,000 is not considered sufficient is that it will compel such a scaling down of the units, say of the companies, that the Army will not be satisfactory.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will not be any good.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why will it not be any good?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I emphasize a phase of that which may throw a little more light on it? I do not know whether the Senator agrees with me about it or not, but I do not believe that the scaling down process should apply to the garrison at Hawaii or the garrison at Panama or the garrison at Corregidor. I think those garrisons should be kept at their present strength, and, if anything, in one or two instances should be somewhat increased. The scaling down will be applied to troops in the United States, and therefore will be the more severe proportionately to the units in the United States than would be the case if the scaling down were to be applied to the units wherever they may be.

Under the House figures the best estimate that the War Department can give us is that when we get the Army down to 120,000 men in toto, including the garrisons overseas, the Secretary will not reduce the garrisons in the Philippines, Hawaii, Panama, China, and Alaska to a figure less than 35,000. I would not urge him to do it. So, when we reduce the whole Army, including the 35,000 men in the insular possessions, to 120,000 men, and subtract from the 120,000 the Medical Corps, the Quartermaster Corps, the enlisted personnel of the Ordnance Department, the noncombatant mechanics of the Air Service——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can not they all be reduced?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; they can not in the same ratio. You can not reduce the enlisted men of the Medical Corps in the same ratio, because you still have the same hospitals to support.

You can not reduce the enlisted men in the ordnance in the same ratio, because you still have the arsenals, and you have to keep them moving even at a reduced rate. You can not reduce your overhead, and the particular elements which I have just mentioned are part of the overhead of the Army, at the same rate that you reduce the enlisted men in the combat branches. You can not reduce the overhead much more when you get down to a certain figure.

The result is that the final and last scaling down is inflicted upon the Infantry, the Cavalry, and the Field Artillery in the United States, and the best estimates are that if the House figure is followed we would not have over 23,000 or 24,000 combat soldiers in the entire continental United States. I think that is too low.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have never been able to follow the estimates in figuring out the number of men provided. I am speaking of reducing the minimum of the bill to 150,000, and I am not speaking now of the extreme view of bringing it down to the extreme of 120,000 and then restoring it, because I believe it ought to be at least at 150,000 minimum. I have never been able to see how the reduction to 150,000 minimum could so reduce the units as to make them useless. I can see how officers might regard a small company as not such a complimentary command to have.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; it is not that reason.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can see how they might object to that, but I think that the soldiers in the United States for a large part of the time, in fact, almost all the time, are simply occupying quarters and having a few drills. That is their business year in and year out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator means that that is his construction of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is what they do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to take the Senator to an Army post and let him live there six months and watch them. He would have a very different conception of their duties. Living in quarters and attending a few drills sounds splendid, but let the Senator try it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state what other duties they have?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Attending the few drills is quite an item when the drills are going on nearly all day every day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why are they more difficult with a few men in the company than if the company were full? My point is this, if the Senator will permit me: The men that we hold here in the service in peace times in nine cases out of ten for almost all the time during the whole year do nothing except remain as a potential power for the United States to use in case it is necessary, and I am not able to see why during that time it can not be skeletonized down to the minimum provided in the House bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They cease being a potential power then. That is the answer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why would they cease being a potential power then? They would still be a company. It would not have as many men in it, of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be just half as good a company if it had only half as many men. A company of infantrymen, for example, are not confined solely to the use of the rifle. The men are trained in several different methods of warfare as infantrymen.

A company of modern infantry is divided into platoons and sections. One section is the rifle grenade section, specially trained not only in the use of the rifle in its ordinary usage but also in the handling of the rifle grenade which is attached to the rifle. Another section is composed of bomb throwers who use the grenade. Another group in the company, or quite a considerable group, have the automatic rifle, the famous light Browning.

Unless you have your company large enough to contain an effective number of the different elements which must be used in combat, you have not got a company. It takes some time to build up the esprit and teamwork in a company of infantry. If Congress intervenes and tears the company all to pieces by taking 40 per cent of its men away from it, the rest of the men will know perfectly well they are not a company of infantry. They are a squad of men whose time will be devoted to doing fatigue duty.

I have always traveled upon the conviction that we maintained an Army because we thought an Army was necessary, in some measure at least, to defend the United States. I further entertained the conviction that the defense of the United States is something which may require fighting; in other words, an Army is a thing built and trained to fight, and if we reduce and skeletonize the units inside of that Army to such a low strength that they can not perform the military functions assigned to those units, then we have not got an Army that can fight, and that is all there is to it. I would rather have an Army of 2 divisions at war strength than an Army of 10 divisions at one-tenth war strength.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state the strength of a company in the present organization?

Mr. WADSWORTH. About 200, war strength.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean the present strength.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are two strengths ordinarily discussed, the peace strength and the war strength. The peace strength is considered the lowest strength at which a company could be effective; and that, as I understand it, though I have not the figures with me, is to-day a little over 100 men. The war strength is 200 men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would be the strength of a company under the bill which the Senator is advocating?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the combination of some units, as they will have to do under our bill, it is hoped that the strength of the Infantry companies can remain in the neighborhood of 100 men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would be the strength of a company under the provisions of the House bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think there would be a bit over 55.

Mr. BORAH. If it was kept at 150,000 men, it could not make such a great difference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should have to make a guess at it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose it is 75 men. In the past we have had many companies of 75 men, approximately.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is before we had the automatic rifles, the grenades, and the rifle grenades.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can not conceive of the necessity of dividing them up to specialize in that way, and of saying to John Smith, "You can practice with nothing except grenades." Why can not the whole company do all those things and learn about all of them? Why is it necessary to divide them into such impossible units? If you have 75 men in the company, you certainly have a unit that can act and is mobile. I can understand that officers might prefer to have specialized experts and to have larger commands, but I can not see any practical reason for it.

I supposed when the Senator took the floor that he was going to say the Army would be inadequate to perform its military duties; that it could not be decreased in our foreign possessions, and that we could not police the United States; but instead of that he practically bases his entire presentation upon the argument that the units would not be large enough to be effective. Those units would be as large as they were before the war.

There would be approximately 75 men in the company. I think there would be more than that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The men in the companies before the war numbered more than 75.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator from New York how many soldiers we have now in Panama?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think we have in the neighborhood of 9,000 at present.

Mr. DIAL. I was told some time ago by a soldier from there that they had so many that they were in each other's way, and that we ought to take half of them and bring them back here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator ought to bring that soldier before the Committee on Military Affairs and let him tell that story.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are 8,280 in Panama.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You can find soldiers and civilians who will tell you almost anything.

Mr. KING. And officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes

Mr. DIAL. It had been my hope and understanding that in view of the amount we recently donated to Colombia, there would be no further need for the further maintenance of any troops in Panama.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the settled policy and plan of the War Department to increase that number. To what figure I do not know, but I think it will go well above 10,000. I think the Senator will recall there are about 14,000 in Hawaii.

Mr. FLETCHER. In Hawaii there are 14,971.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And about 16,000 in the Philippines and in China, including the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. FLETCHER. Sixteen thousand five hundred and eighty-six, and in China there are 1,311.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator taken into account the probability that all the soldiers in Europe will be brought home after the peace resolution is agreed to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They, of course, are included in the figures of the total strength of the Army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They would be available for service in the United States after that happy event occurred.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They would if they are returned. The Military Committee has no information as to whether they are to be returned or not.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nebraska said after the peace resolution is agreed to. That likely will not be during the life of the pending bill, judging from the way we are progressing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There are about 15,000 enlisted men, I think, with officers in Germany.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are 14,216 men and officers in Germany. Altogether, outside of the United States, there are 58,423 officers and men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as the troops who are in Germany have just been mentioned, I desire to remind the Senate that all expenses of every kind and description incurred by and for the troops in Germany, including pay of officers and men, are a charge against the German Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, since the Senator from New York has mentioned that——

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I continue my statement?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the money collected from the German Government is turned into the Treasury of the United States. This bill, however, has to carry on its face the appropriations for the pay, subsistence, clothing, and all of the incidental expenses of the troops on the Rhine.

Mr. OVERMAN. How was the obligation imposed upon Germany to pay the expense of maintaining the American Army in Germany? Was it done by agreement?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it was under the terms of the armistice, which was entered into on November 11, 1918.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not done by the treaty?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course not. We are not parties to the treaty.

I wish to put into the RECORD a statement of the account with the German Government. The German debt on account of American troops on the Rhine a short time ago aggregated $278,000,000. The Germans have paid in cash $37,000,000 on account. The last information which the committee received was that Gen. Allen, the American commander, has received assurances of some additional payments in the very near future, or has already received payments in settlement of some special accounts having to do with the support of our troops. I have here, and I shall later ask permission, as a part of my remarks, to insert in the RECORD a statement of the German account.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the German Government owes the United States about $250,000,000 on account for the maintenance of the Army on the Rhine? Of course, the fact that the German Government pays that is of some moment; but, at the same time, it ought not to be a justification for keeping the troops in Europe. We are deeply interested in the German Government getting back on an economic basis and doing business, and one of the reasons why it has been unable to do so is because of the keeping of troops there unnecessarily. I want to ask the Senator from New York who fixes the salary of our officers who are with the Army on the Rhine? Is their salary the same as they would draw if they were in the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. We do not let the German Government fix the salaries of our officers.

Mr. KING. But they are paid 10 per cent more for overseas service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, there is added 20 per cent to the salaries of the enlisted men and 10 per cent to the salaries of the officers on account of their foreign service.

Mr. BORAH. I supposed that we fixed their salaries; but I desire to ask, Is the salary the same as that which they would receive if in the United States with the additional percentage on account of foreign service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire first to put into the RECORD the statement to which I have referred. I have here a recapitulation of the cost of the American army of occupation from December, 1918, but before putting it into the RECORD it may be of interest to some Senators to understand in what period of this occupation the greater part of the cost which is imposed upon Germany was incurred.

When first we went into German occupied territory we went in with a complete field army of seven, eight, or nine divisions; at any rate, it was the Third Army, and it embraced a large force. They were there for a few months, and then we began bringing the troops home. That force is now reduced, and it was reduced many months ago, to about 14,000 men. The greater part of the cost was incurred in the first six or seven months; the cost which has been incurred during the last 12 or 15 months constitutes comparatively a small portion of the total owed to us by the German Government.

Mr. President, I ask at this point to insert in my remarks the statement to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Recapitulation of cost of the American army of occupation from December, 1918.

Period.	Total charges for period.	Credit account armistice funds received.	Miscellaneous credits account of Government sales.	Balance due United States.
Dec. 18, 1918–June 30, 1919	$216,832,123.29	$29,610,083.60		$187,222,036.69
July 1, 1919–Mar. 31, 1921	59,235,487.51	4,728,093.69	$2,670,978.49	51,836,415.33
Total	276,067,610.80	34,338,180.29	2,670,978.49	239,058,452.02

Cost of American section, interallied Rhineland commission.

Period.	Total charges for period.	Credit account dollar and mark exchange received from Germany.	Excess amount drawn during period by I. A. R. H. C.
May 1, 1919–Mar. 31, 1921	$267,178.17	$290,504.20	$23,326.03

Costs of army and American section, interallied Rhineland high commission.

GRAND TOTALS.

Total charges for period	$276,334,788.97
Credit account armistice funds received	34,628,684.49
Miscellaneous credits account of Government sales	2,670,978.49
Balance due United States	239,035,125.99

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wanted to ask the Senator if he has taken into his account or if the War Department have taken into account the probability that the 14,000 men who are now in Germany can probably soon be added to the forces in the United States which are at the disposal of the War Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, this appropriation bill is made up on the theory that those 14,000 men will not be available for service over here at all?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator think that is the correct outlook?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator think, now when we are trying to reduce the Army to a minimum, when he makes the argument that there is difficulty in doing that because of the necessity of providing for needs of the country, that we ought to take into account the probability that we shall have 14,000 men soon available for what we may call police duty in the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To answer that question, I should have to know, and so, I think, would all of us, what the President and the State Department are going to do in the matter of the foreign relations of the United States. That matter does not come before the Military Affairs Committee. The Secretary of War was asked about it, and he informed us that that was a matter which he could not discuss; that it was not within his jurisdiction; that he merely felt called upon to tell the committee what the needs of the Army were.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well. Does the Senator think that after the United States has reached a status of peace with Germany as the result of a joint resolution of Congress approved by the President, we can by any means keep those 14,000 men in Germany?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not prepared to discuss that question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a matter that hardly needs any argument or opinion from the Secretary of War. It goes without saying that when we reach a condition of peace with Germany those troops must be brought home and can be added to the American establishment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not agree with the Senator at all. That would involve a discussion of the terms of the Knox resolution, which, in my humble judgment, retains for the United States the right to keep troops in the occupied territory.

Mr. KING. I want to express my dissent from the position taken by my esteemed friend from Nebraska and to express my unqualified assent to the statement made by the Senator from New York. I feel that I have to differ from my friend from Idaho. I feel that it is the duty of the United States, in the circumstances, to maintain troops in Europe, and I heartily approve of the course pursued by President Harding in retaining American troops in Europe. I think it would be cowardly for us to withdraw from Europe under the situation there obtaining. We have obligations there; we have rights there; and I think that the Military Affairs Committee have acted wisely in formulating this bill with the understanding that the conditions in Europe may require some American troops there for an indefinite period. I make no complaint because the bill takes that factor into account.

Mr. President, just a word or two with respect to another phase of this measure. May I inquire of the Senator from New York if he has any information as to the mental processes of the House committee, and if he can tell us how they reached the conclusion that 120,000 men as a minimum would be an Army capable of functioning and discharging the duties of the Army as a fighting unit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I remind the Senator that the House committee did not reach any such conclusion? The House committee reported to the House of Representatives an appropriation of $83,000,000 for the pay of enlisted men—just what the bill as reported by the Senate committee does—but the House itself, over the protest of the House committee, adopted amendments cutting it to $72,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Then, Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Utah should simply be changed to an inquiry as to the mental processes of the House instead of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not feel competent to speculate in such a wild field.

Mr. BORAH. There is this consideration to be taken into account: While, of course, I would not for a moment disparage the honorable body of which I am a Member, there has to be taken into consideration the fact that the House is elected every two years, and consequently, perhaps, has a keener knowledge of just how those who are going to vote are feeling in these days. It is a matter which may well, at the present juncture, enter into the situation, not for the mere purpose of remaining in office, but I think that the tax-paying public ought to be considered as well as the morale of the Army. Both must greatly suffer in the present situation in which we find ourselves, but I do not think that the Army ever gives any consideration to anything except the Army. It is natural that it should not do so.

The Army is its business; it does not think anything about the taxpayers. The man who has been trained in the Army would consider it more or less a disparagement of his intellect and his standing to talk to him about a project being curtailed because it would cost something. The Army naturally is trained to look at the other side of the question entirely.

Somebody must look at it from the side of the taxpayer; and my opinion is that by reason of the frequency with which the House has to return to its constituency they, perhaps, have a keener sense of what the people are thinking of than have we.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I make one further observation?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The observation I am about to make, of course, must not be construed as a reflection in any manner upon the other body, but I am inclined very strongly to believe that when the House voted for the amendment in the face of the protest of the committee they—not all of them, but a great many—thought that they were voting for an Army reduced to 150,000 men and held there. They were not; there was a misunderstanding there, it is very evident.

Mr. BORAH. We could very easily change this bill so that it would provide an Army of 150,000 men and leave it at that number. All we would have to do would be to change the figures in the appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. At that point, Mr. President, the bill carries $83,000,000 for the pay of the enlisted men of the Army. The estimate of the War Department for a minimum of 150,000 men was $82,879,000—almost the exact amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill. The amount appropriated will pay a larger number of men by reason of the repeal of the reenlistment bonus provision; but there was, according to the estimate of the War Department—the estimate upon which I acted—the idea that this appropriation would provide substantially for a minimum of 150,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator from Wisconsin have in mind a minimum of 150,000, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The appropriation will provide for a minimum of about 167,000 men, inclusive of the Philippine Scouts. We are so close together that very few people can see the difference.

Mr. BORAH. Is there no accurate estimate as to what appropriation would be necessary to provide for an Army of 150,000 men and hold it there?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is.

Mr. BORAH. What is that amount?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Wisconsin has just stated it.

Mr. LENROOT. The amount is $82,879,000.

Mr. BORAH. One other question: If this bill should provide for 150,000 men, and the Army were to be held there, the question of the amount could be changed even in conference, could it not, to correspond to the necessary number determined upon? Although we should not change the figure here, it would be a matter for the conferees, would it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The figure arrived at in conference must be between the figures of the House and the Senate bills, respectively?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. If, however, the bill carries the amount which the Senate committee has recommended, but provides that the Army shall be fixed at 150,000 men and remain there, then we would have the figures between the two amounts and the conferees could agree upon the amount necessary for an Army of 150,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We could.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Idaho whether he contemplated in that reduction that there should be a peremptory fixing of the number at 150,000 or that it should reach that minimum level by the process of expiration of enlistments, if I have made myself clear?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I had assumed from what the Senator from New York has said that if we should immediately reduce it we would have to violate the contract of enlistment, and so forth, which I am not advocating.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the chairman of the committee take the position that we can not by law authorize the reduction without violating the contract of enlistment? I grant that there is no law now to permit the Secretary to do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I think we can by law.

UMI

Mr. LENROOT. But with the provision of the Borah amendment, I take it, directing the Secretary to reduce the Army to the amount of the appropriation, that would be sufficient authority for the Secretary to discharge arbitrarily as many as might be necessary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, I did not pretend that we could not pass an act directing the arbitrary discharge of a soldier; but without the passage of such an act the Secretary of War has no right to do it, and I hope no such act ever will be passed.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin whether he feels that it would be fair to the men who have enlisted, say, for two years or three years to separate them from the service by legislation before the expiration of their terms?

Mr. LENROOT. So far as the men are concerned I do not think there would be any unfairness, because their contracts of enlistment provide for two years or three years, as the case may be, unless sooner discharged.

Mr. KING. I was expressing no opinion. I simply wanted to get the view of the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. But with the provision of the Borah amendment coupled with the other provision with reference to resignations reducing the number to 170,000 men, it should be recognized that those are two distinct propositions. It is not a reduction of the Army to 170,000 men; it is merely a provision that applications for discharge shall be granted until the Army is reduced to 170,000 men. Then the Secretary of War will not be compelled or authorized to grant applications; but we might give him arbitrary power to discharge to a lower number than the 170,000 men fixed in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York whether, in estimating the difference in expense between an average army of 150,000 and the number provided by the House bill, which reduces it to 120,000, the cost of sending the discharged soldiers home has been taken into consideration, and also the pay when a man is enlisted and sent to his regiment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President; that was discussed in the committee. I had not discussed it on the floor. If the House appropriation should prevail and the Army should be reduced to 120,000 men at the end of the fiscal year, then, of course, right away, if the House still agreed to the proposition that the Army should be really 150,000 men, you would have to recruit 30,000 men, with all the expense of recruiting and new uniforms and transportation and equipment, and you would spend some millions right there in getting the Army back to 150,000 men, which apparently was the intention of most of the Members of the House anyway. I do not agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho; but the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho to the effect that the Army should be reduced to 150,000 men and held there is far different from the provision of the House.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have included in the RECORD a table bearing on the subject we have just been discussing.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Estimated average enlisted strength of the Army during the fiscal year 1922, based upon losses by expiration of term of service and other normal causes and no original enlistments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the reason I suggested that the Army be reduced to 150,000 and held there is because I know that it could not be reduced below that number. The votes can not be had to do it. It was not expressing my view of it. What I would do would be to reduce it to 100,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That, of course, would require the arbitrary discharge of thousands of men.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I did not mean that I would reduce it to 100,000, except in the process of the expiration of their service, and so forth. Since the Senator from Wisconsin has stated the terms of the enlistment, I am not so sure that we would not have the right to do so; but I should not want to have the appearance of violating a contract, and for that reason I would only reduce it in accordance with the terms for which the bill already provides.

Mr. President, I want to say just a word—because I have no desire to delay this bill—as to why I am going, if I can get an opportunity, to vote at least to hold down the Army to 150,000 men, and possibly, if I get an opportunity, to reduce it below that number.

The whole question turns upon the proposition of the safety of the security which we will have if we reduce it to 150,000, or should reduce it below that. As I understand, the Army of 150,000 or an Army of 175,000 are, in the opinions of those who advocate them, respectively, simply estimated at that figure because they believe that that amount is necessary for police purposes. No one would stop with an Army of 150,000 or 170,000 if we contemplated difficulty with a foreign power. Even if we contemplated a difficulty with Mexico, we would not be satisfied with an Army of 170,000 men or 150,000. We are maintaining an Army at a figure which we think will be sufficient, as it were, to police the situation in the United States, to keep order, as it were, and so forth.

Permit me to say, in passing, that the action of the President of the United States with reference to West Virginia leads me to believe that this administration will not utilize the United States Army quite so often for police purposes, which I most heartily indorse. I do not see why we need an Army above 100,000 or 120,000 men, at most, merely for police purposes.

I recognize the strength of the argument made by the Senator from New York as to a speedy change of the entire Army situation, and I do not undertake to controvert it. I admit for the purpose of this debate, as he states it, that it would have to a certain extent a bad effect upon the morale of the Army; but, Mr. President, there is the morale of the entire community of the United States, in which we are very deeply interested at this time; and I am very certain that unless we can find some way by which to reduce the Government's expenditures, the morale of the citizenship of the United States is going to be very badly impaired in the next few years. I am very certain that it is in a very unfortunate condition now, and it is for that reason and for no other that I seem to be persistent in trying to curtail expenditures to a point to which I believe we can curtail them and yet be within the line of security and perfect safety.

The President in his first address to Congress advised us that the present expenditures of the Government were unbearable; that they could not be continued; that there must be relief from such burdens. I am not quoting his exact language, but I am quoting the exact substance, the principle, of what he stated. The Secretary of the Treasury advised us a short time afterwards, after a thorough study of the matter, that while the Government's expenses are shocking and unbearable, there is no way to reduce them within the coming years, at least, except through the Army and the Navy appropriations. So we have the matter reduced to a very simple proposition. The President is perfectly conscious of the situation. The Secretary of the Treasury states that the only way in which the relief can be had which the President says must be granted is through the reduction of the Army and the Navy. So we are in the position that we must say to the people of the United States, "Your taxes must continue as they are, and the burden must remain as it is, unless we can cut savagely," as the Senator from New York said, though I think he used the term inappropriately in that particular instance, because I do not think it was a savage cut. Unless we can cut savagely upon these two items, there is no possible relief from the great burden which the Government is now imposing upon the people, and it is for this reason, taking the words of the President and the words of his Secretary of the Treasury, that it seems to me that we ought to be willing to do even that which the Senator from New York says will be the result of the cut, and that is, in a sense, to impair the morale of the Army.

I call attention also, Mr. President, to the statement of Prof. Seligman before the Committee on Finance a few days ago. That is the committee which is now dealing with the complex and very difficult problem of how to adjust these taxes, to shift them from one point to another, so as to relieve the sore place as much as possible until the other place becomes sore, and how to adjust the revenues of the Government—such a distressing proposition, as they inform us, that it is almost impossible to get started. Prof. Seligman said in his statement:

Secretary Mellon estimates that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1921 will be a little over five and a half billions, and for 1922 a little over four and a half billions. He does not, however, include in these estimates the postal expenditures, which, roughly speaking, amount to about another half billion. Our probable total expenditures may therefore be put at about six billions for 1921 and at about five billions for 1922.

I stop here to venture this opinion—I will not call it a prophecy, but I venture this opinion: Judging the future by the past, instead of being five billions for 1922 it will reach five and a half or six billions, and I see the items coming now which will cover that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. The bills which are proposed, the expenditures which are in contemplation and which have the practical indorsement of the administration and the party, will carry that item to five and a half or to six billion dollars.

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator has not included in that estimate the bonus. I make the prediction that the expenditures for 1922 will exceed $7,500,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. If we include the bonus, of course. I was not including that.

Prof. Seligman says:

In view of the fact that our prewar expenditures were about one billion ($983,000,000 in 1914), we may agree with the Secretary in characterizing the outlook as "shocking."

One billion in 1914 and five to six billions in 1922.

Bad as our situation is, however, it must not be forgotten that it is less unsatisfactory than that of the other participants in the war, with the sole exception of Japan.

But really, Mr. President, there is very little consolation in that fact, because the extremely bad situation in these other countries is visited by reflection upon this country in view of the fact that the large sums expended abroad are being expended not for purposes of reproduction and rebuilding, but for purposes of creating the instruments which do not bring prosperity or contentment. Again says Prof. Seligman:

This is all the more obvious as the Secretary's figures represent only the probable minimum of expenditures. Unless the very greatest care is exercised the expenditures will be considerably larger. It may be interesting to rearrange and complete the estimates in the Secretary's table in order to see at a glance where any important retrenchment is possible.

Then he gives the figures, as follows:

	1921	1922
Military	$1,028	$568
Naval	697	543
	1,735	1,111
Interest	975	975
Sinking fund	283	265
	1,258	1,240
War-risk insurance	233	262
Pensions	272	265
	505	527
Railroads	804	545
Shipping Board	103	124
	907	669
	4,405	3,547
Post Office	467	495
Public debt redemption (excluding sinking fund, as above)	343	285
Miscellaneous expenditures	854	834
	6,069	5,161

Reducing the above table to rough figures in billions, it would come out something like this:

	1921	1922
Military and naval expenditures	1¾	1
Interest and amortization of debt	1¼	1¼
Insurance and pensions	½	½
Railroad and shipping	1	½
Retirement of the debt	¼	¼
Post Office	½	½
General governmental expenditures	½	½

Prof. Seligman continues:

In other words, virtually the entire increase of the budget, as will be evident from the first five items, is due to the war; and whereas in future years we may expect a diminution in the expenditures for railroads and shipping, it is obvious that the only possible retrenchment of any serious consequence is in the military and naval rubric. Unless a policy of ruthless reduction in the appropriations for these purposes is followed by the present Congress, we must even be prepared for an additional half billion of outlay.

At the time that Prof. Seligman made that statement he was making it not upon the savings which the Senate committee had made by reason of reducing the large estimates which had been made but he was making it at a time when the bills had been reported both from the Committee on Naval Affairs and from the Committee on Military Affairs, and he had in contemplation evidently the necessity of cutting these appropriations as they had been reported. He continued:

Only to the extent that future years will bring our military and naval expenditures down to the prewar figures of about a half a billion will any notable reduction in taxation be at all possible. Compared with the huge figures that will surely be needed for interest and amortization, for insurance and pensions, and for the War and Navy Departments, the amount of possible savings in the ordinary expenses of government is insignificant. The two immediate problems of policy which loom large from the fiscal point of view are thus a retardation in the tempo of debt payment and a slashing of the Army and Navy expenses.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have seen the statement, but I do not know whether it is true or not, as to the percentage of the cost of war in comparison with the total expenses of the Government. Has the Senator made an estimate of what percentage of the money raised by taxes goes for war purposes—what percentage of this five or six billion goes for war purposes?

Mr. BORAH. Ninety-three per cent for wars past and wars anticipated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have seen the figure stated at 93 per cent. But how is it now?

Mr. BORAH. That is what it is now.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ninety-three per cent?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of this five or six billion, 93 per cent goes for war purposes?

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely it.

Mr. KING. Past, present, and future.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so. In other words, if we should cut out the entire 7 per cent, upon which we run the Government of the United States, aside from these other items, we would only reduce the estimates, so far as the taxpayers are concerned, a comparatively small fraction. The 93 per cent of itself can not be reduced very much, except in two items. We can not reduce pensions, and we can not reduce those other items with respect to the interest upon war debts, and such things as that. There are only two items which we can reduce, as the professor said, and that is in the expenditures for the Army and the expenditures for the Navy.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have not reduced the Navy appropriations any.

Mr. BORAH. Not yet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may be of interest for me to interject the observation here that the so-called 1916 program for the Army has been completely abandoned.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and perhaps the Senator from New York sometimes supposes that the Senator from Idaho is seeking to criticize the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. I am not. In fact, in view of the action of some other committees, the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has shown a proper spirit. I have not any doubt at all but what the able chairman and the members of that committee are just as anxious to relieve the taxpayers of this country as I am. I am assuming to myself no particular virtue in that respect whatever. I simply differ with them as to the point to which we can go. I conceive that it is possible to reduce the Army. We can save at least $25,000,000 and I believe we could save $70,000,000 in that item, and I want to say that in my judgment there could not anything take place here in the Senate which would inspire with more confidence for the future the citizenship of this country than to see the Congress of the United States really cut in regard to these expenditures. We know that business is discouraged and industry is demoralized, that there are 5,000,000 men out of employment, and if there is anything needed to encourage them it is to know that the Congress of the United States is endeavoring to reach them in every possible way and relieve their burdens. It is the morale of the people out through the country we must take into consideration as well as the morale of the Army of the United States. We will need a much less Army for police purposes in this country during the next 10 years if we relieve the people from taxation than we will if we do not.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator what number of fighting men he thinks we would require at all times in continental United States?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not building this Army on the theory of fighting men in the United States for the next five years.

Mr. FLETCHER. My idea of fighting men is men who can handle guns and actually do combat service when called upon to do it, not counting the roustabouts and civilians, the men who do not fight and can not fight and never expect to fight, but real combat men, and that sort of thing, the kind of men who are depended on to actually do the combat work in case of trouble. How many does the Senator think we ought to have of those men in continental United States at all times?

Mr. BORAH. I have said that if I had my way about it, I would reduce the Army, commissioned men and all, to 100,000 men.

Mr. FLETCHER. If you had an Army of 126,000 men you would have just about 25,000 fighting men in the United States proper—just about 25,000.

Mr. BORAH. How many do you have in the United States under the present figures?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Between fifty and sixty thousand, altogether.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President, in all candor, 25,000 or 30,000 men, so far as carrying on any war with any foreign Government is concerned, or repelling a foreign foe, would be worth just as much to us as 50,000. We could not, in other words, depend upon that sized Army for such a purpose. But I have no doubt but that for the purpose of policing this country we can have better police regulation by reducing taxes than we can by having soldiers to guard the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, the Senator believes that if there were no police necessities at all we would not have to have any Army in the continental United States? It seems to me that is where he is driving.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is that the Senator's belief?

Mr. BORAH. In other words, I might say that the Senator has reduced it to 50,000; I would reduce it to 25,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On the theory that the 50,000 is no better than the 25,000 for any purpose of actual combat?

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so, if it is combat with a foreign foe; and if it is merely keeping order at home, then reduction of taxes will do more for order and law than soldiers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the same argument, the 25,000 is no better than 5,000 for actual combat, and where do we get—down to zero?

Mr. BORAH. I arrive at the same destination exactly at which the Senator from New York arrives.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Senator does not.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, I do; precisely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I can not see where the Senator is going.

Mr. BORAH. Because for foreign service or repelling a foreign foe the Senator's army is no better than mine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do not call it "the Senator's army." I would not have anything like that.

Mr. BORAH. Senators refer to my army. I feel that I have just as much right to refer to the Senator's army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York has some regard for the training feature of the Army. I think it is a wise thing to have at least 50,000 soldiers in the United States thoroughly trained.

Mr. BORAH. Why does the Senator say 50,000? Why does he not say 75,000 or 100,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is twice as wise to have 50,000 as 25,000.

Mr. BORAH. And the Senator to be really wise would have 500,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not think we need that many.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly so. Where is the line of demarcation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The line of demarcation is drawn with common sense.

Mr. BORAH. Nobody has any common sense except the Military Affairs Committee and the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. The Senator is imputing thoughts to me which I do not entertain. If the Senator will indulge me just a moment, I do not mean to interrupt his statement——

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has talked about the Army being for nothing but police purposes. I do not agree with that. If that assumption of his were correct, then we would not need a Regular Army. What is the use of it? Other sorts of persons can do police work.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many National Guard have we?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Ninety-eight thousand to-day in the National Guard; some excellent, some good, some mediocre. Some of the units are very, very new. Within a year or two they will be very good.

Mr. REED. I sent the Senator an inquiry just a moment ago about that, but since the question has been answered as to that item, let me ask the Senator if the National Guard are not now rapidly increasing, being rapidly recruited, and their efficiency greatly increased?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should say that the rate of increase is moderately rapid and very healthy. I would rather have it slow and healthy than rapid and unhealthy. The guard is certainly on a much better basis than ever before. I will be perfectly frank to say to the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho that when the guard is built up in accordance with the ideas which the committee had which drew the Army reorganization act, into a splendid force of trained citizens, you can reduce your Regular Army. It is going to take two or three years to do it, and then we can reduce the Regular Army again, but I do insist that the Regular Army has some functions other than as policemen. I think they are the nucleus of training for whatever force we have to defend this country.

Mr. BORAH. I was taking the Senator's statement in the debate made at the last session of Congress, which I thought was a very wise statement, that the only object of maintaining an Army at this time was for police purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator did not make the statement in those terms, by any means.

Mr. BORAH. I will endeavor to get the statement before the debate ends and read it into the RECORD, so that I will not misstate the Senator. But I gave particular attention to his statement, and I quote him in substance.

Mr. REED. I wanted to ask the Senator from New York if it is not a fact that a very large percentage of the present National Guard as formed and in the process of development is being formed out of soldiers who saw service during the last war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true as to the commissioned officers of the Guard, but not as to the enlisted men, so far as my information goes. Most of the enlisted men are new. Most of the officers are veterans.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President, there has been a great change of view in regard to what sized Army is necessary. We have been constantly reducing it, and those who urged a reduction a year and a half ago were looked upon then as being somewhat unreasonable, but we have now gotten down to the point for which we were contending a year and a half ago. So I think, Mr. President, that there are many things which enter into our opinion in regard to this, and that which is not regarded as common sense to-day by some may be regarded as common sense to-morrow. For that reason I venture to make some suggestions at this time which do not seem to be based upon common sense.

I wish to ask our Republican friends on this side of the Chamber what are you going to do about the question of economy? What is your program? What is your plan? There is no provision anywhere for reducing expenses or reducing taxes. There is no program to that effect. If you do not cut the Army appropriations and the Navy appropriations, where are you going to reduce? I do not see any member of the Finance Committee here except the honorable Member from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but I should like to know, in view of the constant discussion of the question upon the part of Republican leaders that the taxes now are unbearable and that they must be reduced, when and where they are going to reduce them? Where is the program?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a Democrat to reply?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not think so.

Mr. KING. If the Democrat quotes a Republican, will the Senator permit the Democrat to reply?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KING. One of the distinguished members of the Finance Committee, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], stated in taking testimony before the committee when a Mr. Miller was being interrogated only a few days ago, that instead of there being a reduction in taxation the taxes would be increased. Mr. Miller expressed his regret that there could not be a reduction of taxation and the senior Senator from Utah expressed his regret that there could be no reduction, but there seemed to be an absolute concurrence of opinion that there would be none. The senior Senator from Utah stated that there would be an increase. So I say to my Republican friend from Idaho that his party not only will not reduce taxation and not produce economies, but will increase taxation and will increase the expenses of the Government.

Mr. BORAH. That is not the kind of doctrine I wanted to hear, but I am afraid it is true.

Said the New York Herald of June 3—I could quote many other papers, but I quote the Herald because it has been giving particular attention to this matter, and I presume is not unfriendly to the administration, and is certainly entitled to speak to the Republican leaders, as it did its full share in putting them in power:

The one outstanding lesson of the series of articles which the New York Herald is publishing about the Federal Government's continued squander in the face of the imperative need to save is that Congress appropriates and the administrative spenders do not know how to economize. They do not know how to stop the waste, because they do not know where the waste is.

For the present fiscal year (ending with this month) the Democratic heads of departments asked for $5,064,350,793, and this was hailed as wild extravagance. The Republican Congress cut those estimates and appropriated to meet the revised items $3,717,441,484, and this was acclaimed by the legislative body as heroic economizing. But Secretary Mellon, of the Treasury, figures that when the year closes four weeks from now the actual spending will have been $5,602,024,861—

A little over $600,000,000 more than the estimates made by the Democratic heads of departments, which were criticized as being extravagant.

If the cost of the Postal Service is added, the spendings will have exceeded $6,000,000,000, as against the five billions of original estimates and the three and three-quarters billions of appropriations.

The estimates for the new fiscal year were $5,259,515,574. The appropriations (with estimates for the Army and Navy bills) have been $3,306,029,647. Secretary Mellon figures the actual spending, not including Postal Service, will be $4,565,877,033. Congress, in other words, went through the motion of saving for the approaching new fiscal year a billion and four hundred millions from the demands of the spenders. But without the Post Office figures the spendings will be three-quarters of a billion dollars more than the appropriations. With the postal items counted in the spendings as they were in the estimates, the actual spendings will be nearly a billion and a quarter of dollars more.

The article then concludes by saying:

But the plain truth about this sort of ramshackle business management and financial profligacy, now that revenues are growing scarcer and scarcer, is that unless the United States Government, legislative and administrative, buckles down to the job of saving money instead of talking about it, the National Treasury will be headed for the rocks, and the party in control of the Government will have to face a reckoning with the public.

I ask to have the entire article inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON of Georgia in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald.]

WILD GOVERNMENT SPENDING.

The one outstanding lesson of the series of articles which the New York Herald is publishing about the Federal Government's continued squander in the face of the imperative need to save is that Congress appropriates and the administrative spenders do not know how to economize. They do not know how to stop the waste because they do not know where the waste is.

For the present fiscal year (ending with this month) the Democratic heads of departments asked for $5,064,350,793, and this was hailed as wild extravagance. The Republican Congress cut those estimates and appropriated to meet the revised items $3,717,441,484, and this was acclaimed by the legislative body as heroic economizing. But Secretary Mellon of the Treasury figures that when the year closes four weeks from now the actual spending will have been $5,602,024,861, not counting Post Office outlay, which was included in the original estimates and the appropriations. If the cost of the Postal Service is added, the spendings will have exceeded $6,000,000,000, as against the five billions of original estimates and the three and three-quarter billions of appropriations.

The estimates for the new fiscal year were $5,259,515,574. The appropriations (with estimates for the Army and Navy bills) have been $3,806,029,647. Secretary Mellon figures the actual spendings, not including Postal Service, will be $4,565,877,083. Congress, in other words, went through the motion of saving for the approaching new fiscal year a billion and four hundred millions from the demands of the spenders. But without the Post Office figures the spendings will be three-quarters of a billion of dollars more than the appropriations. With the postal items counted in the spendings as they were in the estimates, the actual spendings will be nearly a billion and a quarter of dollars more.

How the Government used to appropriate and spend may be judged by some comparisons before the war. For 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914 the appropriations were a little in excess of a billion dollars every year; the expenditures ranged between $919,000,000 for 1910 and $1,025,698,578 for 1914.

In 1917 the appropriations were $1,625,419,995 and the expenditures $3,046,183,746. In 1918 the appropriations were $18,892,027,501 and the expenditures $21,813,356,508. In 1919 the appropriations were $27,065,148,690 and the expenditures $35,129,566,706.

Since the war the gross overspending of appropriations has continued, as explained in detail in the first part of this article. The spenders have spent regardless of what the Congress appropriators had given them to spend. Then the Congress appropriators, by means of deficiency bills or other more or less secret measures to dig the spenders out, have given them the difference under the table, so to speak, where the public could not see the special squander allowances or know about them until after they were gone and all but forgotten.

But the plain truth about this sort of ramshackle business management and financial profligacy, now that revenues are growing scarcer and scarcer, is that unless the United States Government, legislative and administrative, buckles down to the job of saving money instead of talking about it, the National Treasury will be headed for the rocks, and the party in control of the Government will have to face a reckoning with the public.

Mr. BORAH. The anxiety of the public has been lulled to a certain extent by the fact that we have passed a budget bill, and there seems to be a supposition that there will be an inherent power within the budget bill, within the law, operating separate and apart from the individuals who operate it, which will compel the saving of public money. Of course, the budget bill will be absolutely worthless unless the attitude of mind of Congress and the mind of the departments wholly change. The budget bill in and of itself is simply an instrument or a means in the hands of those who really desire to save—who propose to systematize and to save—but if our attitude of mind continues the same, if the departments continue to make their estimates, and we continue to appropriate as we have, and our desire to curtail is no greater than it is now, the budget system will be simply a delusion and a snare, and it will save not a dollar for the people of the United States.

The only place where we can save is right here in these two bodies, the Senate and the House, by those who are elected by the people and sent here, and into whose command and keeping is given absolutely the control of the Treasury of the United States. No one else can save. We must ourselves make up our minds to the one proposition that we have simply got to cut these expenditures almost regardless in order to save the situation throughout the country, so far as the tax burdens are concerned. After we have done that, after we have cut these expenditures in so far as we dare to do, the tax burdens of the United States will still be so great that there will be plenty of complaint—and justly so—upon the part of the people. It is not therefore with any desire to find fault with the able committee which has brought in the bill, nor to challenge their good intentions, generally speaking, but it is with the hope that we will upon further reflection come to the conclusion that the burden rests upon us to do this. The duty is ours, and there is no escape from it.

There is one other proposition which I venture to mention, as it has come into the discussion to-day, because it is a part really of the entire proposition; at least it attaches itself to the question which we are now discussing. It has to do with the question of reducing the size of the Army, in my judgment, and reducing the size of the Navy. It has to do with the question of restoring normalcy throughout the country. That is the question of establishing a state of peace.

It is now approaching three years since the armistice was signed. For nearly three years we have been, as a matter of fact, at peace with Germany, and yet at the end of nearly three years we are technically in a state of war with Germany. It is a very large item, indeed, in the question of getting back to normal conditions and of trade resuming its proper function and entering the channels through which it was formerly accustomed or wont to pass. It is very much greater than the mere proposition of establishing a technical state of peace. It has to do with the entire question of the economic condition of the United States and of the world.

Not only have we failed to establish a technical state of peace, but we have done that which in my judgment, unless we surely and speedily remedy our course, was most unfortunate. We started to do it and then have failed. If there was any one distinct pledge made to the people of the United States in the last campaign which was clear and simple in its statement, easily comprehended, and which apparently a vast majority of the people understood and indorsed, it was that as soon as the party asking for power should be admitted to power it would establish a state of peace. The President in his speech of acceptance stated in substance that a state of peace would be established as soon as the Republican Congress could pass it and he could attach his signature to it.

I venture to say that there is not a man in this Chamber or in the House who went before the people for election who did not give them to understand that one of the first and speediest acts of the Republican Party would be to establish a state of peace.

We have an overwhelming majority in the House and an overwhelming majority in the Senate, and the executive department is Republican from turret to foundation stone; and yet we stand before the country, we stand before the world, as unable to pass a simple resolution establishing a state of peace.

UMI

We have not only been criticized by the opposition press, but we are now being apologized for by our own press, and we have become the subject and butt of ridicule by the foreign press. The Congress of the United States is unable to formulate a proposition which restores by law that which in fact exists.

We are kept in a state of uncertainty and unrest, and many arguments are made for expenditures for this and for that, for the Army and for the Navy, based upon the proposition that the world is still restless and in a state of war. I am not seeking to criticize any one individual, but as the party having control of the Government we ought to pass a resolution of peace, regardless of the particular wording of it, which will accomplish that which the people desire, to establish that condition between this country and Germany. So far as I am individually concerned, I would go further, but I shall not inject that into the debate at this time. When this matter reaches a voting point I shall undertake to get a vote upon the question of holding the Army at 150,000 men, not as representing my views, but because I realize there is no possible chance to do anything further. I would, had I the power, reduce it to 100,000 and feel that in doing so I would be rendering a great service to the people of our country and not endangering their safety or security in the least.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the statements made by the Senator from Idaho. I agree with him entirely that the crying need at the present time is establishing the cost of this Government upon an economical basis. But I do not think that this effort to save approximately $3,000,000 is the practical way to do it, as far as the cost of the Army is concerned.

I admit that I was startled with the estimates this year of over $300,000,000 to maintain an Army that previous to the World War cost only about $100,000,000 or $110,000,000; but the situation since then has changed. We are not entirely out of trouble. The condition of the country is restless; it is necessary for us to maintain a certain number of troops in Germany. Furthermore, when the committee reviewed the entire situation we were also influenced by the statement of the Secretary of War, who is better informed than we are as to the situation, and who urged that the Army at the present time be not reduced below 175,000 men.

The question of the size of the Army is only a matter of judgment. How many men does this country need for its national defense? Let me point out to the Senate that the Army is not only a police force but it is also a reserve to maintain law and order and to protect the property of the citizens of the country. When the World War broke out, we had a standing Army of 102,000 men, and to-day the high taxes that we are paying are largely due to the false military policy which we then maintained. We had no proper military organizations, and we were compelled to spend thirty billions where we would only have been compelled to spend half that had we had a proper organization so that we could have expanded the Army as was necessary for the requirements and needs of the great World War. All Senators know the confusion, the chaos that existed when that war began.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator will wait until I shall have finished, I shall then be glad to answer any question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey declines to yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The high cost of the war was due largely to the fact that we had no organization. The Military Affairs Committee studied this question in view of the experiences we had during the war. That committee had before them all of the generals who fought on the other side of the ocean, and they also had the department chiefs before them. Then they framed an Army reorganization bill, based upon the theory that at some future time it might be necessary for this country again to take up arms. In order to avoid the mistakes and the expensive costs that were necessary during the late war, the Army reorganization bill was framed. It provided for certain machinery in order that the Army might be expanded to 2,000,000 men if necessary. Then it provided as a skeleton a minimum number of men.

Mr. REED. How many?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It figured on a minimum of 240,000 men. That was the judgment of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate at that time. Am I right, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The basic law authorized a maximum for the Regular Army of 280,000 enlisted men. It was not the intention of the committee that it should be left at that number all the time, and it has not been.

Mr. REED. But the recommendation of the Military Affairs Committee was for 500,000 men, was it not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. REED. But Congress cut the number to 240,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To 280,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. To 280,000 men.

Mr. REED. It was thought that 280,000 was the least we should possibly have, then?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President; that should not be understood in that way, unless the Senator from Missouri sides with Secretary Baker in that controversy. The law provided a maximum authorized strength of 280,000 men for the Regular Army. Mr. Baker insisted that it was, therefore, mandatory upon him to recruit that number. The committee and Congress said, "There is nothing mandatory in the law; you do not have to recruit to that number"; but he insisted upon trying to do it. I personally went and begged him to stop recruiting.

That was last December. However, he paid no attention, but went on and increased the number up to 240,000 men. Congress finally intervened and passed a resolution ordering him to stop recruiting until the Army had been reduced to 175,000 men. President Wilson, at Mr. Baker's request, no doubt, vetoed the bill. We passed it over his veto, only one Senator voting against it here in the Senate. That action of the Secretary of War—mistaken, I believe—is the cause of all our trouble to-day. We had a swollen force, which we did not want and did not need.

Mr. REED. The Senator from New York is discussing one question while I am inquiring about another.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator said that we thought we could not get along with less than 280,000 men.

Mr. REED. I did state it in that way, but let me tell the Senator what I had in mind and what is borne out by my previous question. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] was discussing the question of the War Department having evolved a plan by which we could expand our force and avoid——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator is mistaken in that. The Military Affairs Committee and not the War Department evolved the plan.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee rejected the department plan.

Mr. REED. I am trespassing on the time of the Senator from New Jersey, but I am really anxious to get the facts.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I refused to yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] but I shall immediately yield to him, in view of the fact that I have yielded to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. What was the military authorities' plan for an Army?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. For an Army of 576,000 men.

Mr. REED. Very well. Congress got hold of that, and it was pared down to 280,000, was it not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That was the maximum which was authorized.

Mr. REED. And now, after that, Congress pared it down to 175,000 men?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. REED. But the military authorities still stood for 540,000 men. They never have changed their plans, have they?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think they have changed their ideas.

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The answer to the Senator's question depends upon whom we call "the military authorities."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will not the Senator from Missouri define whom he means by "military authorities."

Mr. REED. I do not include the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, because I know they are not military authorities, for I once had a membership on that committee. They are, however, a group of Senators who are very earnestly trying to do their duty, and I think they have done very well in many respects. By "the military authorities" I mean the officers of the Army who came here with a plan and laid it down and said "This is what is necessary." Now, we have gotten down to 175,000, and I understand the matter in dispute is whether we shall have 150,000 men as against 175,000 men in the Army.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is true.

Mr. REED. And, according to the plan of the Army officers, 175,000 men are utterly inadequate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know what their present views may be.

Mr. BORAH. It is the judgment of civilians.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is the judgment of the committee who were authorized by the Senate to study this question and report the proposed legislation to this body.

Mr. BORAH. That is all true enough, but at last it is the judgment of civilians.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly so; we are civilians.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; I hope we are. In other words, it is not the plan that has been submitted to us by "the military authorities."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Again may I ask what the Senator means by "military authorities"? If the Senator really wants to know where the suggestion as to an Army of 576,000 men came from, I will tell him it came from about four officers out of the entire Army. They happened to be at the head of the department at the time. I know as well as I am standing here that if a vote had been taken amongst the commissioned officers of the Regular Army the vote would have been 20 to 1 against any such proposal.

Mr. REED. Who were the four officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Chief of Staff and the assistant chiefs of staff under Mr. Baker.

Mr. REED. They were at the head of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but there are other military authorities.

Mr. REED. But the other military authorities did not come forward and recommend a plan for a smaller number, did they?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Indeed, they did; they appeared before our committee by the dozens and opposed the proposal to create an Army of 576,000 men.

Mr. REED. What number did they suggest?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They suggested an Army of 150,000, 250,000, 350,000, and so on.

Mr. REED. Then, there were some officers who placed the number as low as 150,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were very few.

Mr. REED. Were they as many as were in favor of an Army of 500,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should say that the average suggestion was for an Army of about 225,000 men. The military officers have not been quite so militaristic as the Senator from Missouri has endeavored to portray them. As a matter of fact, some of the highest ranking officers of the Army came before the committee and denounced the plan of the War Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not object to the colloquy going on.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to say that the plan proposing an Army of 500,000 men plus was brought forward by the gentlemen who insisted that the millenium was about to be introduced?

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the time that the bill proposing an Army of 576,000 was proposed, and it was stated that that number would be necessary in order that the United States might carry out its international obligations, the covenant of the League of Peace or the League of Nations, or whatever it is, was pending in the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Now, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to ask me any question, I will be very glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. KING. I do not care to interrupt the Senator at this time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It simply resolves itself into the question whether we shall have an Army of 175,000 or 150,000. Which is the better policy? The Senator from Idaho urges the lower minimum as a matter of economy, but the Military Affairs Committee believe that if the Army is reduced below 175,000 it will destroy the skeleton organization which has been provided under the present national defense act, which Congress itself has passed. The question is whether we shall have an Army of 175,000 men, which the Military Affairs Committee believe is necessary for the national defense and necessary to maintain the organization, or whether the Army shall be impaired, whether that organization shall be impaired by being reduced to 150,000 men by virtue of the pending bill, and approximately $3,000,000 thereby saved. That is the question, is it not?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey, with unusual candor, has stated what I have suspected all the time, that what we need is 175,000 enlisted men in order to give justification for the existence of commissioned officers to the number of 14,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Oh, not at all. I think the Senator will not accuse me of any intrigue or any effort in that direction. I am perfectly sincere in this matter.

Mr. BORAH. I know the Senator is, and he stated the proposition with absolute candor; but if he will read the RECORD he will find what I have said to be accurate. That, in my judgment, is the reason for the demand for the increased number. We have 14,000 commissioned officers who are costing us $52,000,000 a year, and if we undertake to cut the Army to 100,000 men we can not find any possible thing for them to do.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have no thought of keeping the Army up to 175,000 men in order to keep 14,000 commissioned officers in their jobs.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I know the Senator wishes to be accurate; but there is no proposition before the Senate coming through the Military Affairs Committee for an Army of 175,000 men. The maximum is 170,000, and the appropriation made by this bill is for less than 170,000. According to my view, it will bring the Army down to a minimum of between 150,000 and 160,000 men and not 175,000 men.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly I was in error. I was speaking of the estimate made by the committee as the bill was presented. That is the position that I am taking, that the Army should be kept at that figure. If it is 170,000 men, then my statement that the number was 175,000 men stands corrected.

Mr. LENROOT. The subcommittee did make such a report, but I think some members of the committee were not in accord with it, and they compromised by reducing the number to that now found in the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I said before, the saving is $3,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Why does the Senator say "$3,000,000"?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from New York has just stated to me that the difference between the estimate made by the committee and the effort by the Senator from Idaho to reduce this to a minimum of 150,000 is $3,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator contend that you can maintain the difference between 150,000 and 170,000, making 20,000, on $3,000,000 a year?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; but taking out the reenlistment figures——

Mr. BORAH. But we are taking those out anyhow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then it is probably $14,000,000 or $15,000,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, why is it not one-seventh of the whole amount?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is practically one-seventh of the whole amount, which is $87,000,000.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; if the Senator will pardon me, we propose to appropriate here for pay of the Army $164,000,000—I drop the odd figures—and for the Quartermaster Corps $110,000,000. That does not take into consideration the Ordnance Department or the Surgeon General's Department or many other things. One-seventh of that would be a much larger sum than the Senator has named.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will have the figure in a moment. When the war began we had an Army of 102,000 men. Now we are proposing an Army of 175,000. Why? There are new branches of the service. There is the Air Service, the Machine Gun Service, the Motor Transport Service, the Chemical Service; all new branches. Now, if this organization is to be kept up as modern armies are it is necessary, if the United States intends to have a skeleton Army which can expand, and an organization, to have a larger Army than we had before, and it is perfectly practicable that we should. If we had had an Army of 250,000 men at a certain period of the war and had we been able to send them across before the Russian breakdown undoubtedly the war would have ended a great deal sooner than it did, and the cost to this country would have been ten or twelve billion dollars less. Now, the question is whether the judgment of the committee as to the size of this Army is to be supported or whether the present organization is to be impaired by a still further reduction. We may be wrong; it might not be necessary to have 170,000 men, or even 100,000 men, but the best study we have given to this question is that the Army should not be reduced below this figure.

The Army is costing too much. Why? We are paying the men $30 a month. Before we entered the war we paid the men $15 a month, and now a commission is studying the question of the pay of enlisted men and the officers to determine if it can not be reduced, and undoubtedly there will be a saving there. It should be reduced. There are other expenses incurred. We give them vocational training; we give them commutation of quarters, and I think up to the time of the enactment of this bill there was a large appropriation for laundry work. None of these benefits were given the enlisted soldier before. To-day we are guarding with civilian personnel millions of dollars' worth of property and supplies and buildings, which have added to the cost, and when they are disposed of the cost of the Army will undoubtedly be still further reduced; so we hope that the next appropriation bill will be much less.

If you are going to economize, do not economize by reducing the size of the Army so low that it is not sufficient to maintain law and order and the national defense, but cut your Army pay; make your economies by the disposition of a lot of this property and the maintenance of a lot of these establishments, which I hope in the course of the year will be disposed of.

Then, to go on, I suppose the Senator from Idaho believes that the United States should continue in the shipping business.

I do not agree with him in that. If you want to save some money, introduce a bill to abolish the Shipping Board, and let the United States Government go out of the shipping business. To-day we have 10,000,000 tons of ocean-going tonnage, class A tonnage, taking out your Lake transportation and your coastwise vessels, and to-day you can buy ocean-going tonnage for $80 a ton. That is $800,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator supposes that the Senator from Idaho is in favor of that proposition, he is putting up a man of straw and knocking him down. He had better deal with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will deal with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to suggest that it would be doing the same thing with the Senator from Washington. The Senator from Washington brought in a bill here, and it passed through Congress, declaring for private ownership of American shipping; but so far as the abolishment of the Shipping Board is concerned, I want to say now that the Senator from New Jersey could not do a worse thing for shipping or the Government of the United States than to abolish it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I believe that it is necessary to keep the Shipping Board in existence long enough to liquidate the property that the United States owns and no longer.

Mr. BORAH. That will not be very long at the rate at which we are going.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I agree with the Senator; but to maintain a proposition of $800,000,000 worth of ships at a cost of $400,000,000 overhead, to my mind as a business man, is a rather disastrous proposition for the taxpayer and for the Government; and that is the condition that exists to-day. There is where money can be saved; but I do not believe that it is wise in the present condition and situation in the country to reduce the Army so low that in event of another war we will be less strong, and I therefore hope that the position of the committee will be supported.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the shipping matter, except simply to say that the Shipping Board is not maintained because we have a merchant fleet. We will need the Shipping Board after we get rid of our ships. We will need it more than we need it now to determine the administrative policies that we shall follow in aiding and encouraging and helping to upbuild American shipping.

I simply wanted to say that. A great many people who advocate the abolition of the Shipping Board seem to think that it is simply an agency to deal with Government-owned ships. The Shipping Board in its essential principle was a governmental agency long before we had this shipping. The shipping that we have is an incident of the war. It came to us undesired, because it was absolutely necessary. I want to see this liquidation carried on as rapidly as possible, but I do not think we can give our ships away.

I do not know what the Senator from New Jersey would do with this 10,000,000 of ships that we have. He does not want to get it into private ownership and have it handled by private parties, I think, any more earnestly than I do; but you could not get people to take these ships now and agree to run them if you would give them to them. There is not any market at all for them.

You could not sell them, and it is simply a situation that we have got to take care of in the best way we can. As I say, however, after the ships are disposed of we will need a Shipping Board to take the place and perform the functions of the British Board of Trade if we maintain American shipping. That is the purpose and the ultimate aim of the Shipping Board. Of course, that will not cost very much.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not want the Senator from Washington to assume that I am in any way opposed to the policy of the United States maintaining a merchant marine. I am not; but I do not believe that the Government should run ships in competition with private owners.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not believe that, either.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I also believe that as soon as possible these ships should be disposed of and, in fact, I am somewhat impatient at the delay at the present time in disposing of them. I do not believe that the Government of the United States should continue to try to operate these ships, but I believe that it should get them into private hands as soon as possible. I do not think very much effort is being made in that direction at the present time. When a new Shipping Board is appointed I hope that it will liquidate; and when it has liquidated, if we are to have a marine policy, I think it should be run by one of the departments of the Government, and not by a separate board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, of course, that just comes back to a difference of opinion as to the agency that we should use. After all, we have to use human agencies in dealing with these problems. The Senator from New Jersey wants to have this one dealt with by the bureaucratic red-tape delaying policies that necessarily follow in doing a great thing through a department. I think we could not do a worse thing for the American merchant marine than to put this great policy and this great enterprise under some bureaucratic department. We had better keep it in the hands of an agency that has power to act, that under the law is given authority to act, and that can be held responsible for nonaction.

I agree with the Senator from New Jersey that we have had delay. I hope it will end soon. It is up to this administration to end it. We ought to see to it that we have a board that will discharge its duty under the law. If it does not do it, then, of course, this administration can be very properly held responsible for its failure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator interests me with his remark that we ought to have a Shipping Board that will perform the functions now performed in Great Britain by the British Board of Trade.

The other day I received a letter from a gentleman who had written to the Shipping Board for a position to represent this Government in some foreign port. The reply received was that it was unnecessary to consider his application, because our business in foreign ports was now being attended to by British subjects in these respective ports. It occurs to me that we might save some money by abolishing the American Shipping Board altogether and turn it over to the British Board of Trade. As they already employ British subjects to handle American business, and refuse to employ Americans, it appears to me that we have reached a condition where we might just as well turn over to Great Britain the formal management of the business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the Senator that if we are to continue in that sort of policy, we had better do that. The British Board of Trade would not employ Americans to do the British business. I want to see the Shipping Board get around to the point where they will not employ aliens to do the business of this Government. There is too much of what the Senator just now mentioned.

Mr. REED. The statement of the gentleman who wrote me that letter was so astounding that I was inclined to think that he has some crank; but he inclosed the letter from the Shipping Board. I wrote them asking for a reason, but I have not yet received a reply.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There probably is not nearly so much of that as a good many people think, but there is not any doubt that there is a good deal of it.

Mr. REED. This letter indicated that it was the general rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably the writer was mistaken about that.

Mr. REED. No; I mean the letter from the Shipping Board indicated it. I shall be glad to produce it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has been going on to a considerable extent, I am satisfied, and I regret it very much. We can not build up American shipping in that way. We are simply playing into the hands of our competitors when we do it.

Mr. REED. That is just the reflex action we can expect from this pro-British propaganda that has been going on in this country, "Hands across the sea," and "Our beloved brethren." Our hands have gone across the sea, both of them. In one of them we have had soldiers and munitions and cannon; in the other we have had money; and both have come back empty.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I am ready to yield the floor. I simply rose to make that statement.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want the floor; I only desire to ask a question. The Senator from Washington says there is not as much of this British influence in the Shipping Board as the people think there is. I believe the converse of that is true, that there is more of it than anybody dreams of who has not examined the question.

I happen to have here in my hand a report which was made to the Shipping Board by a gentleman whom they sent abroad to look into the situation there. I had intended at some future time, perhaps, to use this report. It has never been made public, as I understand it, but it shows what Britain has been doing, and I am not blaming Britain; it simply shows how much smarter they are than we are. The gentleman who made the report was not retained any further in the service.

That gentleman who was connected with the Shipping Board also made another investigation, and I have another report from the files of the Shipping Board showing the list of officials across the sea, the salaries, and whether they are British subjects or American citizens. I think it is a safe statement, I hazard the statement, that of the 300 employees across the sea, 75 per cent are British subjects, and some of the most important positions are filled by British subjects, such, for instance, as that of marine superintendent, Capt. Blake, who is getting a salary of $6,000 a year—a British subject, and his entire department is composed of British subjects. Of course, some of the stenographers and other office force have to be British subjects, but to try to build up an American merchant marine against the British marine with the representatives of the American marine in nearly all the ports British subjects, and with about 75 per cent of their force British subjects, shows a situation which needs remedying.

I understand, too, that up to a few months ago, when an American ship sailed to any port with a cargo, and had to take on coal at any port, such as Barbados, a manifest of the complete cargo had to be filed with the British consul at New York or other port of sailing before there was any chance of the vessel getting coal, and even ships which went to Russia had to do that, because in the North Sea they might have to stop at some British port and get coal. So we find that the British had a complete record of all the cargoes and the consignees and the consignors and of everything we are doing.

We can not build up a merchant marine under those circumstances, and I hope that is one thing the new board will change. I want to suggest to the Senator from Washington, to think about it a little, that some provision be made for one of the members of the Shipping Board to be abroad, let us say for a couple of years, and then come back and let another member go.

Mr. REED. How would it do to send them all abroad?

Mr. KENYON. I am not prepared to say; but it would be advisable to have one of them over there, instead of having our interests taken care of by our chief rivals.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no desire to hold the floor if the Senator from Washington would like to say something.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that I think the idea he has is covered in the merchant marine act, and that the Shipping Board has authority to divide up its work, and handle it in such a way as it may deem necessary for the building up of the American merchant marine.

I think there is a great deal of merit in the Senator's idea. I know that it was discussed in the preparation of the bill. We ought to have some member of the Shipping Board over there. They ought to go over there to look into the situation. I do not think they ought to go over there with a blare of trumpets; I think they ought to keep as quiet as possible, for a time, at any rate, their official character, so as to get at the real situation.

As the Senator from Iowa says, we can not build up an American merchant marine with the condition of things as he has pointed it out, and I have had a great many letters along the same line. I think the situation has been remedied somewhat in the last few months, but it is still very bad. That is a phase of the situation, of course, which we expect the new Shipping Board to remedy.

We have not had any Shipping Board, as I said the other day, since the merchant marine act was passed that really was in a position to inspire men to go on and do their best. We hope to have one before long, and hope to have these conditions met as promptly and as effectively as possible.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 6, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, in the words of our lips may there be words of truth and wisdom. On our hearts write the words of Thy righteousness and put into our memories Thy loving providence. May we walk in the light as Thou art in the light. May our country's deepest conviction ever be that it is righteousness that exalteth a nation. May all hearts be open to that section which is in such deep anguish of soul and darkness of outlook. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of Friday, June 3, 1921, was read and approved.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH AT VALLEY FORGE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD the address delivered by the President of the United States at Valley Forge on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech delivered by the President of the United States at Valley Forge. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the fact that on page 2117 of the RECORD, Senate bill 1837, an act to amend section 32 of an act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia when it should have been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for prior years, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day is set aside for consideration of business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The Clerk will report the first bill.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4598) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be allowed to go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED RADIO STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 7, to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a most important bill, too important, in my opinion, to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. As it stands, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will be called in the near future, when a bill of this importance can be taken up in the regular order. Unless the gentleman asks unanimous consent to pass it over, I feel that I should object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I say to the gentleman who has made the reservation that I quite earnestly hope he will not object to the consideration of this resolution at this time? It is not as important as it may seem to be, from the general legislative standpoint. It amends the resolution passed by the last Congress, which became effective on June 5, 1920, in one single particular. Under that resolution the naval radio stations were permitted to use their facilities for commercial business under certain contingencies. It differentiated between ordinary commercial business and press business—the reception and transmission of messages by newspapers and newspaper associations. The resolution of June 5, 1920, gave the Secretary of Commerce authority to determine when existing private facilities were adequate for any of the purposes for which the Navy was authorized to use its stations in the reception and transmission of press messages or messages for commercial purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Unless the gentleman desires to discuss it, I object to this, because I do not think it ought to come up in this way. I intend to object unless the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] does, and unless the gentleman wants to allow time to discuss it we will save time by making the objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I presume any personal conversation which I may have had with the gentleman from Texas would not necessarily be binding upon him now or upon the House, but he will remember that when this matter came up about two weeks ago I spoke to the gentleman afterwards, and he said if it came up later and had not been reached on Calendar Wednesday by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries before it was again reached upon this call, he did not think he would have objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state that I would not object if it were not for the fact that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries would have a call now in a very short time. But they are to have a regular call here soon.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I say that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will have much business to lay before the House, and very important business. I do not think this measure is of such importance as either of the gentlemen thinks.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman give us as much as two hours' debate on it?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think we will need anything like two hours of debate on it.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you willing to give us all the debate that is necessary?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am willing to give all the time that is necessary to discuss the question.

Mr. BLANTON. That was my only objection, to be sure that we should have ample time to debate the resolution.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So far as I am concerned, I should prefer that there would be ample time to discuss it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I trust that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will not object. It is a matter of much importance to the newspapers, who are suffering from the standpoint of inadequate service. Possibly, we can get some agreement as to a reasonable length of time to discuss it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STAFFORD. If consideration should be given to this bill it would open up the whole question of the rates that are privileged to be charged by the Government in the transmission of messages, both for press and commercial uses, under the aero system. It would naturally involve a discussion of two hours at least, and I do not think it is fair to the consideration of other bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to have a bill of this importance interposed at this time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for just one suggestion?

Mr. STAFFORD. I made the suggestion to the gentleman that I will have to object unless he asks unanimous consent to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let us see whether we can not agree upon this proposition. The gentleman, I appreciate, has studied the measure—the resolution does not affect the rates at all in reference to commercial business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Should it get before the House it would open up discussion in regard to rates, both as to commercial and press business, on messages sent from the Government wireless plants.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If gentlemen are to discuss matters not contained in the resolution——

Mr. STAFFORD. The resolution will be before the House for amendment, and who can say whether merely the amendment or the suggestion offered by the committee is up for consideration, or whether all germane amendments will be considered?

This is a bill on the Union Calendar, and every germane amendment would be open for consideration and the discussion might take up the entire day. It is not fair to Members having minor bills on the calendar to project this discussion into the House under unanimous consent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This bill was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and it was the very next bill to be reached just before the adjournment of the Sixty-sixth Congress. It is a matter in which the newspapers and press associations of the country are very vitally interested. They have had large delegations here asking for this legislation, which must be passed before June 20, 1922, in order to benefit them at all. This is only to extend certain conditions for a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any reason why the bill could not be taken up for consideration on the next Calendar Wednesday? If the gentleman is not willing to withdraw it now, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Under the circumstances, I must yield, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

FISHERY RIGHTS IN PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2499) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, according to the information that I have, the fishing rights in and around the Hawaiian Islands are now owned by private individuals. Those rights were reserved to them when Hawaii became one of the insular possessions of the United States. I am of the opinion that if we start in buying fishing rights there will be no end of the legislation that will be sought for this purpose. Inasmuch as the fishing rights, in my opinion, do not seriously interfere with the naval rights in Hawaii at this time, I do not think they should be interfered with by the passage of this bill now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman made inquiry concerning these fishing rights, and as to why the Navy Department thinks they should be controlled by the Government of the United States?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am willing to reserve my objection in order that the chairman of the committee may give any information he desires to the House.

Mr. BUTLER. The responsibility is not on me. I introduced this bill at the suggestion of the department.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose and necessity for the passage of this bill is explained in a report I made for the Committee on the Territories. It is a departmental bill, drawn at the instance of the Navy Department, and was indorsed by Secretary Daniels. It received a unanimous report from the Committee on the Territories during the Sixty-sixth Congress, and it passed the House without objection. It is indorsed by the present Secretary of the Navy.

We have at Pearl Harbor the only naval base in the mid-Pacific Ocean. We have spent large sums of money there. We have important fortifications there. The dry dock there cost more than $7,000,000. We were 10 years engaged in the construction of that dock. It is 1,001 feet in length, it is 138 feet in width, and 38½ feet effective depth.

Mr. Speaker, this is a closed port, and was made so by Executive order of President Taft in 1912. That means that no foreign registered ship shall be admitted into this harbor. Under the war powers the Secretary of the Navy during the war made it a closed port in every respect. There are certain ancient fishing rights around the borders of the islands in the Territory of Hawaii. They were handed down from the Crown, and at Pearl Harbor for a distance of about 8 miles along the shore these fishing rights are in existence. They are owned by a certain railroad and two estates, and they have been leased from time to time. They are now in the hands of lessees, who can come into the harbor and near our fortifications.

They use fishing boats of considerable size, but too small to be registered. The purpose is for the United States Government to acquire these fishing rights for the protection of the naval base at Pearl Harbor by keeping all unauthorized persons out of the harbor and make it a real closed harbor.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, how soon will the Committee on the Public Lands be reached on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. STAFFORD. It will be about when the snow begins to fly.

Mr. ALMON. This bill is from the Committee on the Territories. Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that is an important harbor. It is our only naval base in the mid-Pacific Ocean. It is a closed harbor, and the purpose of this bill is to make it closed in the true sense of the word and to keep out these fishing boats for the protection of our fortifications.

There are many reasons why unauthorized people, whether they are foreigners or citizens of the United States, should be kept out of those places. They could go there and acquire information even in time of peace and know what is going on in reference to our naval preparations. In other words, if it is going to be a closed port, everybody ought to be kept out, except those who are authorized to go there by the Navy Department, and the purpose of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to go there and make an investigation and inquire and report to Congress what these three fishing rights can be acquired for, and if they can not be contracted for, then to authorize him to proceed with condemnation proceedings in order to acquire them for the benefit of the Navy.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. If this bill becomes a law will the United States Government then have the right to keep all kinds of vessels outside of that harbor?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. That is the law now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If that is the law now, what is the necessity for the passage of this bill?

Mr. ALMON. The law now keeps out all registered ships, but these fishing boats are too small to be registered. There is no way to keep them out, and before the war and before this order was made under the war power fishing boats were coming in there, boats of considerable size, but they were too small to be registered. They can come in again after peace is declared. The purpose of this bill is to enable the United States Government to acquire all the fishing rights, so that these fishermen and all unauthorized persons may be kept out.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It seems to me if we have the right now to keep out vessels there is no necessity for the passage of this.

Mr. BUTLER. We can keep out everything except fishing boats.

UMI

Mr. McCLINTIC. I can not understand why you differentiate between small fishing vessels and others.

Mr. BUTLER. Because the small fishing boats are not registered.

Mr. McCLINTIC. One more question, and then I will subside. Does the gentleman who has charge of this bill believe that if the same is enacted into law it will set a precedent for the purchase of other fishing rights in and around the islands?

Mr. ALMON. I do not think so, because they are not needed, except in this particular case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to examine and appraise the value of the privately owned rights of fishery in Pearl Harbor, island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, from an imaginary line from Kaak Point to Beckoning Point, both within said harbor, to the seaward, and the privately owned rights of fishery in and about the entrance channel to said harbor, and to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the said rights, and, if in his judgment the price for such rights is reasonable and satisfactory, to make contracts for the purchase of same subject to future ratification and appropriation by Congress; or in the event of the inability of the Secretary of the Navy to make a satisfactory contract for the voluntary purchase of the said rights of fishery he is hereby authorized and directed, through the Attorney General, to institute and carry to completion proceedings for the condemnation of said rights of fishery, the acceptance of the award in said proceedings to be subject to the future ratification and appropriation by Congress. Such condemnation proceedings shall be instituted and conducted in, and jurisdiction of said proceedings is hereby given to, the District Court of the United States for the District of Hawaii, substantially as provided in "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1888; and the sum of $5,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be immediately and continuously available until expended, to pay the necessary costs thereof and expenses in connection therewith. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized and directed to report the proceedings hereunder to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ALMON. There is an amendment to the title.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the body of the bill.

By unanimous consent the title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii."

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LANDS TO PHOENIX, ARIZ., FOR MUNICIPAL PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2421) granting certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the south half of the northwest quarter and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 23, township 1 north, range 2 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal purposes, upon condition that the said city shall make payment for such land at the rate of $1.25 per acre to the receiver of the United States land office at Phoenix, Ariz., within 60 days after the approval of this act: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found at any time in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided further, That the grant herein is made subject to any valid existing easements on said land and upon the express condition that within 30 days of the receipt of any request therefor from the Secretary of the Interior the mayor of said city shall submit to the Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use of the land herein granted during the period named in such request, and that in the event of his failure to so report, or if it is shown in such a report that the terms of this grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held forfeited and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SETTLERS AND ENTRYMEN ON BACA FLOAT NO. 3, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2422) for the relief of settlers and entrymen on Baca Float No. 3, in the State of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Arizona make some explanation of the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the history of the lands affected by this legislation is that a certain man named Luis Maria Cabeza de Baca was granted a large tract of land containing nearly 500,000 acres in the Territory of New Mexico when it was a part of the Republic of Mexico. A similar grant was made to the town of Las Vegas in 1835 by the then Mexican Government. These two grants conflicted, and in 1860 the Congress of the United States passed an act authorizing the heirs of Baca to select approximately 500,000 acres of land anywhere in the Territory of New Mexico, which then included a part of Colorado and all of Arizona. Five tracts of about 100,000 acres each were selected by the Baca heirs, among them one located near Nogales, Ariz., which comprised a little over 99,000 acres of land.

When the successors of the Baca heirs applied for a patent the General Land Office declined to issue the same for the reason that the act of June 21, 1860, provided that the land to be selected should be nonmineral, and the land in question was notoriously mineral in character. The Land Office then opened this land to settlement. Settlers entered upon it, patents were issued, and a number of other entrymen were in process of obtaining their patents when the Supreme Court of the United States, by a decision rendered on June 22, 1914, determined that the land did belong to the successors of the Baca family and therefore that the settlers had absolutely no title.

On December 13, 1917, the Federal court in Arizona ordered all the settlers evicted from the land. There were 18 entrymen who had received their patents from the United States for 2,352 acres, and there were 41 others who had final receipts or were in process of earning patents to land aggregating 5,527 acres. The Department of the Interior has at all times recognized them as valid entries and resisted the land-grant claimants on all occasions until the Supreme Court finally decided in favor of the grantees.

This bill merely proposes that the patentees and entrymen may be permitted to receive land in lieu of that which they lost. If one has already received a patent from the United States, the bill proposes that he may go elsewhere in the State of Arizona and secure twice the area of the land formerly patented to him, because he gave up land in an irrigated valley and must now select arid land. In the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it would be only fair to allow the settlers to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know of any other instance where Congress has granted to persons similarly situated twice the amount of land which was originally patented to them?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; I know of no instance where twice the area was allowed. This bill as originally prepared by the department allowed the settlers to select an equal area anywhere in the United States where they might find it. I took up the matter with the Secretary of the Interior and told him that the settlers would, most of them, probably want to make selections in the State of Arizona. He, being familiar with the situation in the Southwest, knew that all that was left after 50 years of settlement was land that nobody else wanted up to this time. Under these circumstances Secretary Fall recommended to the committee and the committee amended the bill to the effect that the settlers might select a double area.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that the privilege that will be extended to these entrymen is limited to lands in the State of Arizona under this double right?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That the committee is recognizing for the first time?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where, prior to December 13, 1917, patents or patent certificates have issued under the homestead laws or preemption laws for land within the limits of a tract known as Baca Float No. 3, in the State of Arizona, and the patentees, their assigns, and legal representatives have been evicted by the local courts by reason of the prior grant to the legal representative of Luis Maria Baca, the patentee, his assigns or his legal representative, who under the laws and regulations would have been entitled to the return of the purchase money, fees, and commissions, shall be entitled to select in lieu thereof an equal quantity of nonmineral, unoccupied, surveyed public land subject to homestead entry.

SEC. 2. That where any person had made homestead entry for land within Baca Float No. 3, and had fully complied with the homestead laws thereon as to residence and cultivation prior to June 22, 1914, in the bona fide belief that the land was public land, and has been evicted therefrom or prevented from making final entry by reason of the prior grant, said homestead entryman, or, in the case of his or her death, the successor to the right of entry under the homestead laws shall be permitted to make second homestead entry for other land, subject to the conditions, limitations, and benefits of the homestead laws applicable to such land; and upon submission of proof under his original entry that he had fully complied with the law as to residence and cultivation, shall on approval of such proof and payment at the office of second entry for the final fees and commissions due on a final entry for the land entered, receive a final certificate and patent without further residence and cultivation of the land embraced in the second entry.

SEC. 3. That the right of selection and second entry hereby granted shall not be assignable, directly or through irrevocable power of attorney, and must be exercised within three years after the passage of this act by the persons entitled to such relief, or, in the case of the death of a homestead entryman who has not submitted final proof and received his final certificate, by the person or persons succeeding to his right of entry under the homestead laws: Provided, That no persons acquiring said land by sale or conveyance subsequent to December 13, 1917, shall be recognized, and the applicant shall submit proof that he has not sold, assigned, nor relinquished his homestead nor entered into any contract or agreement to sell, assign, or relinquish the same, nor abandoned the land for a valuable consideration; also that the land sought to be selected is for applicant's own exclusive use and benefit, and that he has not sold or contracted to sell, directly or indirectly, said selected land: And provided further, That the entire right of reselection under each entry shall be exercised at the same time, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and on approval of the selection patent shall issue as on other entries.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, strike out "be entitled to select in lieu thereof an equal quantity of nonmineral, unoccupied, surveyed public land, subject to homestead entry," and insert "be entitled to select in lieu thereof not exceeding twice the area of the lands lost, of any nonmineral, unoccupied, surveyed public land in the State of Arizona subject to homestead entry."

Page 2, line 17, after the word "land," insert "situate in the State of Arizona and not exceeding twice the area of the original homestead entry lost as herein set forth."

The committee amendments were severally read and severally agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MAKING FORT WORTH, TEX., A PORT OF ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2466) to constitute Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, a port of entry and to extend to said port the privileges of section 7 of an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a port of entry in the customs collection district of San Antonio, Tex., and that the privileges of section 7 of an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, as amended, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the said port of Fort Worth, in the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 30, to amend a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution giving to discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines a preferred right of homestead entry," approved February 14, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish some explanation would be given for the proviso as found on page 2, which withholds the rights and benefits conferred by this act from any person who has dodged service in the World War, as in the body of the resolution these rights are only to be conferred upon those who have been honorably separated and discharged from the service. How can a person who has dodged service in the Army be honorably separated and discharged so as to entitle him to the privileges of this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely proposes to amend the act approved February 14, 1920, which gave a preference to soldiers for a period of two years from the date of the passage of the act, and which privilege will expire next February. This extends that privilege for a period of eight years, inserting the word "ten" in the original act instead of the word "two."

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know whether the gentleman heard my inquiry, but so far he has not answered the query that I addressed him.

Mr. SINNOTT. Some men who refused service and to wear the uniform in the war were not given an honorable discharge, but they were given a separation without honor, and it is to exclude those men that this provision was inserted in the original act. It was not deemed advisable by the Congress at the last session nor by the committee to give this great privilege to men who refused to serve or to wear the uniform, although they were not honorably discharged on account of their failure to do their duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. I fear the gentleman does not grasp the query that I have propounded.

Mr. SINNOTT. Possibly not.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the body of the resolution you restrict this privilege to those who have been honorably separated or discharged from the service. Then in your proviso you exclude from the benefits of the act those who having been drafted refused to serve. It is difficult for me to conceive of a draft dodger who afterwards became honorably separated or discharged from the service, and I am asking the pointed question as to the pertinency of the proviso.

Mr. SINNOTT. A question was raised as to whether these men who refused to serve and were not given an honorable discharge nor were honorably separated should be entitled to the privileges of this resolution, and the committee two years ago, in order to make assurance doubly sure, put in this last proviso.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can a person who has been a draft dodger be honorably separated from the service of the United States?

Mr. SINNOTT. Some of them have.

Mr. SMITH. Is it not true that the conscientious objectors who refused service and were imprisoned were finally honorably discharged from the service?

Mr. SINNOTT. They did not dodge the draft.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were not honorably discharged.

Mr. SINNOTT. They refused to serve.

Mr. STAFFORD. No person can get an honorable discharge from the service of the United States Government without doing service in the war.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman does not object to this double assurance.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had difficulty in seeing the need of it, and thought there was an inconsistency.

Mr. SINNOTT. That was the object of it two years ago. We have taken the matter up with the War Department and also with the Interior Department, and that is the language they advised in order to make it definitely certain.

Mr. STAFFORD. A further inquiry I want to make is as to the applicability of this bill to Indian lands, or public lands being open to entry, in cases where they are classified and sold at an appraised value. What rights would the discharged soldier have under such conditions?

Mr. SINNOTT. He has a preference right. There was one opening in Wyoming. There were 80 units thrown open to entry there and there were 3,200 applicants for the 80 units. The real benefit that the soldier will get is on the Government reclamation projects, where they are thrown open to entry. That land is very valuable and they get a preference right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the soldier under the terms of the bill be granted any preferential rights in the case of public lands open to settlement upon classification and sale?

Mr. SINNOTT. On the lands hereafter restored to entry the soldier would have a preferential right.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire for information whether these lands are entered under the homestead or desert land laws when classified and sold?

Mr. SINNOTT. Some of them under the desert land law, the homestead law, and some under the reclamation act.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman from Wisconsin was talking about what should have been done but what was not done. These so-called conscientious objectors who refused to fight or perform any other service were honorably discharged——

Mr. STAFFORD. Honorably discharged—never.

Mr. BLANTON. They were not dishonorably discharged or court-martialed, as they should have been. And they were paid their back pay after being petted for months and months. The gentleman certainly has not kept up with such matters——

Mr. STAFFORD. They may have been discharged from the Army.

Mr. BLANTON. They got an honorable discharge or one that was not dishonorable and were paid their back pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken, because——

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER], who was an officer in the service and knows I am not mistaken. He is familiar with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the Army of the United States they only give an honorable discharge where they served in the Army; otherwise an ordinary discharge.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will yield, apparently the language the gentleman calls in question was put in possibly out of an excess of caution, but there can be no harm for its staying in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I controvert the position of the gentleman from Texas that a conscientious objector received an honorable discharge and not an ordinary discharge.

Mr. MONDELL. I am rather inclined to agree with the gentleman that the language is probably unnecessary, but in any event it can do no harm whatever the effect is, and it was possibly put in out of an excess of caution.

Mr. SMITH. We want to exclude the conscientious objectors who were in Leavenworth penitentiary and who are supposed to have received an honorable discharge.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me there is no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. To terminate this controversy, I will withdraw the right to object and let somebody else take up the cudgel.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from California this: Were not these men discharged honorably and given back pay, and did not the gentleman discharge such men himself?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that is a fact. There is only one discharge from the Army other than a dishonorable discharge, and that is an honorable discharge.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman contradicts himself when he says there is only one discharge——

Mr. LINEBERGER. A dishonorable discharge and an honorable discharge.

Mr. STAFFORD. But, if the gentleman will permit, with my meager knowledge of Army affairs, I know there is an ordinary discharge and a discharge without honor.

Mr. BLANTON. As to about 3,000 so-called conscientious objectors, who, after refusing to fight, refused to perform any other service, I assure the gentleman he is mistaken; for they were discharged and their discharge was not a dishonorable one, and, in addition, they were allowed all of their back pay and a $60 bonus.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "ninety."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to propound an inquiry to the gentleman in charge of the bill. Will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from California in regard to the matter which was recently discussed?

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield until the amendment is adopted?

The SPEAKER The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SINNOTT. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question for the purpose of obtaining some information from the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER]. It is stated that honorable discharges were given to men who were conscientious objectors and refused to serve. I would like to ask the gentleman whether that was under the law or under the order of the Secretary of War?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I am not informed whether it was the law or not, but it was under an order of the commanding officer of the particular unit involved Only where a man is sentenced by a general court-martial can a dishonorable discharge be issued. In cases where a man was incarcerated and had not been court-martialed he was sometimes discharged, so I am informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with a blue ticket; but that came from the War Department direct and was never taken care of as an organization matter, and in my division was not used, to my knowledge at least, until after I had left to go overseas. So far as the average soldier was concerned, and so far as the discharges issued in the first months of the war, there were only two kinds of discharges—honorable and dishonorable—and I know, as a matter of fact, that within the organization with which I was connected prior to the time of going overseas I must have issued 15 or 20 honorable discharges to men who were conscientious objectors and had never rendered any military service. This was upon instruction from my superiors in command, and I assume they acted upon orders direct from the Secretary of War.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did that come to you from the selective-service board?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I was ordered to discharge them by my commanding officer, the colonel of the regiment.

Mr. SWEET. Had those men ever been in the penitentiary, or anything of the kind?

Mr. LINEBERGER. They were confined usually in the regimental guardhouse and absolutely refused to go into the military service. That happened at Camp Grant, Ill., in the Eighty-sixth Division, in November, 1917.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman know on what grounds these men were discharged? Has he information in regard to that matter?

Mr. LINEBERGER. My memory is not clear about that, but the facts of the matter were that they did not render military service, because of what they claimed to be conscientious objections.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman know why they were not court-martialed?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I do not know. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK], who served in the Judge Advocate's Department, and who handled a number of these cases after they left the regimental or divisional headquarters, can perhaps give the gentleman the information he desires on that point.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. These men were treated under an order of the Secretary of War, by which their professions of conscientious objections were investigated. If they were found to be sincere they were given an honorable discharge, by orders of the Secretary of War, in spite of the fact that they had refused to render any service, combatant or noncombatant.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman being an ex-service man himself, I am satisfied he is intimate with the matter. The draft law that was passed had a provision in it that certain classes of people who were really conscientious objectors, belonging to some religious denomination opposed to war, were not permitted to escape the draft, but to escape serving in combatant service. The point I am getting at is whether or not the War Department had given instructions to commanding officers over this country to release a man simply because he claimed to be a conscientious objector and relieve him from helping to take care of men who were willing to fight?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That was the provision. A man could come before the board appointed by the Secretary of War, and if he could convince him of his sincerity, it did not make any difference whether he was a member of any existing sect opposed to military service or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this discussion is under a reservation——

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the bill pending before the House at this time appear to give to those gentlemen the same advantages that would be given to you or your colleague from California, who served as a soldier?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The gentleman will have to answer. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. One further question. This order was issued with instructions that it should be kept secret?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I believe it was.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have a definite recollection of that. I myself served on one of the draft boards.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I merely wanted to add that along with the order of the Secretary of War, which extended the legislation by Congress, was an Executive order of the President——

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think that is true.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota (continuing). Which clearly extended the exemption for combatant service, not only to the man who had conscientious religious scruples but to the man who simply had conscientious scruples against war. It might have arisen from religion or socialism or any other "ism."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES, BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6263) to amend an act entitled "An act providing additional hospital facilities for patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Training, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this identical bill was incorporated in the deficiency appropriation bill which passed the House and is now being considered in the Senate. The provision, so far as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD indicates, has not been stricken out in the Senate. I think this bill should either be passed over without prejudice or stricken from the calendar.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the provision inserted in the deficiency bill by the House was amended in the Senate, and that objection would arise on the part of the House if the Senate amendment should stand in conference, namely, that a portion of the money, $12,500,000, should be allotted to the War and Navy Departments for remodeling and extension of their hospitals. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was unanimous against the allowance of allotments to the Navy and War Departments on the ground that their hospitals are regularly supported under their own appropriations, and that the hospitals under the Navy and War Departments, having vacant space, should be allotted to the ex-service men, and the only question of expense there that could arise and be charged to this appropriation would be the expense for maintenance. All that the Army and Navy hospitals need do to furnish this service to the soldier would be to state an account to the Secretary of the Treasury for reimbursement to the Army or Navy appropriation for the cost for the maintenance of the soldiers in the Army and Navy hospitals. On that basis the Secretary of the Treasury would cause an account to be stated, and the amount found due would be charged against a Treasury appropriation set apart in the sundry civil bill for maintenance purposes. Then, a counter-warrant would issue giving credit to the appropriation for the War or Navy Department rendering the service. So this matter is fully provided for on that basis, and the amendment of the Senate should not stand in the deficiency bill. And it seems to me it might be wise for us to pass this bill in the form in which it stands now, and then take the matter up later if the view of of the House should fail in conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. I feel that it is a better plan to have the bill passed without prejudice.

Mr. ANDREWS. Then, Mr. Speaker, in view of the suggestions offered, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice, to retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice, and retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LANDS IN CERTAIN IOWA TOWN SITES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5621) for the disposal of certain lands in the town sites of Fort Madison and Bellevue, Iowa.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman having the bill in charge why we should make an exception granting to municipalities which happened to have squatted on certain land on which no patents had ever been issued these lots without making any payment at all?

Mr. HULL. That is done at the suggestion of the Interior Department itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not always follow the suggestions of the Interior Department in the passage of bills.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The municipality did not squat on this land. By virtue of the act of July 2, 1836 or 1837, it was provided that a section of land should be set apart for these various town sites, and the town sites themselves were given certain land for municipal purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the act to which the gentleman refers, which is not referred to in the report, has the gentleman any information as to whether they exercised that privilege in entering on other land than the eight lots referred to in this bill, and which the municipality has appropriated?

Mr. SINNOTT. Each town site was given a section of land; that is, a section of land was surveyed out, and the lots were surveyed and divided into certain classes, classes 1, 2, and 3, and given a different appraisement, and the settlers on those lands, the occupants, were given a preference right to purchase the lots, and after they exercised that preference the balance of the lots were sold at auction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the original act did the municipality exercise its privilege of selecting some of this land?

Mr. SINNOTT. The commissioners set aside for the use of the city certain tracts.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the lots that they are now occupying are those lots which the commissioners set aside?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, I do not know. The commissioners set aside a certain strip of land for the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask the gentleman this question: The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, which occupies two of these lots, would be obliged to pay the appraised value under the terms of this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lots in the town sites of Fort Madison and Bellevue, Iowa, not heretofore sold and patented under the acts of July 2, 1836, and March 3, 1837 (5 Stat., pp. 70 and 178), shall be disposed of and patented to the occupants thereof holding same by themselves and their predecessors in interest, in good faith under claim and color of title, and who shall make application for patent or to purchase such lots within one year from the passage of this act, and who shall furnish satisfactory proof of such occupancy and color of title, and pay therefor the appraised value of such lots in case the purchase price has not been paid to the United States: Provided, That lots occupied by public improvements shall be donated and patented to the municipality owning such improvements. All lots in said town sites not so disposed of at the expiration of one year after the passage of this act shall be subject to private sale at the appraised value thereof, or to competitive sale, at not less than the appraised value, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend page 1, line 6, by inserting, after the word "the," the word "uncontested."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REERECTION OF THE STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 127) to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from Indiana withhold his reservation?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I will not.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman withhold it for five minutes? No; I will withdraw the request. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that House joint resolution 127 be permitted to remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the resolution be permitted to remain on the calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a very brief letter from the Arts Club, of Washington, in regard to that statue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. In view of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman refused to let me speak on the subject, I will respectfully and in a gentlemanly manner object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

COMPENSATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6573) to further reclassify postmasters and employees of the Postal Service and readjust their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. I think we should have a statement concerning it made to the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. I shall be glad to give a statement in regard to it if the gentleman will reserve his objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve it in order to give the Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads the privilege of explaining it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, the main purpose and object of this bill is to correct results that came from the passage of the reclassification act of June 5, 1920. That was an act that was framed by the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries. But however carefully the commission labored, the act resulted in inequalities and discriminations that we feel ought to be corrected.

The first section of this bill relates to fourth-class postmasters, and it simply rearranges the salaries fixed in the reclassification act so that they will be on a uniform scale.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is altogether too important a piece of legislation to be passed by unanimous consent. I do not object to the gentleman making a brief statement in regard to it, but manifestly the bill can not be passed with only a few minutes of discussion. The fact that there are some seven or eight sections, each of which is important, shows in itself that it can not be passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope the gentleman will reserve that opinion until after I have given my explanation.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will be very brief, I shall have no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I would rather explain.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This seems to be an important piece of legislation. How long does the gentleman think it will be until it could be reached by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. STEENERSON. This simply corrects the schedule that was adopted in that law by making it uniform, so that the compensation of these fourth-class postmasters will be based upon the receipts. There is no objection to the bill. The department has recommended it, and the committee were unanimous.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to say to the gentleman that it is apparent that objection is going to be made, and the gentleman will have to make this same statement over again when the bill comes up for passage. It seems to me it is a vain thing to make the explanation now.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would be very glad to make a little further explanation for the benefit of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but I will say to my friend that it is apparent that the bill will be objected to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; but it will be coming up very soon, so that the explanation which I make to-day will hold good.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman will have to repeat his explanation when the bill comes up again.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will simply say that this bill was reported in nearly its present form at the last session, and that the committee have again considered it under the new administration. We have gone over it most carefully, and the opinion of the committee is unanimous. All the members concur in the report. The Postmaster General appeared before us in person and approved of the provisions of the bill. As it is a technical matter, it would take considerable time to explain it, but I am satisfied that there is no Member of the House who thoroughly understands the inequalities that now exist in the compensation of some postal employees who would make any objection. It is a very meritorious matter, and it ought to be disposed of before the next fiscal year begins. Of course, I shall be very glad to go over each section and explain it in detail, but, as the gentleman from Alabama has suggested that there is going to be objection to it, perhaps I ought not to take any more time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not proposing to object. The gentleman must not put me in that attitude.

Mr. STEENERSON. I appreciate that. I do not think there is a single Member of the House who will object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think any gentleman will object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I certainly withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, everybody seems to be ducking. I simply submit my request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put it, and there was no objection to it.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no objection to the bill going over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

VASHON ISLAND MILITARY RESERVATION, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5622) providing for the appraisal and sale of the Vashon Island Military Reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the land in the Vashon Island abandoned military reservation in sections 1, 2, and 3, all in township 21 north, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, in the county of King, in the State of Washington, to be surveyed and subdivided into tracts and lots to conform as far as practicable to the tracts and lots lawfully occupied by the tenants thereon as lessees or sublessees on May 1, 1920.

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any person who as lessee or sublessee was in actual occupation of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof on the 1st day of May, 1920, who made actual settlement thereon in good faith under the terms of a certain lease held of the War Department by one James Bachelor, or a sublease thereunder, or anyone who has since said date succeeded to the occupation and interest of any such prior settler, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to purchase for the appraised value one of such surveyed tracts so occupied, no right of purchase to exceed the tract actually occupied and improved by a lawful lessee or sublessee on May 1, 1920, and in no case exceeding 20 acres in a body, according to Government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon the payment to the Government of a sum of money equal to the appraised value thereof, such appraisement to be made as provided by law: Provided, That in making such appraisement the appraisers shall not include the improvements thereon made by the occupants of such lands: Provided further, That payment to the Government may be made in one sum, or one-tenth cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, payable annually, as the purchaser may elect.

SEC. 3. That if any tract of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not purchased by the lessee or sublessee, his heirs or assigns, as provided in section 2 of this act, within 90 days after the same becomes subject to purchase under the provisions of this act, then and in that event the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of the remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations," and the said lessees, sublessees, heirs, or assigns, who do not purchase such tracts shall have the privilege of removing from their tracts any buildings placed thereon, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reappraise any unsold tracts from time to time before offering the same for sale under said act of July 5, 1884.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior in making the survey provided for by this act shall ascertain what part of said lands, if any, are needed for lighthouse or roadway purposes, and any lands needed for such purposes shall be segregated or reserved for such use, and the lands so segregated or reserved shall not be subject to disposal hereunder.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] concerning the method prescribed in the bill for payment. In section 2 we find that the payment shall be made all in one sum, or the alternative one-tenth in cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments. It occurs to me that some of the beneficiaries of this act might not be able to pay the entire amount in cash, and yet might have more ready cash than merely one-tenth of the amount. I suggest to the gentleman an amendment, to insert after the word "or," in line 24, page 2, the words "not less than," and after the word "nine," in the same line, insert the words "or less number of," so it will read:

That payment to the Government may be made in one sum or not less than one-tenth cash and the balance in nine or less number of equal annual payments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular objection to the amendment. The bill as written follows the form of a bill passed two Congresses ago permitting another tract to be sold by the same method.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer the amendments that I have just suggested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 24, after the word "or," insert the words "not less than."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the other amendment is, after the word "nine," in the same line, to insert the words "or less number of."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, line 24, after the word "nine," insert the words "or less number of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment which I wish to call to the attention of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], and I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 3, line 2, after the word "elect," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "And with the option in the purchaser, his heirs and assigns, to pay the remaining installments on any date when an installment becomes due."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the person having this privilege should certainly have the right when any installment becomes due to pay the entire amount, so that he can settle it all up and get a clear title. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to have the amendment accepted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LLOYD E. GANDY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2861) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., on such terms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the bill that it is not properly on the Union Calendar; that it is a private bill and should be on the Private Calendar. I would like to be heard for a moment on that by the Chair, or if the gentleman who introduced the bill wishes to have the matter go over to a subsequent date when the point of order can be determined, because I do not wish to take advantage of the gentleman, I would be very glad to have that done. I seriously contend that under the precedents of the House this is a private bill.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, if the gentleman is making the point of order to the bill, he will object to its consideration, and I have nothing to do but to meet his terms.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there is something more than an objection. I am raising a point that it is a private bill and not a bill of a public character.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, may the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. STAFFORD. Without in any way waiving the point of order which I have made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5756) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for these islands," approved August 29, 1916.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the bill it proposes to raise the limit of possible indebtedness in the Philippine Islands from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To double it.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I shall object at this time to a bill of such importance being considered by unanimous consent. I never heard of it until to-day, and the bill carries provision for an extraordinarily large increase of the indebtedness of those islands. I want a short opportunity to investigate.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman pardon me for one statement that perhaps may change his mind? There has been no increase of indebtedness of the Philippine Islands since the organic act was passed in 1916. This bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Insular Affairs. It has been carefully examined by the Bureau of Insular Affairs and it comes to us on the petition of the Philippine Legislature and of all of the leaders in the Philippine Islands. While it might seem to be a large increase, it really is a very small amount, considering the vast increase in business and importance of the Philippine Islands. They are now placed at such a disadvantage that they can not carry on the necessary public work of the islands, having reached the limit of their indebtedness, and going even beyond it—not the bonded indebtedness but other classes of indebtedness. It is really an emergency proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is a fact, is it not, that under existing law the Philippine Islands have prospered?

Mr. TOWNER. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If they have prospered under existing law, it would seem to me not to be a matter of emergency that they be allowed to increase their bonded indebtedness by 100 per cent. If the law which is now on the statute books works so happily in their interest, then I desire a brief opportunity in which to investigate and see whether it is necessary for them to further increase their prosperity by doubling their bonded indebtedness.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course, there is nothing for me to do except to ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and that it keep its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and keep its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK, PLAINS OF CHALMETTE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 2232, in reference to a national military park on the Plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand the ultimate object of this bill, it will be to levy a charge upon the Treasury of half a million dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly how to answer that question or statement. The present purpose is merely to have a survey made of the old battle field down there at Chalmette, where was fought the memorable battle commonly known as the Battle of New Orleans. In all probability if that survey be made and the United States Government fixes definitely that battle field, and no governmental action is taken—and neither the gentleman nor I can say now when such favorable action may be taken by the Government—in such event the Colonial Dames or the Daughters of the American Revolution or the Daughters of 1812, or all three, may conclude to take over the battle field as determined by the survey. The gentleman knows very well that one step at a time should characterize and mark our advance in securing the purpose of this bill. There is nothing that commits the Government to any expenditure other than the small expenditure of making this survey and investigating the feasibility of establishing a national military park upon land which will be determined to be the battle field.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the bill in its present form does commit the Government to certain things.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman indicate what part of the bill does that?

Mr. STAFFORD. In deciding what should be included in this national military park it goes further than merely providing for the survey. It restricts and limits the survey as to what should be included by stating that certain tracts of lands as may be now under the jurisdiction of State patriotic societies should be excepted. Again, in section 3 it excepts from the survey inclusion in this national park of the so-called "Pakenham's headquarters." Yet the tentative survey made some years back by district engineers recommended strongly, as I recall, the inclusion of that tract as part of the national park. If we are going to create a national park to commemorate the great victory of Gen. Jackson, I think there should be no restrictions at all upon the Government or on the investigating officer as to what should be included. There will be plenty of time when the report comes in to determine whether the portions which have been excepted in this bill should be excepted or included.

We should not at this time decide in this leisurely way what should be included in the national park.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am perfectly willing—glad, in fact—to accept any amendment which might be proposed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it would be better to have this bill go over for two weeks.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to say this bill was prepared by the Colonial Dames and has the indorsement of all of those splendid women associated with them, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Daughters of 1812. I introduced it exactly as they sent it to me. Now, after all, these sections which seem objectionable to the gentleman might be eliminated by way of amendment. The purpose is, from my viewpoint and from the viewpoint, I believe, of all lovers of that great old battle field down there, to have a survey made, to have a foundation on which to build a superstructure, a great memorial, a great national military park. If the National Congress from now on wants to take the position of being unmindful of the greatness and glories of that spot, if they do not care to start a great monument to Old Hickory down there, all right. The Colonial Dames and these other organizations——

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be merit in the position which the Colonial Dames take in saying that they want to retain jurisdiction over these tracts. I think it is better if the gentleman, after careful consideration of the bill in the respect which I have mentioned, would bring it up again, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is there any objection——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the survey being made, but I do not think it is advisable for the Congress to commit itself in advance that certain tracts should be excluded from the survey, as provided in this bill, even though ultimately the Congress may recognize and approve the position of the Colonial Dames and other patriotic societies in making that exclusion. I am one who does not believe that Mount Vernon should be taken out of the hands of the women's patriotic society which has charge of that institution. I believe it is better cared for under their direction than if the National Government had charge.

I believe it is unwise to place limitations in permanent law that will prevent the Congress, if it desires to have a national park down there, from determining in advance as to its extent; that we ought not to commit ourselves when merely passing a survey bill to the position for all time that we will except certain tracts from consideration.

Mr. QUIN. Let me say to the gentleman that the Military Committee was unanimous in its report on this matter to the Congress. These people must have the Federal jurisdiction in order to enforce eminent domain proceedings.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not saying my judgment is better than the judgment of the great Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman from Mississippi is such an honored and valued member, but his colleague and other gentlemen about me approve the position I take.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not want to incite the hostility of the gentleman from Wisconsin or any of his associates.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman's compliment of the committee is not unworthy——

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly not unworthy of the gentleman from Mississippi, who, I believe, accepts it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman's objections could be met by striking out all on pages 2 and 3 of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I should say section 4 would have to be retained to provide funds for this survey.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose we amend it by striking out all on page 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will that have the hearty indorsement of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir. I am perfectly willing to make a beginning in a matter which I consider of great concern to the people of this country.

Mr. LAYTON. How much money will it cost to begin?

Mr. O'CONNOR. To make this survey, I do not think it will cost more than $200.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding just had with the gentleman from Louisiana, that he will move to strike out page 2 of the bill, and if it has the approval of the other gentlemen of the House, I will withdraw the reservation of the objection; but if this is going to be contested, I think that this matter ought to go over. I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate the feasibility of establishing a national military park on the Plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans, where was fought, on January 8, 1815, the Battle of New Orleans, and to prepare plans of such park and estimate of the cost therefor, and obtain such further information as may enable Congress to act upon the matter after being fully advised.

Said park, if established, is to be known as the Chalmette National Military Park and to embrace within its borders the present grounds and monument now the property of the United States by transfer from the State of Louisiana in 1907, under the terms of act No. 41 of the session of the General Assembly of Louisiana in 1902, approved June 19 (session laws, pp. 40 and 50), and an act of the Congress of the United States, chapter 2928 (1907), of the Fifty-ninth Congress, approved March 4 (34 Stat., p. 1411).

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar in the House as in Committee of the Whole House when is it in order to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is read by sections, and it is after reading the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I suggest to the Speaker that this is virtually the first reading of the bill and not the second reading. Of course, if it is the second reading of the bill, then this is the time to move an amendment as the sections are read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the first reading was a reading by title, and this is the second reading.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, then I move to strike out, on page 2, the last paragraph of section 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, strike out all of lines 1 to 11, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the custody of said monument by the United States Daughters of 1776 and 1812 as honorary custodians, granted by the act of the General Assembly of Louisiana (act No. 8 of 1894), approved June 14 (Session Laws, p. 8), and recognized by the aforesaid act of Congress of 1907.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 2, just read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the custody of the Versailles plantation site, including ruins, now called Pakenham's headquarters, inclosed within a high iron fence, and avenue of live oaks leading to the river, by the Colonial Dames resident in Louisiana.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That such a sum as may be required by the Secretary of War to carry out the investigations herein directed is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys available therefor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk be authorized to change "section 4" to "section 2."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. O'CONNOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6300, the deficiency bill, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6300, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] how much was the additional appropriations the Senate put on this bill? It contained one hundred millions when it went over. How much does it now contain?

Mr. GOOD. My understanding is that something like $53,000,000 has been added by the Senate. But that understanding comes through the press. I have no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate also added $98,000,000 in amendments to the naval bill, and now it has added $53,000,000 to the deficiency bill. May we find out what the gentleman's attitude is going to be about these additions the Senate has put on?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Missouri is not interested in these big $53,000,000 and $98,000,000 items, but I am, and the people of the country are vitally interested.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is trying to ask about some other bill rather than this one.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Senate asked for the conference?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then the situation is this: On the coming in of the conference report the papers will come here and the House will have the first vote, the Senate having asked for the conference?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. GOOD, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

MEMORIAL TO FIRST DIVISION, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 81, authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this contemplate putting a memorial in the grounds north of the Agricultural Department Building in the Mall?

Mr. LUCE. Close to the Agricultural Department Building in the Mall. I can not tell the gentleman the exact spot.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it proposed or understood that the design of this memorial and its location shall be subject to the approval of the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. LUCE. I so understand.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice you use the word "recommendation" rather than "approval." Would this permit a committee of Congress or any other body to ignore the advice of the art commission?

Mr. LUCE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason I speak of that at this time is that I have a very vivid remembrance of the debate and the struggle we had on this floor concerning the memorial to Abraham Lincoln. The Fine Arts Commission was ridiculed because it proposed to have the memorial erected on the banks of the Potomac. Not only the proposed location but also the design itself was denounced. It was said that these artists and specialists were interfering where they had no right to interfere, and that they did not know any more about it than we did. And it was by a close vote that the proposition for the erection of that memorial in accordance with the advice of that commission went through the House and became a law. Everybody now admits that the Fine Arts Commission was correct and that its critics on this floor were all wrong. Now, I want, before that Mall is populated with memorials, that the location of each memorial and its design shall be subject to approval of men who have made the business of designing such things and the study of landscape effects their life work. I do not want a law enacted so that any committee of Congress or any department official will have the right to ignore the recommendation of the commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has my colleague noticed that, under the bill as reported, the Fine Arts Commission has not that free hand in locating this memorial that it should have; that the Congress does in a way describe the location in this bill as well as in the bill following?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice such a provision in one bill, but I did not know that a similar one is in the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the bill it provides the designation in the south of the city, near the Navy Building and east of the Corcoran Art Gallery. It restricts it to that rectangular space as described, and yet the Fine Arts Commission may have charge of the plan for the ornamentation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not that the next resolution? It is not the one we are now considering. We are considering the one for the location of a memorial in the Mall.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are considering, as I understand, House joint resolution 81. That is the very resolution I have read from.

Mr. LUCE. I thought it was the other one.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought so, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. May I inquire what resolution is before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. House joint resolution 81.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question? I had been looking at the one which precedes it. The one now under consideration would locate the memorial definitely right east of the Corcoran Art Gallery and south of the State, War, and Navy Building.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, for one I am in the most complete sympathy with the view taken by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and can assure him that so long as I may have any vote on the Committee on the Library, barring some contingency I do not expect, it shall not be cast contrary to the advice and recommendations of the Commission of Fine Arts. It strikes me the country is to be congratulated that it has adopted this policy which has already brought great benefit to the city, and it is sure to continue so to do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit, the site is definitely located east of the Corcoran Art Gallery and south of the State, War, and Navy Building on the bit of lawn just there. That violates the very spirit of the law which confers jurisdiction upon the Arts Commission. The location of the site as well as the design of the memorial should be subject to the approval of the commission. But you would definitely fix the location in the law. That may be an inappropriate place for it. I am as strongly in favor of memorials to the heroic dead as is the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I have in former years seen in this city so many things put up that ought to be torn down that I am very earnest in my view that nothing of a memorial character, nothing so important as this, should be definitely located by an act of Congress before both the design and the site have the approval of the Arts Commission. Would the gentleman from Massachusetts consent to striking out on the first page, beginning on line 7, the words "south of the State, War, and Navy Building, and east of the Corcoran Art Gallery," and leave the site then to be selected by the committee and the Arts Commission?

Mr. LUCE. I should have no objection to that amendment. It does, however, increase the powers both of the Committee on the Library and of the Arts Commission. At present the bill would restrict both to the approval of that particular site.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, a memorial site in that location would not have space enough. It would be among those large buildings, and it would be affected, if it is a memorial of any size. To show how minds differ in that respect I will merely cite the fact that one of the gentlemen of the House, in a newspaper interview, once urged strongly that the Lincoln Memorial should be constructed between the Union Station and the Capitol. Think what would have happened had that been done!

I do not believe that we should by this resolution select the site and then pretend to give the commission discretion to select it. This resolution would absolutely preclude the exercise of discretion by the commission, for it definitely locates the site.

Mr. LUCE. May I call the gentleman's attention to the first words on page 2, "That the site chosen shall be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library, with the advice and recommendation of the commission"?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. But the site chosen is within very narrow limits—that is, "east of the Corcoran Gallery and south of the State, War, and Navy Building." If you say by law that the site must be within a very narrow space, they can locate it at either end of that space, but not outside of that narrow space, so that to all intents and purposes you deprive them of discretion.

Mr. LUCE. It was our intention to safeguard the matter completely by including that language so that the site shall be approved by the joint committee and the commission. But if it is the desire of the gentleman to enlarge our authority, I shall not object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, with that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUSTED). Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to keep the right to offer that amendment, which has been accepted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand this memorial is to be erected without any expense to the United States Government?

Mr. LUCE. It is.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why not add to your bill the words that are contained in the following bill on the calendar for the same kind of a proposition, the words "and the United States is to be put to no expense by the erection of this memorial"? That is in a bill which provides for a memorial to be erected in memory of the men in the Agricultural Department who went into the war. It is the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. LUCE. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant the Memorial Association of the First Division, United States Army, permission to erect on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, south of the the State, War, and Navy Building, and east of the Corcoran Art Gallery, a monument to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the monument and pedestal shall be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library, with the advice and recommendations of the National Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by striking out, in line 7, the words "south of," and all of line 8, and in line 9 the words "Art Gallery."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Page 1, line 7, strike out "south of the State, War, and Navy Building, and east of the Corcoran Art Gallery."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under what direction, then, would this memorial be located, and where?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would be located with the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library and the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. And without any direction at all?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is on the public grounds of the United States. It would be just like other memorials.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think, of course, this permission should be granted; granted not only to the First Division, but to any other of the divisions that did service in France. There may be some of the other divisions that will later on ask for this same privilege, and we must treat them all alike.

But there might be also some of the other divisions that did not have service in France, yet which who might have had individual members who did service there with other divisions, and I would be in favor of granting to them this privilege.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield long enough to enable me to make a point of no quorum present?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would have that right anyway. I will state to my parliamentary friend from Illinois that he can take any Member off his feet at any time by simply making the point of no quorum.

Mr. KING. I did not want to take the gentleman off his feet. That is why I asked him.

Mr. BLANTON. I am willing to be taken off my feet if the gentleman wants to make the point.

Mr. KING. I desire to make the point of no quorum present if it will not interrupt my friend.

Mr. BLANTON. I am willing to be interrupted.

Mr. KING. I make the point of no quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum present.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that. There is real work to be done.

Mr. KING. I insist on the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend be satisfied to have a talkfest between the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KING. If we can take up the 40 minutes that it would take to call the roll.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose objection is made?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Illinois interrupt the gentleman who is addressing the House to make the point of no quorum?

Mr. BLANTON. That is admissible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are not in Committee of the Whole. We are in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The same rule prevails. The point of no quorum can be made at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 305 Members have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that our good friend from Illinois [Mr. KING] should attempt to conduct a one-man filibuster. Usually, on practically every other subject than one he is remarkably sane, able, amiable, and affable, but the very minute you mention the reserve bank act or anything that pertains to it the gentleman becomes abnormal. In order that the House may know what actuated the gentleman, I will enlighten it. There is one thing about him that all must admit. You can not pass anything by him. He stays on the floor, and everything that comes up he knows something about it before it comes up. He heard a while ago that the Speaker was going to recognize a gentleman to move to suspend the rules and to pass Senate bill 86, amending the reserve banking act, and it had the usual effect. He immediately went to pieces, and thought he would adjourn the House by making the point of no quorum, but the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had other business to attend to and he would not permit it. [Laughter.]

I appreciate the splendid control which the gentleman from Wyoming has over the House; that he has everything all oiled up; that things have to go just like what he wants them to go or they are not going at all. That is an awfully good condition for things to be in. It is well for the country that what you think about legislation or what your other Republican colleagues might think is immaterial unless you go to the gentleman from Wyoming first and have an understanding with him, for he is not going to let any of you take things in hand. The quicker you men realize that the better off you are going to be. Our young friends who lately came here through the great upheaval of affairs last November, the quicker you recognize the fact that you can not do anything unless the gentleman from Wyoming is willing the better off you will be. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Illinois will now realize that, however much he may think that he has done his duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUSTED). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the word "arts," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "and the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of this memorial."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the proponents of the resolution consent to this amendment.

Mr. LUCE. They do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LUCE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Banking and Currency from the further consideration of the bill S. 86, and pass the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members present, a quorum. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Banking and Currency from further consideration of the bill S. 86, and pass the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. Is the gentleman from Arkansas opposed to the bill? If he is not, I am opposed to the bill, and I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Arkansas opposed to the bill?

Mr. WINGO. I am not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is right to recognize some one opposed to the bill, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, who demands a second.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 25 (a) of the Federal reserve act, being the section added to said act by the act approved December 24, 1919, be amended so that the first sentence of the paragraph prescribing the amount of capital stock a corporation organized under that section is required to have and prescribing also the manner in which such capital stock must be paid in, said paragraph being the fourth paragraph following subparagraph (c) of said section, shall read as follows:

"No corporation shall be organized under the provisions of this section with a capital stock of less than $2,000,000, one-quarter of which must be paid in before the corporation may be authorized to begin business, and the remainder of the capital stock of such corporation shall be paid in installments of at least 10 per cent on the whole amount to which the corporation shall be limited as frequently as one installment at the end of each succeeding two months from the time of the commencement of its business operations until the whole of the capital stock shall be paid in: Provided, however, That whenever $2,000,000 of the capital stock of any corporation is paid in the remainder of the corporation's capital stock or any unpaid part of such remainder may, with the consent of the Federal reserve board and subject to such regulations and conditions as it may prescribe, be paid in upon call from the board of directors; such unpaid subscriptions, however, to be included in the maximum of 10 per cent of the national bank's capital and surplus which a national bank is permitted under the provisions of this act to hold in stock of corporations engaged in business of the kind described in this section and in section 25 of the Federal reserve act as amended: Provided further, That no such corporation shall have liabilities outstanding at any one time upon its debentures, bonds, and promissory notes in excess of ten times its paid-in capital and surplus.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, this act was passed by the House and the Senate last year. It allows corporations to be formed to do a foreign business. The act has operated nicely, but in these strenuous times it is hard to get together four or eight millions for any business purpose; hence this amendment. The bill has been passed by the Senate and now comes to the House for consideration. As I understand it, the only difference between this amendment and last year's bill is that it allows a corporation to pay the money in as needed by the demands of their business. Their action must be approved by the Federal Reserve Board. The old bill called for the payment of 10 per cent every two months until the full amount was paid in. This measure came before our committee and had practically the unanimous indorsement of the committee.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. KING. How long was the bill under consideration by the Banking and Currency Committee?

Mr. APPLEBY. I think about a week, between the time it came in and the time it went out.

Mr. KING. I did not ask that; I asked for the time it was under discussion in the committee.

Mr. APPLEBY. The time was not very long.

Mr. KING. Not over five minutes, was it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not privileged to disclose transactions in the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUSTED). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KING. The Chair does not desire to hear anything on the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. KING. I was not asking to disclose any discussion that occurred in the committee; I asked the gentleman how long it was under consideration by the Banking and Currency Committee. It seems to me that is perfectly proper and that no point of order would lie against it.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, in a letter dated April 16, 1921, to Senator EDGE had this to say:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Washington, April 16, 1921.

MY DEAR SENATOR EDGE: Upon receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 86 to amend section 25(a) of the Federal reserve act, I brought the matter to the attention of the Federal Reserve Board, all members being present except the Secretary of the Treasury. I have not had an opportunity so far of ascertaining what his views are, but the bill was considered by the board in regular session and met with the unanimous approval of those present, and I was authorized to inform you of the fact.

The law as it stands at present authorizes the organization of corporations with a minimum subscribed capital of $2,000,000, of which at least 25 per cent must be paid in before the corporation can begin business; and it provides further that the remainder of the capital stock must be paid in installments of at least 10 per cent on the whole amount of the subscribed capital as frequently as one installment at the end of each succeeding two months from the time of the commencement of business operations until the whole of the subscribed capital stock shall be paid in. Your amendment, as the board understands it, provides in cases of corporations having a larger subscribed capital that whenever $2,000,000 of the capital stock is paid in, the remainder of the corporation's capital stock or any unpaid part of such remainder may, with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, be paid in upon call from the board of directors.

As the present law limits the investment of member banks in the stock of corporations organized under the provisions of either section 25 or 25(a) of the Federal reserve act to an amount not exceeding 10 per cent of the subscribing bank's capital and surplus, the board feels that it is important that no member bank should have a contingent liability for unpaid subscriptions, which, added to the amount paid in, would exceed the maximum of 10 per cent of the subscribing bank's capital and surplus. The proviso in your bill, however, that the unpaid subscriptions must be included in the maximum of 10 per cent of the national bank's capital and surplus which a national bank is permitted under the provisions of the act to hold in stock of corporations engaged in business of the kind described in sections 25 and 25(a) of the Federal reserve act, seems to cover this point adequately and appears to the board to remove any danger of oversubscription.

In the opinion of the board the public is also protected by the second proviso in the bill that no such corporation shall have liabilities outstanding at any one time upon its debentures, bonds, and promissory notes in excess of ten times its paid-in capital and surplus.

Gov. Harding of the Federal Reserve Board in this communication approved it. The following appeal for the support of the Edge law and the Foreign Trade Financing Corporation was made on the 4th of May last before the National Foreign Trade Council by George R. Meyercord, of Chicago:

After calling attention to what he termed "a good job" done by Uncle Sam in the Federal reserve system, Mr. Meyercord predicted that history will repeat itself in Europe. He said in part:

"Countries now struggling bravely to regain their prewar standing have lost little in natural resources or industrial competency. All they need is time—a little time—to recover. They are solvent. They furnish the most inviting field in the world for foreign trade, for they are in need of American goods. They need above all the raw material or the partly manufactured stocks which can be furnished by this country and which can fast be turned into money by the industrial millions of war-sick Europeans.

"The foreign trade financing corporation to my mind offers the solution of the manufacturers' problems. As I view the big fundamental thought back of the Edge law, I see in it this problem solved.

"The Foreign Trade Financing Corporation through its debentures speaks in American dollars to the American investor, and the American investor need only have faith in the vast capital of the corporation and in its management. Surely, it is axiomatic that this will follow. It is unthinkable that the management will not be both able and of a superior order."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understand it from the gentleman's statement, the original bill provided that the amount of capital stock that must be paid in was 25 per cent?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. This amendment changes that to 10 per cent?

Mr. APPLEBY. Oh, no; not at all. The law provides that whenever the capital of a corporation is $2,000,000 paid in, the remainder of capital stock can be paid in upon call by their board of directors, with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board. In other words, if it is an $8,000,000 corporation $2,000,000 must be paid in before they can do business.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The present law states that when they organize and pay in 25 per cent, after that they must pay in 10 per cent every 60 days until it is all paid in. The only change which this proposed law contemplates is to say that they must pay in at least $2,000,000, and that after that instead of paying 10 per cent every 60 days the balance shall be paid as called for by the director. For instance, take the $100,000,000 corporation that is being organized. They must pay in 25 per cent, which is $25,000,000 under the law, and under the present law it would have to be $10,000,000 every 60 days until it was all paid in, while under the amendment which this proposes it shall be paid in in greater or smaller installments until it is all paid in.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman leave out the further provision that the balance must be paid under such regulations as the Federal Reserve Board approves?

Mr. STEVENSON. It must be under such regulations as the Federal Reserve Board shall approve.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. If gentlemen will take Senate bill No. 86 and examine it they will find that the first seven lines, on page 2 of the bill, recite what the present law is, and that the new matter commences with the words "Provided, however," in lines 10 and 11.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How does the Senate bill differ from the House bill, which many of us have in our hands?

Mr. WINGO. They are identical, and as I understand it the procedure will be to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; the motion before the House is to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add anything more except to say, as we do in the Legislature of New Jersey, "This is a meritorious bill and it ought to pass." I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY], I think, has fairly covered the purposes of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy Members, not a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 301 gentlemen answered to their names.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as I said, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY] in the discussion of this measure has covered the main points in this amendment. This bill simply amends the former Edge Act, permitting these corporations to begin business by providing that when 25 per cent of their capital has been paid in, if a capital of $2,000,000 has been subscribed, they can begin business with $500,000 capital. Some of these corporations have been organized with $2,000,000, some organized with $10,000,000 of capital. The American Bankers' Association is in the midst now of organizing one with $100,000,000 capital, and my understanding is that they have subscriptions totaling something over $30,000,000. We might say in pressing this legislation at this time that it is done for the purpose of permitting this corporation or any other corporation of that nature to begin business with the minimum capital requirement. They feel that when they have subscribed the amount of $30,000,000 they should have the right to begin doing business without being compelled to put up any additional capital until it is required in the transaction of their business. Hence this amendment, which simply is to the effect that whenever in the judgment of the board of directors who are engaged in the management of this corporation, if they deem it necessary to begin business, they can do so, and the Federal Reserve Board can give them permission to begin and only require the capital to be paid in as it is required from time to time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. If this is a legitimate business corporation and comes within the rules of the Federal reserve act just the same as any other banking institution, why should not they begin to do business when as much as $30,000,000 is subscribed out of the $100,000,000?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman the present Edge law requires that they shall continue to pay in 10 per cent every 60 days until the full capital is paid in. Bankers and business men who are subscribers to this capital stock do not like to tie up that amount of money in times like the present until it is absolutely needed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The only difference I observe in the present bill is that it vests power in the board of directors to call for this money whenever they deem it necessary, whereas under the Edge bill it necessitates the paying in of 10 per cent every 60 days after the $2,000,000 has been paid in.

Mr. McFADDEN. The minimum capital provided in the Edge law was $2,000,000, and the Edge law provided that there should be 25 per cent, or $500,000, paid in before they could be authorized to do business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is the only change that is made.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the only change.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In the part of the bill down to the first proviso there is no change from existing law, is there?

Mr. McFADDEN. There is not.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That seems very clear. Now, after the proviso it states that whenever $2,000,000 capital stock of any corporation is paid in—suppose there is a $2,000,000 corporation organized. Does that mean that the corporation has to pay in the full capital stock before it starts doing business?

Mr. McFADDEN. It would have to pay 25 per cent, just as the law provides now.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then the proviso does not take into consideration a corporation of that size as I understand it.

Mr. McFADDEN. They are authorized to do business whenever they have paid in 25 per cent of the authorized capital, and the minimum capital authorized is $2,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum here. I regret so to report, but I make the point there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-eight Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield to answer the question I started to ask him?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] wish to use his time?

Mr. KING. I would like to use my time, but I did not know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] controlled when I should talk; but I am willing to go ahead now, and I hope nobody will make the point of no quorum. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment. It is a well-known fact that when the Edge law was passed by this House I did what I could to prevent its passage, and I tried to point out at that time some of the defects of the law. That law was jammed through this House with about 50 Members present on the theory that it would stabilize exchange. That was 18 months ago. Has there been any exchange stabilized? Has the promise that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] made—that he was going to make $330,000,000 for the cotton raisers of the South—been realized since the passage of that act? Have any of the promises made to the Members of this House that the Edge Act was a great cure-all for all our difficulties been realized? Have they, as a matter of fact, fulfilled one solitary promise that they made upon the floor of this House?

Now, because the time is short and because I have not had the time, not expecting this bill to come up to-day, to arrange everything in a logical way, I am going to limit myself, in the first place, while there is a good attendance here, to pointing out just why this amendment should not pass this House, without any reference to the Edge law or without discussing the ruinous dangers upon which an Edge corporation functions.

There was no consideration given in the committee or on the floor to this matter. It was prepared outside. It sprang from the loins of certain people in New York and attorneys from the outside, lugged into the Congress, brought up the steps of the Capitol and into the committee room, and jammed through without any consideration whatever. I will not relate what happened in the Banking and Currency Committee, because it might seem there was something personal in it, although there was absolutely nothing.

I have the highest regard for all of the gentlemen on the Banking and Currency Committee, and I am forced to disagree with them on the passage of the amendment, and I deem it my duty to my district and the Members of the House to attempt to point out why I am here trying in a single-handed way to defeat this amendment. Somebody was in such a rush—I will not say it was the Banking and Currency Committee of the House—the gentleman from New Jersey stated here that only five minutes was given to the consideration of this bill or its effect in committee. When I got there the bill was out. That is all there is to that. It would probably have come out anyway, so far as that is concerned. But somebody was in such a rush that no consideration was given it in the Banking and Currency Committee. Possibly the gentlemen understood the effects of it. Possibly the individuals back of it explained it so clearly that they understood it. Now, they say there is nothing in the bill, that it is a nice little bill. We always bring in nice little bills, but they have a terrific effect after they get into operation. See how it is worded. A trick, not done by the Banking and Currency Committee, but done on the outside. It says:

It shall be amended to read as follows.

Now, in most legislative bodies, Mr. Speaker, they usually set out the part of the act that is repealed, instead of not mentioning what is repealed, and simply saying that after this "it shall read as follows." Knowing that many Members of this House have not time to go and get a copy of the Federal reserve act and read it over for themselves, they neglect that and depend upon other people to do it. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to what it leaves out. There is about a page of matter omitted, the most important part of which is the following.

This amendment which I now read and which is now left out of consideration in this amendment before the House was put in here on the floor of the House when the bill was passed, after full discussion:

No corporation except as herein provided shall, during the time it shall continue its operations, withdraw or permit to be withdrawn, either in the form of dividends or otherwise, any portion of its capital.

If the House passes this amendment and leaves that part out of the Federal reserve law, you have done nothing else but legalize Ponzi's case in Boston. He is in the penitentiary to-day for paying his dividends out of capital stock. Are you going to legalize——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I can not yield just now. Are you going to legalize Ponzi-ism? I will not accuse anybody of putting this over deliberately, and perhaps the gentleman can explain the various provisions of the Federal reserve act that are left out by this amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I wish to say to the gentleman——

Mr. KING. I can not yield. The gentleman can not penetrate the RECORD at this point. It says:

The capital stock of any such corporation may be increased at any time, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, by a vote of two-thirds of its shareholders or by unanimous consent in writing, without a meeting and without a formal vote.

That is left out. When this amendment is passed no longer will that feature be under the control of the Federal Reserve Board. So far as it is controlled, it practically amounts to nothing anyway.

Then it says:

But any such increase of capital stock shall be fully paid within 90 days after such approval.

That is out by virtue of the amendment under consideration.

And be reduced in like manner, providing in no event it shall be less than $2,000,000.

This is eliminated by this amendment.

The following important section will be omitted from the law if the amendment is passed:

Any national banking association may invest in the stock of any corporation organized under this section, but the aggregate amount of stock held in all corporations engaged in business of the kind described in this section and in section 25 of the Federal reserve act as amended shall not exceed 10 per cent of the subscribing bank's capital and surplus.

And so, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that no Member of this House will want to go on record for a measure of this kind, which practically legalizes the payment of dividends out of the capital stock.

Mr. Speaker, in the remainder of my time I may say that by the building up of these Edge contraptions you are simply allowing a fund to be raised for the starting of a European campaign to flood this country with bond obligations. It is nothing more nor less than a great stock-selling campaign. Briefly illustrating this statement in the little time that I have left, without going into details, we might set upon this table before me a great sausage-making machine and into this great big hopper of the sausage-making machine will be put the bonds of Silesia, and the bonds of Poland, and the bonds of Russia.

All the old-time bonds will be dumped into this sausage machine, unguaranteed except so far as the countries themselves guarantee them, and also bonds from France and Italy; and not only that, but from silk factories organized in Italy and now going on, and also factories organized in other foreign countries, button factories, and other factories competing with American goods, which will come into this country and ask us to exempt them from taxation in our own country while they come here and compete with America.

They talked about stabilizing exchange. When will exchange be stabilized? When they have built up Europe; when their buildings have been constructed, and all the international bankers of Europe have gotten their money back, and a few of their cousins in America have gotten their money back, and when Europe shall stand on an equal footing with America. Then and then only will exchange be stabilized. You must sell debentures enough in this country to allow for the reconstruction of Europe. How can you do it when there will be $25,000,000,000 or more of these foreign debentures sold in this country? What are you going to do with the bonds of the Federal farm loan banks that are not selling now, although they carry 5 per cent and are tax free, when you are selling foreign debentures paying 10 per cent? It will be a fine thing for the people to buy these things, and everything will be done in order to have the people look at this situation from the standpoint of the international banker who is making commissions.

I have no quarrel with any bankers or any international bankers. But this is a fine way for them to make money, and a whole lot of money, and to make it out of your pocket and out of my pocket. I stand here to-day to tell you that if you want to veto the operation of these Edge banks you should vote against this bill on principle.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to have some information concerning this bill. I am not clear as to its provisions. First, is not this a discrimination against the smaller institutions in favor of the larger?

Mr. KING. It is. The operation of the whole scheme will cause the rich to become richer and the poor to become poorer.

Mr. MORGAN. Does not this bill provide that 25 per cent of the capital stock of the $2,000,000 corporation shall be paid in?

Mr. KING. I think it does.

Mr. MORGAN. Then, does it not provide that if it is capitalized at $50,000,000, it is required to pay in only $2,000,000, and the remainder of the capital is subject to the control of the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not also a fact that they can pay dividends against the capital stock instead of against the capital paid in, thereby discriminating against the small institutions?

Mr. KING. Yes. There would be no small institutions in this country when the Edge debenture-issuing banks get in full swing.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I call the gentleman's attention to the provision on page 2, "That no corporation shall have liabilities outstanding at any one time upon its debentures, bonds, or promissory notes in excess of ten times its paid-in capital and surplus," and then remark that no matter what the capital authorized is, it is the amount of capital that is paid in that counts. These corporations are limited in obligations and notes to ten times the amount of capital paid in.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a minute to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency a question?

Mr. KING. If you do not take it out of my time I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. May I have the attention of the chairman? After the first proviso, where it reads, "That whenever $2,000,000 of the capital stock of any corporation shall be paid in," and so forth, did the committee consider using the language, "whenever 25 per cent of the capital stock had been paid in"? If that were in, then you would put a little corporation, say, with an authorized capital stock of $2,000,000 and a big corporation with an authorized capital stock of $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 on absolutely the same basis.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that I just remarked that the authorized capital has nothing to do with it. It is the amount of capital that they have when they commence to do business. They can only issue obligations of ten times the amount of capital paid in.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But the little corporation has to pay up every 60 days and the $100,000,000 corporation does not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY] is entitled to the floor. There are four minutes remaining on each side.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in spite of the legislation contained in the Edge bill, the Federal Reserve Board, exercising its usual autocratic powers, decided, in star chamber, as usual, that there should be two kinds of Edge corporations; one kind that bases its business upon taking acceptances and the other basing its business upon the issuance of debentures and holding that the Edge corporation which issued debentures should not, as a matter of fact, take acceptances. That is the ruling of the Federal Reserve Board, carefully reviewed by the National Trades Council. The defeat of this amendment will not injure any Edge corporations that are doing an acceptance business. I am here to say that so far as that is concerned, and so far as financing individual shipments is concerned, these corporations are doing fairly well. The same business could have been done by the banks which were organized under section 25 of the Federal reserve act.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves two minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, in the two minutes allotted to me I can not say all I would like to say; but I am for this bill for the very reason that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] is against it.

There is going to be a great deal of foreign financing in this country, and I want to see it done under the control of a Government agency. I do not want wild-catting throughout this country. That is the reason why we brought that kind of business under the control of a governmental agency when we passed the Edge Act. What does this bill do? It does not do anything that my friend from Illinois says. I would not charge the gentleman with trying to mislead you, but I say he does not know anything about the bill. He has not read it. He told you it repealed the provision of the existing law to prohibit them from paying dividends out of capital. The gentleman is wrong. If he will read the bill he will see that it simply amends the first sentence of the fourth paragraph of subsection (c) of the Edge Act. After the first sentence there are six lines before you get down to the provision that he says is repealed. What on earth does this bill do, gentlemen? All it does is that instead of requiring the capital stock, as now required by law, to be paid in 10 per cent every 60 days after the initial payment, 25 per cent having been paid where the 25 per cent equals $2,000,000, they do not have to pay in any more except upon the call of their own directors. That is all there is to it. The gentleman says it gives an advantage to the larger corporation. It does not. If he will read the last few lines of the bill they answer that statement. I would not be for the bill except for the last few lines. The paid-up, not subscribed, capital stock is always the basis. They can not assume liabilities in excess of ten times their paid-up capital stock—not the stock which is subscribed.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I can not yield. I have not the time.

In other words, the paid-up capital stock represents the basis of business and liabilities. Why should the bankers of the country be required to pay up their subscriptions on this capital stock, to go into the coffers of this corporation, to a greater amount than is needed? The bankers do not wish to pay it in until the volume of business requires it to be sent to the headquarters of the corporation. That is all there is to it. It is not worth the row we have had about it. It liberalizes the requirements of the law, and is done at the request of the bankers of the United States, who are asking for this amendment, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made an argument of the kind he has just now made on a previous occasion—that the bill ought to be passed because "the gentleman from Illinois" was against it. Now, I would not accuse the gentleman from Arkansas of attempting to mislead this committee, but you heard just exactly what he said. Now, you can look at the bill. It provides that the act shall be amended to read as follows, and then the provision appearing on page 2 is the paragraph which it refers to. In that paragraph in the original law are the identical things that I read to this House, which are cut out by the passage of this amendment. That could have been avoided had there been less haste.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. KING) there were—ayes 131, noes 24.

Mr. KING. The House having divided, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-four Members present, a quorum.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the yeas and nays. As many as favor ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eleven Members, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1154. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near the city of Dumas, Mo.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. On what subject?

Mr. HAUGEN. On the packers bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD on the money question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MOORE of Virginia (at the request of Mr. BLAND of Virginia), indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, for three days, to attend exercises at the University of Tennessee.

To Mr. EVANS, for three weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHEELER, until further notice, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. HUDSPETH, indefinitely (at the request of Mr. PARRISH), on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, June 7, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

H. J. Res. 81. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War; to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NICHOLSON presented six petitions of sundry citizens of Carlton, Bristol, Lamar, Granada, Ramah, Kutch, Simla, Kit Carson, Boone, Orchard, Cedaredge, and Briggsdale, all in the State of Colorado, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. OVERMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Raleigh, N. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented two petitions of sundry citizens of Willcox and Parker, Ariz., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HARRIS presented six resolutions of the Commissioners of Roads and Revenues of Bibb County, Road Commissioners of Bibb County, Board of Roads and Revenues of Dodge County, Board of Roads and Revenues of Bartow County, Board of Commissioners of Decatur County, and the Good Roads Association of Gilmer County, all in the State of Georgia, favoring the enactment of legislation to aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions of the pastor, Rev. F. B. Stevenson, and congregation of the Presbyterian Church of New Salem, and the Synod of North Dakota, Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (adopted at Kenmare), both in the State of North Dakota, favoring the calling of an international conference for the purpose of considering the question of world disarmament, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the State Directorate of North Dakota, American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, at Fargo, N. Dak., May 29, 1921, favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILLIS presented 16 telegrams, in the nature of petitions, signed by Lawrence R. Plank, Francis K. Fassett, H. L. Orrman, F. C. Swain, Alex Euchenhofer, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Lesh, Mrs. H. L. Orrman, Ellen Harrigan, Bernice Harrigan, Lida M. Swain, Leila A. Thomas, Ida Kalbfus, Matilda Beck, Sara H. Pierce, Edith L. Boyer, and Emma L. Peacock, all of Dayton, Ohio, praying that an international conference be called for the purpose of considering the question of world disarmament, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Ohio Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, adopted at Barnesville, Ohio, June, 1921, favoring the calling of an international conference for the purpose of considering the question of world disarmament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Society of Friends, of Liberal, Kans., praying that an international conference be called for the purpose of considering the question of world disarmament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented 12 resolutions of sundry citizens of Kansas City and Argentine, Kans., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Kansas Grain Dealers' Association, of Kansas City, Mo., favoring a reduction in freight rates on grain and grain products, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Kansas Grain Dealers' Association, at Kansas City, Mo., May 26, 1921, protesting against the enactment of a sales or turnover tax law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented four petitions of sundry citizens of Argonia, Savonburg, Stork, Walnut, Harveyville, Johnson, New Ulysses, and Olathe, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. REED. I present a resolution signed by the president, professors, and students of Kenrick Theological Seminary, of Webster Grove, Mo., requesting the Government of the United States to acknowledge the independence of the Irish republic. I ask that the resolution, which is short, be printed in the RECORD and that the names of the first six signers thereto may also be printed.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the principle of the United States as enunciated by the founder of this Republic has always been that "All just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed"; and
Whereas it has been the traditional policy of the United States to recognize the independence of oppressed nations struggling for the God-given rights of freedom and justice; and
Whereas the United States entered and brought to a successful culmination the late war with the avowed and expressed object of procuring self-determination for small nations; and
Whereas in accordance with this principle the people of Ireland in December, 1918, by a vote of approximately three to one, decided to live under a republican form of government; and
Whereas a republican government de facto and de jure has been established in Ireland: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the faculty and students of Kenrick Theological Seminary, Webster Grove Mo., hereby request the Government of the United States to acknowledge the independence of the Irish republic.

V. Rev. M. S. RYAN, C. M., D. D., Ph. D., President.
Rev. CHARLES L. SOUWAY, C. M., Ph. D., D. D., S. S. D., Vice President.
Rev. F. V. CORCORAN, C. M., Ph. D., S. T. D., Professor of Apologetics.
Rev. FRANCIS J. REMLER, C. M., Secretary.
Rev. JOSEPH P. DONOVAN, C. M., J. C. D., Professor of Ethics and Canon Law.
Rev. THOS. D. COYNE, C. M., D. D., Professor of Theology.

SALE OF DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent to present certain reports from the Committee on Printing, and I shall ask further unanimous consent that they may be considered at once.

I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Printing the bill (S. 435) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain department publications and to provide for crediting the department's printing allotment with the proceeds, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As the Senator desires immediate consideration of the bill, I ask that it may be read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, at a price to be fixed by him based on the cost of paper and presswork, such technical, scientific, statistical, and other publications issued by the Department of Commerce or any bureau, office, or service therein as he may deem best for the public interest: Provided, That the receipts from such sales shall be deposited in the Treasury and credited to, and to that extent increase, the department's allotment of the appropriation for printing and binding for any fiscal year within which such deposits may be made: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the usual free distribution of any publications to officials of the Government or to foreign Governments, libraries, and scientific associations and institutions of learning as provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it contemplates the sale of surplus documents, or does it contemplate the publication of documents for sale?

Mr. MOSES. It contemplates putting an end to the practice of having reprints for the purpose of free distribution. The purpose of the bill is that interested parties who wish copies of reports and documents which have heretofore been printed and which are out of print may purchase them, in order that the practice of having a reprint order issued by the Joint Committee on Printing may cease and that further free distribution of the documents may be ended, so that those persons who really wish documents may get them, and get them as provided in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. By applying to the Public Printer, he can order a reprint at the expense of the person who wants the document?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the bill place the basis of sale above the question of cost?

Mr. MOSES. Not at all. The basis is exactly that of other documents which are now printed for sale at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is that basis?

Mr. MOSES. The cost of the paper and presswork and binding and 10 per cent above that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would mean that the Government would not be out anything in the way of outlay?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, the Government would not be out at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report an original Senate resolution providing for the printing as a document of the proceedings of the twenty-second meeting of the convention of the American instructors of the deaf, which was held June 28, 1920, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is the estimate of the cost of the printing of this publication?

Mr. MOSES. It is $1,120. The estimate is attached to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution (S. Res. 86) was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the proceedings of the twenty-second meeting of the convention of the American instructors of the deaf, held June 28, 1920, be printed as a Senate document.

THE DADE MASSACRE.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report favorably without amendment the resolution (S. Res. 40) which was submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] April 13, 1921, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the paper entitled "The Dade Massacre," by Frederick Cubberly, together with the accompanying maps and illustrations, be printed as a public document.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the estimate of the cost of printing that document?

Mr. MOSES. The estimate which is attached to the resolution is $58.20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CAPITULATIONS AND CONSULAR INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report favorably without amendment the resolution (S. Res. 13) which was submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] March 11, 1921, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "The Origin of the Capitulations and of the Consular Institution," by G. Bie Ravndal, American consul general at Constantinople, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the estimate of the cost of printing in that case?

Mr. MOSES. The estimate is $541.35. I will say, by way of further explanation, that this document contains a history of the development of the capitulations in force in Mohammedan countries, particularly in Turkey, and their present status. The capitulations, as is well known, Mr. President, will be a subject of consideration when we come to reestablish our diplomatic relations with the Ottoman Empire, and certain of the capitulations will disappear if we follow the practice of European Governments which have established their relations with the Turkish Government. It is possible, indeed, that the whole body of capitulations may disappear. The document the printing of which is here provided has been written by Mr. G. Bie Ravndal, who has been consul general at Constantinople for a number of years. This document is offered by way of supplement to the other information along this line which has been printed by order of the Committe on Foreign Relations. It so happened that this particular manuscript was presented to the Senate by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and was referred to the Committee on Printing. Otherwise it would have been taken up by the Committee on Foreign Relations at the same time they considered the other documents in connection with this whole subject.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report an original resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 87) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the first annual report of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission, December 6, 1920, be printed as a Senate Document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. For the information of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], Mr. President, I will say that the estimate of the cost for the printing of this document is $550. This is one of the reports which, by statute, are made to Congress and which, by the statute, are required to be printed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORT ON OIL INDUSTRY.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate made an order for the printing of the report of the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission regarding the oil industry. Upon inquiry I find that the Federal Trade Commission itself is having the report printed, and that a sufficient number of copies will be available from that source. So it seems to me that it is unnecessary to duplicate the printing of the document. In order to save the expense which would be incurred by doing so, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the printing of the report as a public document may be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I also ask that the report, which is lying on the Secretary's table, be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be so referred.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 1979) granting a pension to Matilda T. Lyman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLSON:

A bill (S. 1980) for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 1982) to change the title of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to "The general court of the District of Columbia"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1983) to improve the street car service in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, are we in the morning hour or has the Senate met following a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is in session following a recess, there being, therefore, no morning hour.

Mr. REED. Then, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce several bills, which I send to the desk, and also certain pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the bills will be received.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 1984) for the repeal of certain war-time legislation, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1985) to prohibit citizens of the United States from accepting any present, emolument, office, title, or decoration of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign State; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1992) granting a pension to Lacy L. Garrison (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1993) granting a pension to William F. Murray (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1994) granting a pension to Sarah V. Burke;

A bill (S. 1995) granting a pension to John F. Ellis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1996) granting a pension to Andrew J. Williams (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1997) granting an increase of pension to Mary Reilly;

A bill (S. 1998) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hayes; and

A bill (S. 1999) granting a pension to Gallant Hays (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 2000) for the relief of Capt. James G. Oakley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 2001) to increase from 30 years to 35 years the age limit for appointments in the grade of second lieutenant in the Regular Army of persons who served as officers in the United States Army in the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2002) for the relief of Charles D. Shay; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 2003) to amend section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 2004) for the relief of the First International Bank of Sweet Grass, Mont.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. REED:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain equipment to the Modern Woodmen of America; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DIAL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 46, line 8, after the word "further," to strike out the balance of line 8, and all of lines 9 and 10 down to the word "And"; in line 11 strike out "$100,000" and insert "$1,000,000"; in line 12, after the word "and," strike out "no person" and insert "not more than 25 persons"; and in line 13, after the word "annum," add "and no person shall receive more than $5,500," so as to make the proviso read:

"Provided, That whenever possible officers, warrant officers, noncommissioned officers, or other enlisted men shall be detailed as instructors: And provided further, That not more than $1,000,000 shall be expended for salaries and not more than 25 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum, and no person shall receive more than $5,500," etc.

He also submitted an amendment providing that no part of any moneys appropriated in the Army appropriation bill shall be used to pay United States soldiers now in Germany, France, or Belgium from 90 days after the approval thereof, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment providing that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of not less than three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, and that such committee shall inspect once during each fiscal year not less than two of the general and special service schools of the Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate, and that Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. FRENCH, Mr. WOOD, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. OLIVER were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) creating a joint commission to be known as the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Army appropriation bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole under an agreement that the bill shall be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered. The Secretary will read the bill for committee amendments.

Mr. DIAL. I send to the desk an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. I shall offer the amendment at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, line 17, to increase the appropriation for contingencies of the Army from "$75,000" to "$168,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from New York what is the necessity for the increase proposed by the amendment? In this connection let me call attention to the proviso reading:

That not to exceed $118,000 of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the payment of salaries of civilian employees.

Inasmuch as I have mentioned the question of civilian employees, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that upon over 20 pages of the bill provisions are made for civilian employees and large sums are appropriated—$4,000,000 in one place, $2,500,000 in another place, and one million several hundred thousand dollars in another. I wish to inquire whether or not there has been any reduction in the number of civilian employees in the War Department, and, furthermore, what is the necessity for such a large number of civilian employees to be provided for under the appropriation carried in the pending bill? It seems to me, Mr. President, that a private business would conduct the activities herein provided for with one-third of the number of employees carried by the bill. Not only civilian employees are available but, as the Senator from New York knows, there are thousands of men in the Army who give their services to some of the activities, clerical and otherwise, that are provided for in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the item now before the Senate I will discuss first, and then say a few words generally in regard to the matters brought up by the Senator from Utah. Under the heading "Contingencies of the Army" there are carried on all the activities of the Director of Sales and also of the War Department Claims Board, involving the settlement of claims brought by contractors and still pending from the Great War time period of activity.

One hundred and eighteen thousand dollars is authorized out of the total of $168,000 for the expenses of the director of sales and of the claims board. Of that $118,000 the director of sales will have $68,000 and the claims board $50,000. The $68,000 allotted under that provision to the director of sales is about half what he had for the current fiscal year. It will employ 48 persons, who are engaged under the supervision of the director of sales in the selling of surplus property. In that office of the War Department they have sold $1,333,000,000 worth of property. I mention that figure as the cost price of the property. They have turned into the Treasury in cash approximately $900,000,000; they have on hand to-day, already declared surplus and ready for sale, and, indeed, they are endeavoring to make the sales, $180,000,000 worth of property, and they have been notified that within a short time the War Department will turn over to them for sale $250,000,000 worth in addition. When the committee granted a special hearing to the Assistant Secretary of War, who has general charge of the business activities of the War Department, and was informed by him of the dire effect upon the organization of the sales director if he could only have twenty or thirty thousand dollars to supervise this vast work, the committee made up its mind that $68,000 total expenditure as an overhead for the carrying on of this tremendous activity was an exceedingly small cost. The percentage figured out in comparison to the money that is coming into the Treasury would be infinitesimal.

Now, as to the claims board, $50,000 of the appropriation is to employ 33 persons to assist the claims board in adjusting and passing upon the claims that are still pending. They have already settled thousands and thousands of claims, and there are still pending something over 300 claims. It is estimated—and, of course, it is but an estimate—that the Government in the settlement of those three hundred-odd claims still pending may have to expend $43,000,000.

The civilians under the claims board are employed as auditors. They are experts in the auditing of the manufacturers' books, men who know about the handling of raw materials, what the costs are, what the Government should be charged and what it should not be charged. The claims board has saved in its reconsideration of claims that have come up to them from boards in the field millions and millions of dollars. So we thought it was a pretty good thing to keep these two activities, the director of sales and the claims board, operating effectively but not extravagantly; and when one considers that we have $43,000,000 at stake in the settlement of the claims still pending, $50,000 expended to protect the interests of the Government is a very small sum. The committee was entirely persuaded that the estimate made by the Assistant Secretary of War was justified, and it unanimously agreed to accept the estimate.

As to the civilian employees of the War Department, the Senator has asked me a question which it would require a somewhat lengthy address to answer. These civilian employees in the War Department are very numerous. They will be much less numerous when this bill passes. I think it fair to say that this bill itself, reported as it is from the Senate committee—and we accept the House figures on all the items save this little item that we have just been discussing affecting civilian employees—will compel a reduction of the number of civilian employees employed by the War Department and the Army by at least 30 per cent, and the bill for the current fiscal year compelled them to reduce 40 per cent.

The reduction to-day is going on very fast. Most of those civilian employes have been employed for the purpose of taking care of these enormous storage depots, the Army supply bases built during the war, the powder factories that are standing idle, owned by the Government, with valuable machinery and equipment in them but not yet liquidated. Slowly but surely that stuff is being liquidated. The Secretary of War tells us that he is going to liquidate it much faster. He has got to get rid of it.

It is the overhead that is the burden to the Army, not the pay of the enlisted men. It is the tremendous overhead left over from the war; and the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate have joined hands in forcing very severe reductions in several of the items to which the Senator has alluded by stating that not more than a certain amount shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees, and those limitations constitute tremendous reductions over the requests made by the department itself under the last administration.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee.

Within the last few days I have received correspondence, as perhaps other Senators have, relative to the employment of a concern of expert engineers for the purpose of making a survey of this property. I have taken the position that that is the business of the Government itself; that there ought not to be any civilian employees or any contract with any private concern to do such a thing. I want to ask the Senator whether he knows what the attitude of the War Department is or would be toward any such employment as that. Does the Senator understand what I refer to?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I regret to say that I can not answer the question. I have never heard that suggestion made before, and have never heard it discussed.

Mr. WILLIS. I know that it is made. There is a company of engineers seeking employment for the purpose of making a survey of this Government property. I have taken the position that seems to me to be correct, that that is the business of the War Department itself; that there is no reason why private concerns should be employed to tell the Government what it owns.

The second question I want to ask, which is more important, is whether, in the opinion of the Senator, this appropriation could be used for such a purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIS. If it could be, I am not for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It certainly could not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the question asked by my colleague [Mr. KING] as to the number of civilian employees in the District separated from the War Department of late, I will state that in the month of October there were 385 employees separated from the War Department; in the month of November there were 266 separated from the War Department—that is, I mean, there were that many less employees—in the month of December there were 165 less employees; in the month of January, 1921, there were 350 separated from the War Department; in the month of March there were 405 separated from the War Department; and in the month of April there were 387. I will say to my colleague that I have not yet received the May report, but I shall within a very few days.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of my colleague whether that includes separations from the War Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is from the War Department. I will say that there were nine hundred and some separated from the War Risk Insurance Bureau alone in the month of May.

Mr. KING. May I likewise inquire how many are in the employ of the War Department, as shown by the report from the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. SMOOT. The report that I have here does not give the total number of employees. It gives the additions and the separations and the net figures of increase or decrease of all the departments of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he is not referring merely to the classified civil-service employees?

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the civilian employees in the District were what were referred to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department has discharged ten times as many as the Senator has read. The civilian employees cared for in this bill are not, except in a very few instances, civil-service employees; and when I said "a 40 per cent reduction," I meant a reduction of civilians in the field, not here in Washington—at the camps, at the storage depots, the Army supply bases, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct as to that. In fact, I think many thousands of them have been separated from the service in the last six months.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just let me state one thing. In about a year and a half, owing, I think very largely, to the severity of the reductions in the appropriations, nearly 60,000 civilians were separated from the Quartermaster's Department. They had ninety-odd thousand civilian employees in the Quartermaster Department shortly after the end of the war, and this last year it has been reduced to 34,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. In reference to the inquiry by the Senator from Utah, the hearings show that one item requested by Assistant Secretary Wainwright was $50,000 for our civilian employees for the claims department, and $68,000 for our sales department. The statement was made that the amount of surplus on hand now to be disposed of was $155,543,000 at cost, and the Assistant Secretary further stated that in addition to this practically $155,000,000 worth of property to be disposed of they have $250,000,000 worth. So that the proposition is to have a sufficient force to dispose of $405,000,000 worth of property within the next year, and it was thought that $168,000 would be a reasonable allowance for the force necessary to handle that amount of property during the year.

Mr. KING. I see.

Mr. President, I want to take the time of the Senate for just a moment to call attention to the enormous amounts which are paid for civilian employees, notwithstanding the promises of reduction and indeed the actual reductions which have occurred in some of the branches of the military service of the Government.

I invite attention to the heading "Office of the Chief Signal Officer." Provision is made for salaries of civilian employees, and an appropriation is made of $2,835,000. We all know that a large number of the employees in that department are those who have been inducted into the service. The personnel is not very large. Notwithstanding the fact that a considerable number of officers and enlisted men discharge clerical duties and perform other work that civilian employees are called upon to perform, $600,000 of that amount is called for by this bill for additional civilian employees.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not "additional." I wish the Senator would not use that expression; it is less.

Mr. KING. Well, additional to the employees furnished by the Government itself; that is, those who are in the military service. I was remarking—the Senator did not catch my words—that many officers and enlisted men perform work of a clerical or business character, and constructive and important, and in addition to those employees—I use the word "employees" in contradistinction to purely military service—$600,000 are called for for additional civilian employees. Now, it seems to me that the amount appropriated for civilian employees is entirely too great, measured by the entire appropriation.

I call attention to page 13, under the head of "Air Service." The bill carries an appropriation of $19,200,000. Then follows this provision:

Provided, That not to exceed $4,000,000 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees other than those employed in experimental and research work; not exceeding $250,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium.

I have no objection to the latter item. I think that is a very wise expenditure; but it seems to me that $4,000,000 out of $19,200,000 is entirely too much for civilian employees. We all know that in that service a great many officers and enlisted men perform important work of the same character, or much the same character, as that performed by some of the civilian employees.

On page 18 appropriations are carried for a large number of clerks and messengers and laborers in the General Staff College.

On page 19 provision is made for a large number of additional clerks and civil-service messengers at headquarters of the several territorial departments, corps areas, etc.

On page 22, for compensation of clerks and other employees of the finance department, $1,420,000 is appropriated.

So, Mr. President, on pages 13, 18, 19, 22, 28, 29, 30, 35, 46, 51, 54, 55, 61, 69, 75, 77, 78, 79, and many other pages, large amounts, aggregating millions and tens of millions of dollars, are carried for civilian employees. I believe that the amount we are called upon to appropriate for the overhead is entirely too great. It seems to me that the amount appropriated for clerks is not justified by any reasonable demands that might be made for necessary civilian employees in these departments.

Let me ask of the Senator—because I do not want to take the time to challenge attention to each of these items—whether the committee examined them carefully with a view to determining whether these millions, if not tens of millions, of dollars are required for civilian employees in the War Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The committee examined them with the greatest of care. We had extensive hearings at the last session of Congress. The figures to which the Senator has alluded are the same that were reported at the last session and passed by both Houses.

Mr. KING. Let me say, Mr. President, that it seems upon the face of this bill that we pay more for clerks and noncombative forces under this bill than it cost to maintain an Army of 100,000 men before the war——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a pretty rash statement.

Mr. KING. In some countries, at least; and I am not sure but what these costs are not approximately as great as the annual cost in our own country for an Army which we had for many years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator asked me a question, and he is now going on to make some more statements.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the Senator's last statement is so far from being accurate that I do not think I will spend much time in answering it now. I will just take up one or two of these things and show the Senator what the committee has done.

On page 10, under the Signal Corps, the Senator criticizes an appropriation of $600,000 for civilian employees. They begged us to give them $1,398,000 for that same item. We cut the estimate more than in half. Those employees are very largely used in taking care of the storage depots, in which vast quantities of Signal Corps equipment left over from the war are stored. That stuff has to be handled; it has to be taken care of, checked up, and shipped out when it is sold by the director of sales. We cut the estimate, as I said, from $1,398,000 down to $600,000. I think the Senator will admit that that is a fairly drastic cut. We went into it very carefully, and so did the House committee, and we came to an agreement on these civilian employees. We were more intent upon reducing those items than any other.

In the Air Service the Senator criticizes the $4,000,000 appropriated for civilian employees. They begged us for $4,917,000 for that same item. We cut off practically $2,000,000 from their request. Those men are employed in about the same way, in taking care of the huge accumulations of airplane equipment, supplies of all kinds, various articles stored away by the hundreds of thousands and millions. It is stuff they are trying to get rid of. Some of it is very hard to get rid of; there is no use for it in civil life. Some of it has not much more than scrap value. It is hard to get rid of it. We are forcing them to discharge men. We forced $2,000,000 worth of civil employees out of the service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I want to ask him a question, if it will not interrupt him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will not.

Mr. REED. With an Army of 200,000 men, why is it that this work can not substantially all be done by Army officers and by enlisted men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then they would never do any soldiering at all.

Mr. REED. What soldiering is there for them to do?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are training all the time.

Mr. REED. Does it require 200,000 men to take charge of these supplies?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. REED. How many?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know; but we have not 200,000 men in the United States in the Army. The figure upon which the Senator bases his assumption is wrong. We have not 200,000 men in the Army.

Mr. REED. We have 15,000 men in Germany, guarding the interests of France and England, not those of the United States in any particular, for we have no interests there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator forgets the 35,000 in our overseas possessions.

Mr. REED. I have that in mind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So that does not leave anything like 200,000 to guard property in the United States.

Mr. REED. There are soldiers in the Philippines, some in Hawaii, and some few, I think, in China. Probably it is necessary to have them there; I am not speaking of that. But I can not understand why it is not entirely feasible for some of the enlisted men and officers to do the work of guarding Army supplies.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is an utter mistake in a time of profound peace to follow a policy based upon the idea that a soldier shall never do anything except handle a gun. I think it will be necessary to introduce into our Army system the idea of the Army at least doing its own work. It seems to me absurd to set up any other system. I know of no avocation in life which can not be filled by some of the enlisted men or some of the officers of the Army.

If we employed them in that way we would have them subject to call. They would be cutting down expenses and in that way earning their livelihood as they went along. I think it is a question that ought to be considered in the most serious way.

I know of no greater absurdity in the world than the one exemplified when we constructed our training camps. We called hundreds of thousands of young men from all walks of life. There were brick masons and stone masons, carpenters and architects, clerks and typewriters, and blacksmiths; representatives of every trade and profession in the United States were called to the colors. It became necessary to build some houses for those men to live in, and instead of employing them at that work and doing it almost without cost to the Government we sent out and took from civil life men who ought to have been employed in civil life, paid them exorbitant, outrageous wages, while we had in the camps thousands of men who could not work at military evolutions all of the time and who would have been the better for employment. It was never done in any other war before this in the history of the world, so far as I know.

In the Civil War when the armies of the Federal Government went into camp they built their camps and were very glad to have the opportunity to do so. When the armies of the Confederacy went into camp they built their camps, and were glad to do so. If we had had the modern system instead of an army marching into a wilderness, chopping down the trees, and building the log cabins in which they were to live through the winter, as was done by Grant and Sherman and Sheridan, and by Lee and Jackson, they would have had a lot of carpenters and gentlemen employed to go down there and build those camps. The result would have been that they would not have built them in time for an army to occupy before it was again on the march. It is a system of utter waste. It is a system I do not hesitate to denounce as idiotic. You have an Army, and, in addition, a lot of wet nurses to take care of the Army. Instead of conceiving the idea that bright, keen, splendid young men sent into France, sent into Arizona, or sent anywhere else, have every ability to take care of themselves, we must send along a lot of people to look after them. It is foolishness reduced to the last degree.

I heard it expressed very well by a hard-headed old farmer at the time we were sending our troops to France. He said, "I suppose it is high treason to have an opinion of your own, but if I was fighting this war I would send one army to France, not three." He meant he would send an army of soldiers over there, not a host of people, who should have had guns in their hands, to sell them cigarettes at a profit and to open stores for the distribution of supplies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator knows, of course, that the Army did all its work in France, that everything that was built was built by the Army, that they laid every rail, built every bridge, storehouse, barracks, that everything was done by soldiers.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator has conceded the point I am urging. If they could do it in France they can do it in the United States, and that ends that question and there ought to be no further discussion about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York does not accept that conclusion.

Mr. REED. I accept it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is a very different state of affairs on this side of the water.

Mr. REED. Yes; there is a different state of affairs. There is no enemy in front, no enemy behind, no enemy on either side, and they have all the time there is. That is the difference. The Senator says the Army did all its work over there. Let us see about that. How many millions of dollars were collected here and expended by gentlemen wearing uniforms who went over there and opened up places of amusement and places to sell goods?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator refer to the American Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A.?

Mr. REED. I am referring to the Y. M. C. A., and I am referring to the Red Cross in part.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And to the Knights of Columbus?

Mr. REED. Yes; in part. I am not afraid to talk about those organizations. I saw many a fellow running around this country with a uniform on who was sound in wind, limb, and eyesight, and in that business because he did not want to be on the battle front; and the money all came from this country to send them there. When you talk to me about an ambulance corps, or when you talk to me about a Red Cross nurse, I admit that those people performed a heroic and splendid service and are entitled to every degree of credit for it, and it was a service that aided the Army and did not detract from it. But there were a good many hundred thousand other people sent over there—if not by this Government, they went under the authority of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. REED. Yes; I mean just what I said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A good many hundred thousand were sent over there?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the Government?

Mr. REED. Yes; sent over there by the American Government or the American people, and every one of them financed out of the pocketbooks of the American people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the Senator will not forget that he said a good many hundred thousand were sent over.

Mr. REED. I said that exactly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On what ships did they go, the "good many hundred thousand"?

Mr. REED. They all got ships.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What ships?

Mr. REED. I could not tell the name of a ship that carried a soldier.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am afraid the Senator can not.

Mr. REED. I do not understand that kind of a question. Does the Senator dispute the fact?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Whose ships?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator dispute the fact?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I dispute the fact that there were a good many hundred thousand.

Mr. REED. How many does the Senator say went over?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose not over 4,000 or 5,000.

Mr. REED. All told?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; civilians.

Mr. REED. I have seen more than that number myself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator was not there.

Mr. REED. No; I was here. I had not any opportunity to be there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am speaking of people who went abroad. I desire to hold the Senator to his statement. Many hundred thousand civilians were sent over with the Army, said the Senator.

Mr. REED. No; I did not say they were sent over with the Army. I said they were sent over there, and perhaps I ought to have made the statement that they were engaged in this service. They may not all have gone over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Ah, but the Senator said they were sent over there.

Mr. REED. What is the difference, if they were paid by the American people, whether they drew the money in France or drew it in New York City? It does not make a bit of difference. I have not any time to quibble about such things. That is aside from what I was discussing. There was an army of these men.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly; the Senator may ask any question he wishes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator mean that these men who went over there were engaged in private business at Government expense?

Mr. REED. No; but I mean that many of them went over there in uniform, that they opened up establishments, that they sold the American soldiers supplies, and that they often charged them more than the market price.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If I understand the Senator correctly, he charges that certain men, a large number of men, went to Europe during the period of the Great War in the uniform of the United States and profiteered on the American Army. Is that true?

Mr. REED. The Senator can put any construction he pleases on my statement. The statement I made was that there was a large number of these gentlemen over there in France doing work that consisted of opening up shows and fandangoes of different kinds, that some were engaged in selling supplies to American soldiers, and that in many instances they sold them at a profit. I will go further and charge that they sold some of the goods that were donated by the American people, because I have been told by soldiers, many of them, that they had bought articles which they found had been made and donated.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Of course, no one condones offenses of that character. I presume the Senator has some definite information?

Mr. REED. I have had it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator should submit it to the Senate.

Mr. REED. It is one of those things to be put in the background.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hardly think there were a good many hundred thousand of those men.

Mr. REED. How many hundred thousand were there, if the Senator please, who were engaged in this work, going over the country in various ways and chasing back and forth to Europe?

I do not care to spend a lot of time discussing that question. It is not material to what I am saying except that if the American Army in France, with all the work that was necessary to be done to train and get ready for a fight with an enemy just a few miles away, could do what the Senator from New York has said they did—namely, do all of their own work, build their own bridges, erect their own quarters, and handle their own stores—it is a strange thing if in this country in a time of profound peace they can not look after their own supplies. Must they now call upon the Congress for a large civilian force to do their work for them?

Ultimately the Army, if you have one of any considerable size in this country, must take care of itself. You can not make it self-supporting, but it can be made to do its own work.

When I am told there are millions of dollars worth of airplane supplies here and that most of it is junk, I want to know why it can not be guarded by an American soldier who is looked after by an American officer, and why you have to go out and hire a man to look after these supplies who ought to be working and earning some money in some other way.

I desire to say a word or two about the bill. When the Army appropriation bill was before the Senate a few months ago in the last session of Congress I was one of very few Senators who insisted that an Army of 150,000 men was an excessive Army under present conditions. I do not know what the vote on that bill will show, because I have not looked it up, but the amendment failed.

We are told by the military authorities, those at the head of the Army and who spoke for the Government, that we must have an Army of over 500,000. These gentlemen had worked out a plan and assured us that that plan was absolutely necessary in order that the country should be properly protected. Fulmination after fulmination came forth from military sources to the effect that we must not leave our country again in a position where it could be successfully attacked. The awful examples of the war were held before us.

We were assured that this Army of over half a million men was absolutely necessary. We obtained that information not only from the officers of the Army but the Secretary of War joined in the recommendation. But Congress could not agree or would not agree. Then we were told that a plan had been worked out by which we could reduce the strength of the Army to about 240,000 men, but if we went below that we would not have such an organization as could be enlarged on scientific lines in case of war.

Then the Secretary of War, or some one, started on a recruiting plan to fill up the Army to the top of the allowance. I think if any man will examine the facts he will find that effort was forced to the very utmost, that they recruited the lame and the blind and the halt to a disgraceful degree, and that they were obliged, after they had sent them to various camps, when they underwent thorough examination, to pay the fares of numbers of them back home. That is the information which comes to me from officers in the Army, and I credit it.

The Senator in charge of the bill smiles at my remark. For myself, I saw with my own eyes in the city of Chicago in front of employment agencies groups of recruiting officers posted to buttonhole the riffraff that drifts in and out of such agencies, trying to induce them to sign enlistment blanks. There hardly could have been gotten together anywhere in the country a more undesirable looking lot of creatures to put into the Army. They were foreigners, jabbering in broken tongues. That was a part of the drive to fill up our Army.

Congress put its foot down upon that proposition and passed a bill to limit the size of the Army to 175,000. So we have made some progress. From an Army of about 540,000 we have finally settled down to about 175,000, and the question that is now presented, as I understand it, is whether we are going to make a further reduction to 150,000 men. We are told that an Army of that size is the very lowest we can possibly get along with.

I will tell you how you can reduce this Army by 15,000 men and not lose a man from the defense of the United States. We have in round numbers 15,000 soldiers somewhere in France or Germany. What are they there for? Why does not the present administration bring those soldiers home? It is no excuse to say that they were sent over there by a former administration, for that is excusing one error by pleading another. We have been substantially at peace for three years; it will not be long before it will be four years. Not a gun has been fired. What are those 15,000 men kept in Germany for? What right of the United States are they enforcing? What property of the United States are they guarding? What interests are they looking after? I defy any living man to tell me a good reason for keeping 15,000 men in Germany.

The Senate long ago passed a resolution declaring a state of peace. It is tied up in the House of Representatives. Why and by whom? The President of the United States in many of his campaign speeches pledged the American people that there would be an immediate declaration of peace.

In his message to Congress he declared he would sign such a resolution, if properly drawn. It was properly drawn, but it is suspended in the House of Representatives, and I should like to have some one who is in touch with the present administration tell the American people and the Congress why it is being held up. The grapevine brings us many mysterious stories and reasons. One is that a Representative has an ambition to have his name attached to the resolution in place of the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], but other rumors are to the effect that the administration has interfered. I do not charge that, for I do not know it to be a fact, and I should regret exceedingly to find the rumor verified; but if the rumor should be verified, it would furnish an illustration of a breach of faith with the American people which would find but few parallels in the history of the American Republic, for if there ever was a solemn pledge made to the American people it was that peace would be immediately declared, once the new administration came into power.

I say this in kindness, for no one more than myself entertains a kindly feeling for the President of the United States. We have the right to have this war ended, some time, somewhere, somehow. We have a right to have those American soldiers brought back to the United States and the expense of keeping them in Europe ended.

It will be said that Germany is under an obligation to pay the expense of the American troops in Europe. The last figures I saw some time ago were that Germany is now in default to the United States over $225,000,000. Perhaps the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], in charge of the pending bill, can give me the correct figures. If I had the money, I would not want to cash that obligation at 10 cents on the dollar. We may get it; we may never get it; but the soldiers doing duty over in Germany are a menace to the peace of the American Republic every moment they are there. They are a menace for this reason: If a disturbance should occur in that part of the world, there would be great danger of our troops being drawn into it. It will be recalled that they were once ordered into a peaceful country, a country with which we never had been at war; they were put in line of battle, and were held for a long time in that country. I speak of Russia. That fact serves to illustrate, with very great force, the danger of our troops being kept where they are.

There is trouble in Poland; there is trouble in Silesia; there is trouble in Turkey; there is war between Greece and Turkey; all Europe is in a state of turmoil. France and England, if the press reports are to be credited, have recently indicated a disposition almost to spring at each other's throats.

They are quarreling about boundary lines; they are disputing over coal possessions; they are in conflict regarding questions of economics and military questions; but chiefly the quarrel is over the collection of the money that France and England and Italy say should be paid them by Germany. I assert that if there is any reason on earth for keeping the American soldier over there, it is that he may be employed as a collecting agent, to collect the money which is due to foreign Governments. So long as our soldiers are in that position, if the flame should break forth at any time and our soldiers should be drawn into the conflict and some of them should be killed, not only would the misfortune of their deaths fall upon us, but the cry would at once be raised, "American blood has been spilled and ought to be avenged." England knows that; France knows that; Italy knows that. So long as our troops can be kept there, those countries feel that the United States has a living pawn upon the international board, and that pawn they regard as being there for their protection and benefit. It is time to bring those soldiers home. When we bring them home we shall have 15,000 more men in this country to help defend the country, and we shall need 15,000 fewer men for the taxpayers to support.

Mr. President, there is a good deal of misinformation going out to the public in general in regard to our Army. The people are being told that we are only to have a little Army of 175,000 men, but that is not all of the military force of the United States. Of course, at the present time the Army comprises 228,000 men, but if we reduce the Army to 150,000 that will not at all represent the aggregate of our fighting force. We have in addition to that 21,583 marines.

Mr. KING. We have nearly 27,000.

Mr. REED. The figures were given to me on yesterday as being 21,000. They were, however, given over the telephone, and there may have been an error in hearing the figures.

Mr. KING. I will get the figures for the Senator in a few moments.

Mr. REED. Very well; but be it 27,000 or 21,000, the late war proved that the marines are a very good fighting force.

We have, in addition to that, 98,000 National Guardsmen, officered, for the most part, by veteran officers of the European war. I am informed that the National Guard is better armed and equipped than ever in the history of the country. My further information is—and I think it is correct—that recruiting is going on rapidly, and that we have already authorized a National Guard which, if it is filled to its full complement, will exceed 425,000 men. The very latest information I have from a man who occupies a high position in the control of the National Guard is that the discipline and the morale of the guard are vastly superior to what they were prior to the war, and that there is every indication of a readiness to enlist, so that that service will undoubtedly largely increase in the near future, and it will be a body of men officered by the cream of those officers who volunteered and went over to France.

Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that that is nearly all the force we need in this country. I insist that this bill shows that a National Guard can be maintained at so much less expense than can the Regular Establishment that everybody ought to be ready to join in an effort to increase its size, instead of building up a big standing Army that eats money. We ought to have a very large National Guard, the members self-supporting the year around, and the Government only required to pay the cost of their equipment and the expenses of armories and occasional trips to camp. That is the way to prepare this country for its defense.

Let me say again, and say it with all the force I can possibly summon, that the National Guardsmen demonstrated in the great World War their capacity to march beside and fight beside the Regulars. They did so in every instance. Not once did they fail. If we had sent none but Regulars to France, the force would have been so small that it would have been swallowed up and lost in the multitude. There were a vast number of men who never would have gone under ordinary circumstances, who volunteered in the Regular Army because there was a war; they recruited it up to a considerable extent, but still my information is that there were more National Guardsmen on the battle front than there were Regulars; that they got there almost as quickly as the Regulars, and they stood for a good deal of hard usage by Regular Army officers, in my judgment. Be that as it may, we will have 170,000 Regulars, 27,000 Marines, 98,000 National Guardsmen, and, in addition to that, 70,000 reserve officers, who are not upon the pay roll, but who can be called out at any time in case of war, almost all of whom saw service in France and are capable of taking command of men at a moment's notice.

Mr. President, to say that we can not safely cut the Regular Army to 150,000 men at this time seems to me to be utterly ridiculous.

That would give us 150,000 Regulars. Twenty-seven thousand marines added to that number makes 177,000 men in the regular service, with practically 100,000 National Guardsmen who can be called to the colors in a day's time, and who are officered by veterans of the war. That provides a military force of substantially a quarter of a million troops in a time of profound peace; and that is sufficient, sir.

When you tell me that you can not get up a plan for an Army of 150,000 men that can be expanded, I say that if we have not enough military talent in this country to devise a plan of that kind we had better start educating it. It is an utter absurdity to make the assertion that you can not devise a plan given an Army of 150,000 that can be expanded to any size necessary, and 70,000 reserve officers which you can call on at any moment to help organize the new troops.

In addition, Mr. President, everybody knows that if this country were to be attacked from within or without, there is scarcely a man who went abroad in the last war and who is in sound health who would not rally to the colors. They are all young men yet. They are all the same kind of men they were when they so gloriously demonstrated the courage of the American soldier on the fields of France. They are all patriotic now, as they were then, and they have the additional advantage of training and experience, and they are here and will respond to the call.

Besides, who is going to attack the United States just now? I voted for the large Navy bill because that is our point of weakness, and because it is not only our first line of battle, but if managed aright it may be the last, and because if we have a real Navy no Nation in the world can ever send a single soldier to put foot upon our soil. I am going to vote for a reduction of this Army bill, and I wish it were 100,000 instead of 150,000 that we were voting on. I wish that we might build up in this country a National Guard of two or three hundred thousand citizen soldiers who live with their fathers and mothers and their wives, who are part of the community, and who support themselves, so that the Government would only be required to furnish their equipment and pay the expenses of training them in camps on occasion.

That is the way to defend this country; not by the hired soldier who works all the year around and is nothing but a soldier.

It has been said here—I have said it myself; it is a thing that every man will recognize if he pauses to think—that no Regular Army we ever have had can defend this country against a great enemy, and no Regular Army we ever will have as long as we are a Republic can defend this country against a great enemy. When the enemy comes, the defense of this country is found in the men and women who live in the homes of this country. The vast resources of the Nation must be mobilized and millions and millions of men must be summoned to the battle front, and when they are summoned they will come. All we need is the equipment and the officers—men who have the skill of brain and knowledge to have planned in advance, so that the men can be mobilized and utilized.

I do not mean to say that training is of no advantage; but if you are going to have training to defend you in the time of war, then you must train not a little Regular Army but you must train a large body of citizens. The best means yet devised to accomplish that end is to train a large National Guard composed of volunteers, to officer it efficiently, to equip it properly, and to have it in readiness.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote to reduce the size of the Regular Army, and I hope it will be reduced.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just one word in reply to what the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said a moment ago. I was just tabulating the items—and I regret not having had the time to complete the list containing appropriations for civilian employees and clerical help. A few pages only of the bill contain the following appropriations for civilian employees: $600,000, $4,000,000, $147,590, $48,100, $733,000, $5,000——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I point out an error already?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Army field clerks are not civilians.

Mr. KING. Oh, well, what does the Senator denominate them? They are not fighting men, not combatants; their work is wholly of a clerical nature.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are part of the Army, subject to military discipline, eligible for transfers as warrant officers. I am only contending for accuracy; that is all. The Senator has stated $733,000 there for civilian employees. Let us have it right.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am gratified to know that the Senator desires accuracy, and I am sure that the Senator can furnish much light upon this bill. I say that by way of compliment, because he has given much excellent service and has devoted his fine ability to its formulation.

I was speaking of civilian employees, or rather those who do not constitute a part of the fighting force and whose duties are entirely of a clerical nature. This class performs no military duty and are essentially peace employees, doing the work of clerks, typewriters, stenographers, and so forth. I was speaking of the tremendous expense involved in the maintenance of an Army. In order to have one soldier, it would appear that we must have one civilian employee or one clerk or some other supernumerary that does no combat work. I am not so sure that it does not require more than one supernumerary or civilian clerk or noncombative employee in order to furnish one soldier. The Senator from New York knows that far better than I; but I was calling attention to the vast expense involved in the clerical work, in the civilian work, incident to the maintenance of the Army.

Continuing, I find here some other items. One of them is $198,000. The Senator may very properly say that that is not a charge against civilian employees. Perhaps the Senator may be right. It is, however, for the commutation of quarters for civilians, as I understand the item.

The same is true of the next item, $75,000.

On page 22 is an item of $1,420,000.

On page 28 is an item of $1,750,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator mention that item—on what page?

Mr. KING. On page 28.

Mr. KING. No; page 28:

Provided, That from this appropriation not to exceed $1,750,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees.

If I am in error there, I shall be glad if the Senator will correct me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; that is all right.

Mr. KING. The item preceding it is $16,500,000, and of that amount $1,750,000 goes to civilian employees.

The item on page 22—if I am in error there I shall be glad to be corrected—is:

For compensation of clerks and other employees of the Finance Department, $1,420,000.

I find on page 30:

Provided, That from this appropriation not exceeding $2,450,000 shall be expended for the hire of labor; not exceeding $2,825,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees other than laborers.

So there would be over $5,000,000 to be expended under the item of "Incidental expenses"; and so on, Mr. President. Before the bill is passed, if it is not hastily railroaded through the Senate, I shall place before the Senate a complete tabulation of the items carried for civilian employees and for clerical help and for other expenditures, to be differentiated from expenditures that might be denominated "combative"—that is, expenditures for the officers and soldiers and for their maintenance and subsistence, and for guns and military supplies.

I made an observation a few minutes ago, and the alert Senator from New York challenged the accuracy of that statement. I have not before me, unfortunately, all of the data, which could soon be obtained from the Library; but let me call attention briefly to the expenditures for the Army for a number of years:

In 1877, $27,621,000 plus—I will omit the hundreds of thousands.

In 1878, $25,000,000.

In 1879, $25,000,000.

In 1880, $26,000,000.

This bill carries nearly as much for the payment of civilian employees for service in the Army and for other clerical help as the entire expenses of the Army in either of the years just mentioned. Indeed, I am inclined to think that this bill will carry more than either of those sums for civilian employees and for the payment for services outside of the combat forces.

In 1881, $26,000,000.

In 1882, $28,000,000.

In 1883, $27,000,000.

In 1884, $24,000,000.

In 1885, $24,000,000.

In 1886, $24,000,000.

In 1887, $23,000,000.

In 1888, $23,000,000.

In 1889, $24,000,000.

In 1890, $24,000,000.

In 1891, $24,000,000.

In 1892, $24,000,000.

In 1893, $24,000,000.

The same for 1894.

In 1895 it was $1,000,000 less.

In 1896, $23,000,000.

In 1897, $23,000,000.

In 1898, $23,000,000.

No one thought during these years that our country was very much endangered by reason of the small size of the Army and the limited amount spent for its maintenance.

In 1899, the entire expense of the Army was $23,000,000. Then came the Spanish-American War, and our war expenditures expanded to $80,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator state that that was the cost of the Army in the Spanish-American War?

Mr. KING. No; that is just for the one year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What year?

Mr. KING. For 1900.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was two years after the war.

Mr. KING. In 1899, $23,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was just for the Regular Army alone, of course. The 1899 expenditures were much higher than $23,000,000.

Mr. KING. Yes; my recollection is that the Spanish-American War cost something over a billion dollars.

In 1901, our expenses for the Army were $114,000,000.
In 1902, $115,000,000.
In 1903, $91,000,000.
In 1904, $77,000,000.
In 1905, $77,000,000.
In 1906, $77,000,000.

President Roosevelt devoted himself energetically to the building up of the Navy, but he approved of the policy which provided the United States with a small Army.

And he favored restricting the expenditures for the Army to the lowest possible limit, and that view was entertained by the American people.

In 1907 war expenditures were $71,000,000.
In 1908, $78,000,000.
In 1909, $95,000,000.
In 1910, $101,000,000.
In 1911, $95,000,000.
In 1912, $93,000,000.
In 1913, $90,000,000.
In 1914, $94,000,000.
In 1915, $101,000,000.
In 1916, $101,000,000.

Then we were thrust into the World War, and the enormous expenses incident thereto were incurred.

The ordinary expenses for the Regular Army in 1917 were $267,000,000.

In 1918, $273,000,000.
In 1919, $225,000,000.

Yet the entire expenses for this year are more than $320,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator say that the Regular Army last year cost only two hundred and some million? The Army appropriation bill carried $392,000,000, or $60,000,000 more than the pending measure.

Mr. KING. In 1917 it was $267,000,000. I was speaking of the Regular Army appropriations.

In 1918 they were $273,000,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That must be a segregation of certain items out of the war appropriations.

Mr. KING. All appropriations for the fiscal years from 1877 to 1917, inclusive, are shown by the document I hold. It was prepared by this Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is apparent on its face that the Regular Army cost infinitely more than that in 1918.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad if the Senator will examine these figures; and if they are erroneous, I should be glad to have the department which prepared them make correction, because erroneous information should not be promulgated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When I made that statement a moment ago I meant using the same basis of computation the Senator is using in his comments on this bill. Charging to the Army all the things that he charges to the Army, it would be infinitely beyond $260,000,000. Of course, you can take out of the war-time expenditures just the pay of Regular Army officers and Regular Army soldiers, and their clothing, and the money which would have to be spent upon them.

Mr. KING. The Senator will bear in mind that I am giving the cost for 1917 and 1918.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was during the war. It is not important, and I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. KING. I think it is important that I should have the RECORD accurate. I should very much regret to have placed in the RECORD an inaccurate statement, even though it came from Government departments, or officials of the United States.

I find on the following page of this same document that in 1919 the Army expenditures were $10,225,000,000. That would be, I assume, when the peak of the war expenditures had been reached, and when many of the contracts negotiated in former years matured, and the obligations were met by the Government. At any rate, the appropriations made in that year were $10,225,000,000 plus.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURSUM in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KING. In just a moment. In 1920 the cost was $772,000,000. Now, I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the 1917 and 1918 appropriations, which the Senator has read, both those appropriations were made prior to our entry into the war; that is, the bills were passed prior to our entry into the war, and the Senator is reading only the appropriation bills. Of course, the Senator does not mean that that was the cost of the Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. KING. No; no. I understand there were many obligations incurred during that period and, just as I stated a moment ago, the maturity of many of those obligations presumably came in 1920, when the prodigious sum of $10,000,000,000 plus was appropriated for the Army of the United States. It is my recollection that a considerable portion of this appropriation was covered back into the Treasury, not having been expended.

In 1907, Mr. President, we had 54,000 enlisted men. In 1908 we had 67,000 plus. I am not giving the number of officers. In 1909 we had 74,000, and in 1910, 70,000. I do not happen to have the book here containing the figures for the Army during the years from 1910 to 1915, but in 1915 there were 95,765 enlisted men. That does not include the officers. In 1916 there were 97,000 enlisted men; in 1917, 283,000.

So, Mr. President, the appropriations for the Army now are infinitely greater, as I have indicated, than they were a few years ago, and the appropriations are entirely disproportionate to the increase in the Army. We are now providing for an Army for the next fiscal year, the minimum of which is 168,000, and we are asked to appropriate more than $320,000,000. The amount is entirely too great for the size of the Army. The cost of the Army is entirely too great in view of the size of the Army, and it is entirely too great in view of the burdens resting upon the American people. The overhead incident to the maintenance of the Army is entirely too much. The red tape, the wasteful and archaic methods employed, the great mass of civilians and clerical and other help utilized in the work of the Army—these and a multitude of other causes—call for enormous appropriations. War machines, both in peace times and in war times, are expensive. The country receives but little for the huge sums expended.

We are appropriating more for an Army of approximately 200,000 men as an average for the year than the annual costs of Germany for her mighty military hosts prior to the World War.

Republics have not learned economy of administration. Both the States and the National Governments pay entirely too much for the administration of their Governments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that one increase is due to the increase of pay, which is, of course, very considerable. The enlisted men now get $480 a year, and the pay of those higher in rank has been increased proportionately.

But in addition to that the overhead built up during the war, which can not be absolutely done away with in a minute but which is being reduced as rapidly as possible, accounts for a large part of this expense, and I think myself the Senator is correct in criticizing the enormous overhead expense. I believe the enormous overhead expense is the real trouble in the Army to-day, and we are trying, of course, to reach that as rapidly as we can. But when you had to have an Army of 4,000,000 men, you had to have a considerable expansion of the overhead, and when you begin to reduce that Army, as we have done within the last two years, down to the present strength of 230,000, we are making a very considerable progress in that direction, and along with it has gone a considerable reduction in the overhead. But, in my judgment, there is still too much overhead expense to-day. We can not get rid of it, however, in a month or two. It is going to take a little time, and the effort is being made, I believe, in all branches of the department to reduce that overhead as fast as possible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to compliment the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and the other members of the committee for the excellent work done in the preparation of this bill. They have accomplished some economies and reforms. The Senator from New York has valiantly striven to bring about reforms, and I wish to unreservedly commend him for the splendid work which he has done. But he and the committee have had behind them the impetus of a tremendous organization, and it has resistlessly pressed for a larger Army; that is, some forces in the Army have contended for a larger Military Establishment, and it has been a difficult task, I concede, to bring about reforms and to reduce the personnel and to get rid of the débris of the war.

But we are now far removed from the war, some three years, and the expenses of the War Department for the fiscal year 1922, it seems to me, should be reduced materially below the levels provided in this bill. I know how difficult it is to overcome bureaucracy and the momentum which the bureaus and the executive instrumentalities of the Government assume. We have to fight, Congress has to fight, for reforms, to fight against the executive departments. The executive branches of the Government are more extravagant than have been the legislative branch of Government, and that is saying a great deal. But we have to continue these cuts, drastic though they seem to be. The Army must be reduced in size and the cost of maintaining it must be brought down. There is no reason for a large standing Army, and the burdens of maintaining it are becoming too heavy to be borne.

It is difficult to see how the people are to meet the demands of the States and the Nation. The taxes required to meet the legitimate expenses of the Government are a heavy burden; beyond that they become an intolerable burden. Before the bill is voted upon, I shall offer an amendment to reduce the Army to 100,000 men. I think that an Army of that size is sufficient for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee about an item on page 20, line 4, pay of contract surgeons, $56,801. It is my understanding that we have more surgeons in our Army for its size than there are in any army in the world, and with the reduction in the Army it seems to me that the regular surgeons should be able to do all of this work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can tell the Senator about that. There is a mere handful of contract surgeons. Sometimes the Army has 20, 30, or 40 men at some remote post. It is not a large enough number of men to warrant the assignment of a regular medical officer to that little place. In that event the Surgeon General makes a contract with a local physician to provide medical care for this little group of men, and he is known as a contract surgeon. It is a great saving of money to do it in that way; otherwise we would have to have a captain in the Medical Corps assigned to some little far-away place, with only 20 or 30 soldiers. That is the purpose of the item.

Mr. HARRIS. The Government does not employ regular practicing surgeons at regular salaries?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no. They are working part of the time only for the Government.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, some days ago one of the high, most popular officials of the Government went out into the regions roundabout and made a speech in which he complimented the country upon the fact that the people had intrusted their interests to "a wise, clear-visioned man from Ohio," and that in their service this man from Ohio was toiling on, day after day, not in his own but the public welfare.

I have a very vivid recollection of the speeches made in the last campaign. I remember the speeches of the "wise, clear-visioned man from Ohio." I remember that he was represented in speech and cartoon as staying out of the League of Nations, represented at the door of a house where Gov. Cox was entering the league at the other door. I remember that the wise, clear-visioned man from Ohio distinctly promised that he would immediately urge upon Congress peace with Germany by the resolution which President Wilson had vetoed. I remember that he promised us to bring home the soldiers from the Rhine. I remember the promise for economy in all branches of the Government as opposed to Wilsonian waste and extravagance.

Mr. President, we have been here now three months and the President has been here three months, and we have seen him toiling on from day to day from one proud ovation to another proud ovation, from one good little speech to another good little speech, and we are almost on the point of discovering that the Ten Commandments are in force and that 12 times 12 still make 144.

What have we done? An English novelist once wrote a book entitled "What Will He Do With It?" This wise, clear-visioned man from Ohio has "it." What will he do with it? Is it not time he was telling us?

The Knox peace resolution passed the Senate without the aid of its distinguished author. We passed it while he was absent. Why he was absent is his business and not mine; but we passed it while he was absent, and we sent it over to the House of Representatives confidently expecting its speedy passage; and there it has hung in suspense—why?

The soldiers are still on the Rhine—to become naturalized? Because they love it? Are they going to stay over there indefinitely? Why are they on the Rhine? There seems to be a mysterious connection between the failure to pass the peace resolution and the retention of those troops on the Rhine. By a mere shred of legality the troops are kept upon the Rhine because we have not passed the peace resolution. Can any Senator suggest any other reason why peace should not be legally declared? Can any Senator suggest another reason why the wise, clear-visioned man from Ohio has not kept his pledge to withdraw those troops from Germany?

As to economy, what have we done? The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] suggests "overhead charges." I have heard that expression until it begins to pall upon me. "Overhead charges" in the Army, in the Navy, in the Shipping Board, in the deficiency bill. "Overhead charges," and the Senator from Florida says they can not be reduced in a month. Who has asked that they be reduced in a month? It is two years and six months now since the armistice, and still we are preparing for war. Have they not, in that two and one-half years, had time to reduce the overhead charges? When will they be reduced? Will it be next month, next year? Will it be when the people are exhausted, when they have been bled white? Overhead charges! They can not be reduced in a month? No; but in two years I think they might have been reduced.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest, if the Senator will allow an interruption, that they have been reduced. My contention is that they can not be entirely eliminated immediately, but I myself believe they are too high now and that they ought to have been reduced further than they have been.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Then fall in line and help us reduce them.

Mr. FLETCHER. But I am not claiming that they have not been reduced, because they have been very greatly reduced, of course, in all the departments.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, there must be some object in view in the maintenance of this huge standing Army. Everybody knows what the constitutional history is. Every Senator is more or less familiar with it. The fathers who framed our Constitution took it as a truism, accepted and universally acknowledged, that a standing Army was incompatible with civil liberty and individual rights. They came from England, where that question had been debated in the halls of Parliament and on the battle fields. Dynasties had gone down and new dynasties had come up on the very ground that the old dynasties endeavored to maintain a standing army. The Stuart dynasty, not being furnished with money by the British Parliament, relied upon secret funds furnished by the absolute King of France. Parliament, finding it out, the people finding it out, rose in rebellion against that dynasty and drove it from power and accomplished the revolution of 1688. That question came up again and again afterwards, and never was there a standing army in England, not even until the signal for the war of 1914.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1787 Senators will remember that our forefathers debated the best method of keeping down the standing army. Its danger was admitted. Nobody denied it. Mr. Hamilton himself did not deny it. They discussed first one plan and then another, and they finally hit upon this plan of an appropriation limited to two years, upon the assumption that the men who made that appropriation would have to return to the people once every two years to get the people's sanction before that appropriation could stand. Therefore, it was provided that the House of Representatives, elected every two years, should be heard, considered, deferred to, if you please, in making military appropriations for which they have to account. Is it not putting them in a false position to force them to go back next year to their constituencies and answer for a bill made here by six-year men and four-year men in the Senate?

Surely the Senator from New York, who so ably leads for the bill on its passage through the Senate, has some objective in view in asking for an Army of 170,000 men in a time of profound peace, so far as we are concerned. I understood him yesterday to say that it would wreck the Army if the high command were required to reduce it to 150,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said 120,000.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I stand corrected, and I ask why can not the Commander in Chief and the General Staff reduce it to 100,000 if we say they must? Could not Gen. McClellan have organized or reorganized an army and brought it up or brought it down to 100,000 men? Could not Gen. Grant have organized up or organized down to an army of 50,000 men?

Could not Gen. Lee have done it? Could not "Stonewall" Jackson have done it? Could not Gen. Sherman have done it? It seems to me that any great captain, any great organizer knowing his business, would be able to do it if he wanted to do it.

Name after name has been mentioned here of nations which are our rivals and who may be our enemies. By a process of elimination let us see against whom this Army is being prepared.

Take the case of Great Britain. What possible danger have we to apprehend from her—a loose-jointed empire, held together by uncertain ties, with indications that the members of the Empire are about to fall off from it. There are 100,000 regular British troops maintained in Ireland! Think of it—100,000 troops!—35,000 more than the Duke of Wellington had when he met Napoleon at Waterloo; 100,000 men!—a greater army than Gen. Lee ever commanded or than "Stonewall" Jackson ever commanded. Wellington himself, in his immortal Peninsular campaign, never commanded more than 45,000 troops. The English Empire now has 100,000 regular troops in Ireland, a few miles across the narrow channel, engaged in what is really a civil war; one part of the Empire destroying the other—and, therefore, like Saturn, the British Empire is devouring its own children.

We read of another British army going into Silesia, and it is within a hair's breadth of an armed collision with France.

There is another British army, maintained in India; another in Egypt; another in Mesopotamia. Would it not seem to be a common-sense proposition that an empire thus about to fall to pieces, which is stuck together only by the bayonet, can not always hold together? Then it does not seem to me that we need apprehend any danger from Great Britain.

How is it with Japan? Japan is staggering under the burden of taxation. She also has her imperialists. They endeavored to gain a foothold and territorial increase in Siberia, but the latest news is that Japan can not afford the expense and is withdrawing from Siberia. She has on her hands Korea, another Ireland, so to speak; and she has the everlasting question of China—whether she will be allowed, by treaty or otherwise, to absorb the largest group of the human family. How can Japan be a danger to us? With our fleet as it now stands, with the fleet as it stood before the war, how could Japan do anything against us, so many thousand miles away? Where could she get her naval coaling stations? How could she supply her armies or her navy? Where would she land her troops? What would we be doing while she was trying to land them thousands of miles away from her base of supplies? Japan is nothing but a bugaboo with which imperialists endeavor to scare the civilian into adopting a militarist policy in this country.

What other danger have we? Is it France? Why, France is so spread out in her imperialistic designs that it is all she can do to maintain her army at home, with another in Syria, and another in Cilicia, and another in Silesia.

Senators, Great Britain is so put to it, that her army right now is composed not of white men merely. One-third of the English army is black, imported from India and from Africa, to hold the balance of power in Europe, as umpire of the war game between the whites.

How about France? Nearly one-half the soldiers fighting for France are colored troops, imported from the jungles of Africa and turned loose on the white populations of Europe. Therefore, it is idle, it seems to me, to say that we need apprehend any attack from Great Britain, Japan, France, or any other country on the globe.

You may build ramparts as China did, with 400,000,000 people behind them, but unless those people are warlike in spirit, ready to respond when the country calls, the wall does them no good whatsoever.

You may build ever so many navies, but history will tell you that it never has been the rule that the largest number of ships won the battle on the high seas. It is the better quality of troops, the better cause in which they fight, that determines the battle; and very often the smaller vessels and the smaller number of vessels gain the victory. We proved that in the War of 1812; England proved that in the Napoleonic wars. In every single instance where Lord Nelson and the other great sailors of Great Britain engaged the combined navies of France and Spain it was the English who were in the minority and who bore off the triumph.

When are we going to reach the point when we can say "economy" and practice it? Senator after Senator has alluded to the condition of our people. It can not be described in terms that will show how great their distress is. They believed last November that they were putting men in power here in Washington who would reverse the Wilsonian policy, reduce expenditures, and bring the Government back closer to the people. One of the slogans of Candidate Harding was "back to the Constitution and away from the league," but to-day we are closer to the league than we are to the Constitution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he does not think that it is possible that the large standing army that we are building up in this country is for the purpose of taking care of the distressed people at home?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Wisconsin has asked the question. I was about to get on that ground in connection with what the Senator from New York said about the fatigue duty of the private soldier and in connection with police duty performed by the United States Army. I should like for the Senator from New York, whose ability I admire, to point out to the Senate the constitutional authority for using the United States Army to police the States. [A pause.] The Senator does not answer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will answer in my own time.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I thought the Senator would answer in my time so that I might reply to him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am delighted to listen to the Senator without interruption.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I appreciate the compliment as much as I regret the lack of opportunity to reply to what the Senator might say.

It was never contemplated that the Federal Government should police the States. Who dares to say that the State of New York can not police herself? Who dares to say that the State of Wisconsin can not provide the necessary police service within her borders, or the State of Georgia, or the State of Florida, or the State of Ohio, from which the wise men come. [Laughter.] I do not mean the wise and very able Senator [Mr. POMERENE] who sits smilingly in front of me, nor do I mean the other wise man from Ohio who would be smiling at me were he in his seat.

Where do we get the authority to police the States, take them by the nape of the neck, and tell them to behave themselves? No such authority exists. It is entirely an invasion of State rights and local self-government for the central Government to take upon itself the power to enter a State and do police work.

Mr. President, it does not do any good here in the Senate to talk against an invulnerable, inflexible majority. I know that perfectly well; but back of these immovable men who are determined not to give the people relief, although they promised it, are the people at home. Back of them are the independent newspapers of the country, and we are perforce compelled to look for results before that great jury of the common people and to get our views before them through the independent newspapers of the land.

Senators, you are reckoning without your host if you believe that you can ride roughshod over the promises made last year and not be held to account for it. You will be held to account. Men who are here for six years can not be turned out; men who are here for four years can not be disturbed; but where is the Senator here for four or for six years who would not feel the chill and discomfort of friends falling off and of the moral support of the people giving way under his feet? No man loves to be unpopular; no man loves to be deserted by his own people, and only the man can endure the ordeal who in his conscience feels justified for what he has done, and who from the clouds of to-day looks forward to a brighter to-morrow.

I hope, for their own sakes, the Senators back of these increases of Navy and Army feel that they are doing right, because they certainly will need their fortitude a few months after this Congress shall have adjourned.

This Army, after all, is organized against our own people and in the interests of the officer class, the officer caste; not the democracy of the French Army, but the autocracy of the American Army.

The Senator alluded to the "fatigue duty" of the private. Is it a part of the fatigue duty of the private to trundle around town the baby cart of the officer? Is it a part of the fatigue duty of the officer to motor out to the polo grounds, mount the ponies, and play the game, while the privates groom the horses, blanket the horses, and tote the balls? How would it do to put the privates on the horses and let the officers groom the horses and tote the balls? How would it do for the officer to trundle the baby cart of the private?

UMI

Fatigue duty? Well, I should think it was very fatiguing, and we are asked to pay for it—menial service, servant work. God knows the soldier ought to obey his officer and observe the rules of discipline during the hours of duty; but when the soldier comes off, and the hour of duty is over, he ought to be a free American citizen, proud of his individual manhood, just as the officer is.

It would be the easiest thing in the world for me to tell the story of a militaristic empire which went to pieces during the late war. I will not tell it now. At some other time I will; but, Mr. President, I hope that the House of Representatives will take courage by what has been said here by the few of us who intend to make, to the bitter end, a fight for the keeping of the campaign promises of last year. Those men of the House of Representatives are right, and they ought to stand by it and fight it out on that line, if it does take all summer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia asked me a question to which I promised to reply in my own time. He asked what right the Federal Government had to use the Federal Army, or the Regular Army, as he expressed it, to police the States. I call his attention to section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States. It reads as follows:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

I think that answers the question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I was not unaware of the existence of that provision of the Constitution, but my construction of it differs from that of the Senator from New York.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am not quite in accord with what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] has said. I do not, however, want to be put in the position of advocating extraordinary expenditures because I do not quite agree with the House and am inclined to support the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

The argument made by the Senator from Georgia, it seems to me, leads logically to the conclusion that we ought not to have any Army at all in the United States. I do not know whether the Senator would contend for that or not. I will ask the question whether, in his view, we ought to dispense with the Army?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator in the words of Jefferson's first inaugural. That would be my answer—that reliance upon the State Militia is the best reliance in time of peace. We do not need any 175,000 men to go into Georgia or Florida to maintain peace, even at the call of the governor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator knows that under the present organization scheme of the Army it is composed first of a regular force, what is called the Regular Army branch of the Military Establishment, next the National Guard, and after that the reserve force; so that we have, as it were, three lines of defense making up our United States Army of to-day: The Regular Army, to be composed as we have it here of 170,000 men; the National Guard, which we hope to encourage in every way and to make stronger than it ever has been in the past—I think myself that the National Guard ought to be built up; and then the reserve force. Those three arms, we may say, will constitute the United States Army under the present organization.

As to whether we ought to do away entirely with the Regular branch of the service, we may have some difference of opinion. I do not feel myself at this time that we would be justified in eliminating that branch of the Military Establishment, or putting it in such a situation as to be ineffective and of practically no use—making it entirely, for instance, composed of officers without any men. It seems to me, if we are going to have any Regular Army at all, that we ought to have one that it will be worth while to maintain, and one that can be relied upon to meet the needs of the country at any time. We can not tell now just what conditions will be a month from now. We can not afford to concede that all the world is at peace, and there are no disturbances on the horizon in any quarter, or that here at home we have no need for any Military Establishment such as we propose to keep up and such as we have kept up all the years in the past.

The Secretary of War stated to our committee in this language his view upon that subject at page 11 of the hearings:

> I want to refer to the size of the Army now and what it has been. With a force of 150,000 men we will have a smaller military force per thousand dollars of wealth than this country has ever had. We will have the smallest per capita military establishment in the world, to such a degree that we are almost out of the reckoning. Not over one soldier to 7,000 inhabitants. That does not indicate that we are building up a great Military Establishment. It simply means that in proportion to our strength, our population, and our needs we are trying at least to maintain a Military Establishment that will be as strong as the smallest this country has ever had, and that is practically all we are asking for.
> I can not see any reason why we should not be given 175,000 men for the next year, and let us get adjusted to that new condition, and then if it is found that we can reduce that force, I would be the first one to come to Congress and say that I believe that it can be safely done. But we are moving pretty fast. We are living in troublous times. We do not know what the next months are going to develop. Prudence, and the commonest kind of prudence, would seem to warrant us in not cutting the Army to such a degree that we can not get any real benefit out of it if we find it necessary to use it.

That seems rather logical and sound. It is the matured thought of the Secretary of War after studying the whole situation, and it is the conclusion which he reached and has well stated here in this form to the committee.

So far as my own position is concerned, I have done my best on every occasion to proceed in the direction of an establishment of peace, not only in this country but throughout the world. It was my view that we should have entered into relations with the other civilized nations of the earth in order to accomplish that, and that we should have done it promptly upon the conclusion of the peace conference. I believed then that the covenant of the League of Nations, with all the reservations that had been voted upon it, should have been adopted and entered upon in order that there might be in the first place an assurance of peace throughout the world, and in the next place an assurance of a reduction of armaments throughout the world; that there should be no further need of big military establishments in this country or in any other country. I have hoped and struggled with all my might and power to bring about a condition of that sort; but others, including my friend from Georgia, have insisted that that was not the wise course to pursue, and so we are left in the air, and have been for two years, with the whole world unsettled and our own situation undefined, our own position more or less misunderstood, and necessarily these disturbed conditions as we find them to-day have resulted.

I am not willing now to say that there is no need of any Navy in the United States and no need of any Army in the United States, and I am not willing to admit that if we are to have any Army at all we should have it a mere skeleton and of such sort as would be of no use in time of need.

The Secretary of War said, in his opening statement:

> But the proposition to reduce the number of men to the extent that is proposed in the pending bill—

That is, the House bill—> will be so crippling, in my opinion, that it will make the Army ineffective, and it is that point that I want to especially emphasize.

I will not go into details. The Senator from New York has already outlined the scope and purposes of the bill, and I did not rise to discuss it in detail. I simply wanted to refer to these matters as a basis for my position in connection with the measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator, who is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, the strength of the reserves which might be available for military service in the event the Government went to war.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not in position to state definitely to the Senator what that strength would be. Perhaps just at this time it would be very difficult to specify precisely what could be relied upon in the way of reserves. But there would be a very considerable force which could be marshaled under that head.

Mr. KING. Could the Senator from New York furnish the information?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not hear the question.

Mr. KING. What is the strength of the reserve force available for military service in the event our Government were called to war?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator does not refer to the National Guard?

Mr. KING. No. The National Guard, as I recall, is substantially 80,000 in number and increasing, and will probably increase until it exceeds 100,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no other force but the Regulars. There is no reserve force. There are 70,000 reserve officers, but they are without commands; there are no troops under them.

Mr. KING. I understand that. But are there not some soldiers who might be denominated reserves in addition to the 70,000 officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we have no reserve system for the Regular Army, as is the case with the Regular Navy.

Mr. KING. But we have the 70,000 reserve officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is anything being done to keep them up to modern technical military training?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; Mr. President, the new law provides for the force known as the Organized Reserves. That has not yet been organized. It is not even commenced. It is a matter which must be very, very carefully studied; and in any event the organized reserves would be a very highly skeletonized force of citizen volunteers, liable to active military duty only in case of war, and the plan is that the reserve officers shall officer that force.

Mr. KING. That was my understanding.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the reserve officers may be used in training that force, where there are voluntary enlistments in the reserve of men who desire to participate in the training camps.

Mr. KING. Is it not also true that provision is made for the annual training, or periodical training, at least, of the reserve officers—mobilizing them?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is contemplated.

Mr. KING. So that they may be brought up to modern standards, and their training may bring them up to the standard, as it shall be advanced, of scientific military development.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah stated the strength of the National Guard at about 80,000?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that is an understatement. I understand that its present strength is practically 100,000 and that it will be increased beyond that number under existing law.

Mr. KING. The last authentic figures I saw were something like 86,000, and I did not know that it had reached 100,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the present strength is about 98,000.

Mr. KING. I am glad to be advised of that fact. Does the Senator from Wisconsin know the maximum strength that will be reached when it has been recruited to its full strength?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the maximum strength of the National Guard, when recruited to full strength, will be considerably over 100,000, about 106,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will be above that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is stated here in the report of the chief of the Militia Bureau that pursuant to statute law the strength of the National Guard June 30, 1920, should have been 106,300 men. I do not know what its full strength would be if it were recruited up to the limit of the law at the present time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The basic law provides for annual increments, and the figure which the Senator quotes was the figure to which the guard, under the law, might have grown at that date.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I so understood.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the annual increments are finished, if the guard does succeed in recruiting the maximum authorized legal strength, the guard will be in the neighborhood of 425,000 officers and men. It is fair to say, however, that very few people entertain the belief that a force of that size will actually exist. If it does, I may say to the Senator, its cost will surpass that of the Regular Army, if we reduce the Regular Army as we reach that, which is the plan.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator state how much we are appropriating for that in this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the guard?

Mr. LENROOT. For the guard, in personnel. My recollection is that we are appropriating for 125,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The estimates were for 125,000 men, and both committees cut under the estimates quite a little. The estimate of the department was that the guard for the next fiscal year would average in strength, clear through the year, 125,000 men. The committees did not believe it would average quite that high. It is apparent, however, that it is going to start on July 1 with a round hundred thousand. It is 98,000 now. It may increase to 130,000 or 150,000 during the next year; we do not know. But, as fast as men volunteer, and units are formed of the requisite type and size, and properly officered, they are accepted by the War Department and federalized, and then go into the appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the chairman of the committee please explain just what the figures in his report mean, under the summary given at the end of the report, where the National Guard has set opposite it $25,554,100?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the sum total of the appropriations carried in this bill for the support of the guard. There are several items of those appropriations. One of $9,000,000 and something is for the pay of the enlisted men and officers, for their drills and maneuvers. They are paid at maneuvers at the same rate as soldiers and officers of the Regular Army. Then for the armory drills the enlisted men receive approximately a dollar a drill, and they must attend at least 48 drills. As a matter of fact, they do attend gladly more than 48, but they are not paid for the excess number. Then the guard has to be clothed and equipped and transported to and from its maneuvers, and it has in its possession Federal transportation, such as horses and mules, motor trucks and tractors, and those things have to be taken care of. The bill carries money for the care and upkeep of the animals and of the equipment wherever it is necessary, the total of that item being about $25,000,000. It would be much more were it not for the fact that the War Department has on hand vast supplies of strictly military equipment, such as guns and rifles and ammunition, and which this bill provides shall be delivered to the guard without charge against the National Guard appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 2, line 17, where the committee proposes to strike out "$70,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$168,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent to submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement to take up first the committee amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Georgia ask unanimous consent to suspend that procedure in order that he may offer an amendment of his own?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the Senator from Georgia merely asked leave to introduce it and have it printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I am asking to have it printed, and I shall offer it after the committee amendments are disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be printed and lie on the table. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 18, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$118,000," so as to read:

Provided, That not to exceed $118,000 of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the payment of salaries of civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 21, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to sell to any foreign State or Government upon such terms as he may deem expedient any material, supplies, or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment as, or may hereafter be, found to be surplus which are not needed for military purposes and for which there is no adequate domestic market.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 14, to increase the appropriation for contingencies, Military Intelligence Division, General Staff Corps, from "$200,000" to "$300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 12, after the words "telegraph service," to strike out:

Not to exceed $1,000,000 may be expended for signal equipment for organizations; not to exceed $7,500 may be expended for pigeon service; not to exceed $100,000 may be expended for photographic and cinematographic service; and not to exceed $100,000 may be expended for the operation and maintenance of Camp Alfred Vail.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 4, page 11, the last paragraph read being as follows:

WASHINGTON-ALASKA MILITARY CABLE AND TELEGRAPH SYSTEM.

For defraying the cost of such extensions, betterments, operation, and maintenance of the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1923, from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System which have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the extent of such extensions and betterments and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $140,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I may observe at this point, and I am sure the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will be especially interested, that here is an item rather typical of several, which is a burden on the Army and has nothing to do with the Army at all. It ought not to be placed on the shoulders of the War Department. It ought to be placed with the Commerce Department or somewhere else.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that we carry a very large Alaskan appropriation in another bill, and it seems to me we ought to carry this appropriation there instead of in the Army bill.

While I am on my feet, will the Senator permit an inquiry respecting the paragraph which we are just approaching, which will save me rising again? The Senator will notice on page 12, in lines 2, 3, and 4, there is a provision as follows:

To explore for, procure, or reserve helium gas, and also for the purchase, manufacture, construction, maintenance, and operation of plants for the production thereof and experimentation therewith.

As the Senator knows, the Bureau of Mines and the research departments of the Government during the war and now were and are engaged, as I am advised, in the production of helium gas and studying the characteristics of it, its production, and so forth. Does not the Senator think it would be a wise idea to concentrate all the activities of the Government devoted to this very expensive undertaking?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was not aware that the Bureau of Mines was producing any helium gas. My information was that the only agencies in the United States Government that were producing and conserving helium gas in any way were the Army and Navy jointly in Texas.

Mr. KING. The Senator is acquainted with Dr. Moore—I think that is the name?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We had not known that the Bureau of Mines was operating any plant or conserving any gas. That is news to us. In fact, our committee gained the impression that the only officials active in this work in the Government were the Air Service representatives acting in conjunction with the Navy. I had not known that gas was used for anything else except for lighter-than-air ships, such as dirigibles, blimps, and balloons.

Mr. KING. I may be in error in stating that the Bureau of Mines is now engaged in it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am mistaken in one respect, at any rate. I see that Gen. Menoher stated that the Bureau of Mines have been looking after it all over the country. They are not producing any, however, and the Air Service people are looking for it all over the country. They have just taken two sets of wells and are developing some helium from them.

Mr. KING. A very distinguished scientist—I think his name is Dr. Moore, but as to that I am not sure—visited me some time ago, and I made inquiry of him, as I have from other sources. My information was then, and now is, that some branches of the Interior Department—and that would be the Bureau of Mines or some auxiliary instrumentality—are devoting themselves to experimentation with helium, as well as other gases; and the particular scientist whom I now have in mind I think has done perhaps more than anyone else in the development of helium gas. My information was that there are one or more activities outside of the War and Navy Departments engaged in experimentation with helium, and perhaps with other gases—poisonous gases—to be used in naval and military warfare.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is not a poison gas.

Mr. KING. No; I know it is not. I said helium gas and poisonous and other gases. It would seem to me, if that is true—and that is my information—that they ought to be coordinated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is right if it is true. We had not information to that effect. We know the Bureau of Mines was exploring—that is, testing gas wells in different parts of the country to ascertain the helium content. We did not have any information, however, that they were producing any helium gas. These are the only people who are producing it in quantity.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether they have succeeded in acquiring lands and gas wells from which helium gas can be produced, and whether the War Department and Navy Department would be put in possession of the same, or are they authorized to get them and act independently of the operations of the Bureau of Mines or any other instrumentality of the Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know the power conferred upon the Bureau of Mines concerning the acquisition of property. I do not think the Bureau of Mines can acquire any property, however.

Mr. KING. I do not think so either.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department and the Navy Department can acquire property when authorized by Congress and the appropriation is made. The War Department and the Navy Department to-day are jointly operating a plant which they own.

Mr. KING. I did not know but that under some of the powers conferred during the war the Bureau of Mines had been given and still had authority to acquire property for the purpose of producing helium gas as well as other gases to be used for naval and military purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department has the power of condemnation over helium land.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 13, line 15, the last clause read being as follows:

Not exceeding $250,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York if $250,000 for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium is really necessary. I will say to the Senator that there is no question as to where helium comes from and there is no question as to how it can be produced in the United States in almost any quantities the War Department may want. We have several times had investigations during the past year of the subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt that helium can be produced from nearly all natural gases, but in only a few parts of the country can it be produced economically, because when the helium content falls below a certain figure it does not pay to extract it from natural gas.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that figure is 1.5 per cent or 1 per cent. I forget just what the economical minimum is.

Mr. SMOOT. I forget the percentage, but I know that in the oil leasing act there was a provision authorizing the Government to do certain things with reference to the matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is a limitation on the amount which may be spent.

Mr. SMOOT. They can expend $250,000 and no more for this purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it is a limitation.

Mr. SMOOT. Really I do not know how they are going to spend $250,000 for that purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are now operating a plant in Texas and producing the gas.

Mr. SMOOT. They are operating that plant?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in conjunction with the Navy. It may be of interest to the Senator from Utah to know that the two services together, as I recall it—and perhaps the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] will correct me if I am wrong—asked for an appropriation of $800,000 with which to run that plant, to develop additional resources in that part of the country, which they would take up and utilize when the plant which they have been using in the recent past shall have become exhausted. We cut down the Army's end of it to $250,000.

Mr. LENROOT. The department asked for $800,000 for the Army and $800,000 was asked for the Navy, making a total of $1,600,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I am wrong by 100 per cent. They asked for $800,000 for the Army and the naval authorities asked for $800,000 for themselves. The two are working together. We did not want the work stopped. So we arbitrarily reduced the $800,000 to $250,000 and put a provision in the bill that they can not spend more than that. We thought that it was in the interest of economy; and yet we believe that where helium can be economically procured it is a very wise thing to secure it.

Mr. SMOOT. I myself think so. I think the Government of the United States has a perfect right now wherever the gas is produced to enter into a contract for it or even to require the producer of the gases from which helium is extracted to sell to the Government. It seems that the appropriation is merely for experimentation and conservation. Does "conservation" mean the production of helium?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. It means production rather than conservation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. They conserve it by storing it in tanks after it is produced.

Mr. SMOOT. If it includes the production of it, perhaps the amount is not too large.

Mr. LENROOT. The item is for production in an existing plant.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to it, but if it were merely and simply an expenditure for experimentation I think it would be perfectly useless, because we all know how helium is made and from what source it may be obtained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 15, line 18, after the numerals "1920," to insert "or not to exceed five reserve officers in the Judge Advocate General's Department, or"; and in line 20, before the word "except," to strike out the word "and," so as to read:

For pay of the officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps, $250,000: Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended for the pay of a reserve officer on active duty for a longer period than 15 days, except such as may be detailed for duty with the War Department General Staff under section 3a and section 5 (b) of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920, or who may be detailed for courses of instruction at the general or special service schools, of the Army, or who may be detailed for duty as instructors at civilian military training camps appropriated for in this act, or who may be detailed for duty with tactical units of the Air Service, as provided in section 37a of the Army reorganization act approved June 4, 1920, or not to exceed five reserve officers in the Judge Advocate General's Department, or except one officer of the Medical Reserve Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 20, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That pay and allowances of such additional officers of the Medical Reserve Corps as are required to supplement the like officers of the Regular Army in the care of beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance treated in Army hospitals may be paid from the funds allotted to the War Department by that bureau under existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York to explain why that amendment is necessary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a money saver, may I say to the Senator from Utah. I will explain how and why. There are some empty beds in the Army hospitals, and after consultation with members, I think, of the so-called hospital site commission and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service the Surgeon General of the Army, Gen. Ireland, entered into some sort of an understanding with the other governmental agencies, including the War Risk Insurance Bureau, I may say, that he would take care in the Army hospitals of some of the war risk patients who are not soldiers, but who are ex-soldiers. That understanding has been reached. It is possible that he will take as many in the aggregate as 4,000 war risk patients into existing Army hospitals, thereby obviating the building of two or three new hospitals somewhere; but if he takes in two, three, or four thousand patients in addition to his soldier patients he will necessarily require more medical officers; and he tells us that the only way that he can get the additional medical officers in order to take care of the increased number of patients is by securing reserve medical officers and placing them on active duty. Congress has tried to hold down and to restrict very severely the number of reserve officers ordered, with their consent, on active duty, because, of course, that is another way of paying salaries and running up appropriation bills.

When the committee was informed of that situation they decided that it was in the interest of economy to encourage the use of the Army hospitals for war risk patients. Therefore we suggest the amendment that the reserve medical officers who may be summoned to active duty for the purpose indicated shall be paid out of the war risk appropriations allotted to the War Department in accordance with existing law for that purpose. We shall have to pay the doctors from some source, and it seems that the Army appropriations should not carry the burden of caring for war risk patients.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator as to that, but I know that we appropriate ample funds with which to pay all the medical reserve officers who may be summoned to active duty. However, because of the way in which the amendment is worded, I was wondering just how they would be paid, and if they would be paid under the amendment at a higher rate than medical officers of the Public Health Service are now paid.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They would be paid the Army rate of pay.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just the same as if they were commissioned officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they are commissioned officers; and they will be on active duty.

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to commissioned officers on active duty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Are there not enough medical officers now in the Public Health Service to take care of this work?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not aware whether there are or not; I believe there are not; but, in any event, it would be very bad policy to take a Public Health Service officer and put him on duty in an Army hospital, because the commandant of the Army hospital would have no military jurisdiction over him, and discipline in and about an Army hospital is absolutely essential. The officers referred to in the amendment are medical reserve officers, and they are going into Army hospitals to take care of War Risk Bureau patients. In any event some medical officers will have to be employed.

Mr. SMOOT. What I had in mind was taking medical officers who are now in the Public Health Service and using them for this purpose, because I will assure the Senator that they will never be dispensed with, so far as the Public Health Service is concerned, and if the work is taken away from them I think there might be a likelihood of paying for more medical officers than are necessary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the contingency will happen.

Mr. SMOOT. The thought is a very good one; I think it is a splendid thing to use the Army hospitals to take care of wounded service men, but if it is going to require a double number of officers, then, of course, I do not think there would be any money saved. Will the Senator allow the amendment to go over temporarily, so that I may have an opportunity of looking into it a little further?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can give the memorandum which was supplied by the Chief Surgeon of the Army on this point. I shall read it, because we are all here, and we might just as well dispose of this amendment, if we can. This is a memorandum submitted to the Chief of Staff of the Army, a copy of which was sent to me.

Mr. SMOOT. By whom?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By the Surgeon General of the Army, Gen. Ireland. It is as follows:

Subject: Change in Army appropriations act, fiscal year 1922.

1. Request that application be made to the Senate Military Committee to amend lines 1 to 14, inclusive, on page 15 of the bill, for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, H. R. 5010, as introduced in the House of Representatives April 25, 1921, to read as follows:

Then follows the language of the paragraph in the bill, with this suggestion as to an amendment to be added, which we did not follow just as it is stated:

Except such officers of the Medical Reserve Corps not to exceed 100, of the Dental Reserve Corps not to exceed 30—

and of the Veterinary Reserve Corps not to exceed 100—

as the Secretary of War may deem necessary for the proper service of the Medical Department: Provided, That the pay and allowance of such of these reserve officers as are required to supplement the like officers of the Regular Army in the care of beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance treated in military hospitals may be paid from the funds allotted to the War Department by that bureau under existing law.

The last paragraph is the body of our amendment in the bill.

Paragraph 2 of the memorandum reads:

If this amendment be enacted into law, the medical department will be relieved of a serious embarrassment. After hearings before the committee appointed by the President to consider ways and means of providing adequate hospital treatment for beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, I stated that 4,000 such beneficiaries could be treated in military hospitals provided the necessary additional personnel were authorized. The officers of the Reserve Medical Corps and Dental Corps enumerated in the amendment constitute the commissioned part of that additional personnel.

The Senate will recall he suggests 100 medical reserve officers, 30 dental reserve officers, and 100 veterinary reserve officers.

With these officers proper professional care and attention can be given the entire 4,000 such beneficiaries; without them only 1,000 can be cared for. By this amendment the medical department can secure qualified professional men who, when called into active service, will have military status and will be amenable to military discipline. Their pay and allowances will be paid to them by Army finance officers in the usual manner, and yet be charged not to appropriations of the Army but to those of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, for whose beneficiaries they are employed primarily to care.

3. It is only by the strictest economy in the use of its officers that the medical department is now able to carry out its functions. Under the Army reorganization act of June 4, 1920, the number of officers of the medical department is restricted to the actual strength of the Army after July 1, 1921. The enlisted strength of the Army is now approximately 225,000 men. While the present strength of the Medical Corps, 1,179, is slightly in excess of the authorized allowance of 6½ officers per thousand enlisted strength based on 175,000 men, the actual strength of the Army is 50,000 in excess of that number, and in the measure of its requirements in medical officers, on account of the wide dispersion of troops, is the equivalent of 100,000 in excess of that number.

Then he proceeds to state how it is quite impossible for the Army itself out of the regular medical officers to contribute any more personnel to take care of the war risk patients, but he can summon reserve medical officers, with their consent, to active duty and pay them in the manner proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember, by order of the President some medical officers were transferred from the Public Health Service to the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Public Health Service to the War Risk Insurance Bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; for the purpose of taking care of the patients of the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator means from the Army, does he not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not mean from the Army; I mean from the Public Health Service. I do not remember just how many there were, but I can look the matter up and see whether the number transferred is really necessary if the Army is to take care of 4,000 disabled ex-service men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Army is going to do it, it will be necessary to use Army surgeons, reserves or regulars. This is a scheme by which the reserve surgeon will be used. He will be paid out of war-risk funds because he is taking care of war-risk patients.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that it says here "military hospitals," and in the amendment it says "Army hospitals."

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are the same thing.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York if under existing laws civilians can be treated in Army hospitals? I think the suggestion about taking care of war-risk patients in the Army hospitals is a very excellent one, but I had assumed that there was probably some difficulty in the way of taking care of civilians and putting them under Army discipline.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Apparently there is no difficulty about that. I think the last legislation passed on the subject in the last Congress authorized the President to use any Government property for the care of war-risk patients. That includes the military hospitals.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I heard part of the colloquy between the Senator from New York and the senior Senator from Utah, and I am not sure yet whether I fully understood the deductions to be properly drawn therefrom. Would this amendment prevent or is there any law that would prevent the employment of the Public Health medical men in the Army hospitals, and the utilization by the Army of the services of the Public Health officers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what authority the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service would have to send a Public Health Service physician to an Army hospital. He can not do it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think he can.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator knows that medical officers of the Public Health Service have been used in the past by the Vocational Board.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And I think they are now, if I am not mistaken. The order that was issued by the President the other day was that a number of them should be transferred to the War Risk Bureau for that purpose in the consolidation of the work between the Vocational Board and the Public Health Service, and the only thought I had in mind was that if 4,000 of these soldiers were to be taken care of in the Army hospitals, what would the medical officers of the Public Health Service do, even though they had been transferred to the War Risk Bureau or the Vocational Board, if we went outside and brought in reserve or medical officers to do that work? It may be all right, Mr. President; I do not know; but I was wondering, if we take the 4,000 disabled soldiers——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Call them "ex-soldiers."

Mr. SMOOT. I mean disabled ex-soldiers. If we take them and put them into the Army hospitals, the Army itself providing the number of medical officers necessary to care for them, what would we do with the ones that we have now taking care of those same men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose we must assume that the number of patients under treatment in hospitals is going to increase very largely when they get the hospital space available.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true, and I guess it is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether there would be any impropriety in enacting a law requiring the Surgeon General, or requiring these activities of the Government which have medical officers under their jurisdiction, to transfer them temporarily, when their services are not required in the agency to which they properly belong, to such other agencies of the Government as require their services?

To illustrate, suppose that in the Army there is a large number of medical men not required, and the services of medical men are needed in the War Risk Bureau, or in the Public Health Service, or vice versa, why could not some provision be made that upon the requisition of the other department, if they found that they had officers available, they could be transferred to the other activity?

It seems to me that that ought to be done, because I can readily conceive that with the narrowing of the Army, the reduction of the number of soldiers, there may be a surplus of medical officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the medical officers must be reduced in number as the Army goes down. That is the law.

Mr. KING. They will be separated from the service, will they?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. There can be no more than six and a half medical officers per 1,000 of enlisted men.

Mr. KING. I am very much gratified to learn that. I was afraid that when they were in there they were in for life, and would soon be drawing pensions for retirement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is too suspicious.

Mr. KING. I am suspicious of the Army, I will say frankly, and of the Navy, and suspicious of the appropriations made. The only thing that reassures me and gives me supreme optimism is the splendid integrity of the Senator from New York. I know that he is watching all of these things with the utmost care and caution. But to return, it seems to me that there ought to be some provision so that the President of the United States, upon being requested, could allocate from one branch of the service to another these medical officers that are not required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROUSSARD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 16, line 9, to increase the appropriation for pay of enlisted men of the line and staff from "$72,678,659" to "$83,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McKinley	Smith
Ball	Harreld	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Harris	Moses	Sterling
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Myers	Sutherland
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Swanson
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Calder	Kellogg	Nicholson	Trammell
Cameron	Kenyon	Norbeck	Underwood
Cummins	Keyes	Norris	Wadsworth
Curtis	King	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	Knox	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Ladd	Phipps	Warren
Elkins	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	Lenroot	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Fletcher	McCormick	Shortridge	Wolcott
Gerry	McCumber	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is a vote which will determine the increase in the Army over the number fixed by the House, and upon it I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WILLIS. I have a pair with that Senator for the day, and therefore I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STERLING. I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCKINLEY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). May I inquire if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ELKINS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] on official business. As has been announced, he is paired on this vote with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. McCORMICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and in his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ball	Ernst	McCormick	Poindexter
Brandegee	Fernald	McCumber	Shortridge
Bursum	Fletcher	McKinley	Sterling
Calder	Hale	Moses	Sutherland
Cameron	Kellogg	Myers	Wadsworth
Cummins	Keyes	Newberry	Warren
Curtis	Knox	Nicholson	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	Lenroot	Oddie
Elkins	Lodge	Phipps

NAYS—30.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Trammell
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Underwood
Broussard	Kenyon	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	King	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	Ladd	Simmons	Watson, Ga.
Harreld	La Follette	Smoot	Wolcott
Harris	McNary	Swanson
Hitchcock	Norbeck	Townsend

NOT VOTING—32.

Colt	Heflin	Page	Spencer
Culberson	Johnson	Penrose	Stanfield
Edge	Kendrick	Pittman	Stanley
France	McKellar	Ransdell	Weller
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Reed	Williams
Glass	Nelson	Robinson	Willis

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it probably is not necessary, but we give notice that we shall ask for a separate vote upon this amendment in the Senate.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 23, before the word "under," to strike out the word "directed" and to insert the word "authorized."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York what is the purpose of changing the word "directed" to "authorized"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will note, the language, without such an amendment, would read as follows:

The Secretary of War is directed under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe to grant applications for the discharge—

And so forth.

The committee felt that it was rather a curious juxtaposition of words to direct a man to do a thing in the way which he regards as reasonable. So we changed the word "directed" to "authorized," which was the original meaning of the author of the amendment, as we understood.

Mr. BORAH. The author of the amendment does not so understand it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have discussed it with him.

Mr. BORAH. So have I. But of course if the Senator in charge of the bill says this is satisfactory to the author of the amendment, I have not a word to say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no authority to state his position at all. The effect is the same with the language either way.

Mr. BORAH. At any rate, if it goes in in this way, it will go to conference?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 2, before the words "enlisted men," in line 3, to strike out "150,000" and insert "170,000," so as to read:

And the Secretary of War is authorized under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men serving in the continental United States without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges until the number in the Army has been reduced to 170,00 enlisted men, not including the Philippine Scouts. The provisions of this paragraph shall take effect immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall not ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, but I want to have a viva voce vote taken on it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I shall ask for a separate vote upon this amendment in the Senate.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 5, to strike out:

No portion of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used to pay, in accordance with the provisions of section 27 of the Army reorganization act, approved June 4, 1920, an enlistment allowance to any soldier who enlists or reenlists after the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 10, to insert:

The provisions of section 27 of the Army reorganization act, approved June 4, 1920, providing an enlistment allowance, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 2, to increase the appropriation for additional pay for length of service to enlisted men from "$3,500,000" to "$4,600,000."

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York if this is necessitated by reason of the increase in the personnel?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the size of the Army has no relation to this item. The fact is that the long-service men in the Army to-day are of sufficient number and their longevity pay is such as to necessitate an appropriation of $4,625,000. They must be paid; it is the law. They are there. They are not the kind of men who leave the Army at all. They have been in for 10, 15, 25, or 30 years.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I inquire how it came that the House was not advised that that is the fact, and how did the House come to arrive at the figure which they inserted in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It was a pure mistake, then, in calculation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Was there no testimony on the point before the House committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There were no hearings at this session.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Were there any hearings at the last session?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there were hearings at the last session on the entire bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Can the chairman advise us what was said and what the items were which enter into this aggregate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can only state what was said before the Senate committee. I do not know whether the House committee went into the matter and inquired whether $3,500,000 would be sufficient to pay the men who are entitled to it under the law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me rather a startling proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senate committee did go into it and received a direct statement from the War Department that it would be absolutely necessary to appropriate the sum which is here suggested. In fact, we are $25,000 below their estimate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is it not equally supposable that the War Department gave the House committee the facts upon which their computation was based?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is supposable, but I do not know whether they did or not. I am perfectly free to say that if we do not appropriate enough to pay these men a deficiency appropriation will have to be asked or the amount taken from some other source.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether the amendment already adopted, which does away with the allowance for reenlistment, would reduce the number of these men?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; there is no connection between the two.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there not a proposition in the bill to put a stop to the extra pay for reenlistment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought there was one. Will not that amendment have a tendency to reduce the pay for length of service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the longevity pay is not the same as the reenlistment bonus.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But if men are allowed to reenlist it will increase the number of longevity men. It is obvious that men continuing in the service——

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is nothing in the bill which prevents them from reenlisting.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator stated, and it is my recollection, that there is an attempt to restrict reenlistment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; the Senator from New York never said that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bonus is taken away.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present law provides that after a man enlists in the Army and serves one enlistment, if he thereupon reenlists for three years he shall receive a $90 bonus for so doing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is taken away?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That provision is repealed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One purpose of taking it away is to reduce the number of reenlistments and take away the inducement for reenlistment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the purpose is to save money.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is also to take away the inducement to reenlist.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not the purpose at all to take away the inducement, because the reenlistments are coming in greater proportion now than ever before, and the bonus is not necessary to induce reenlistment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bonus was put there for the purpose of inducing men to reenlist.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; based upon the experience before the European war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And they are now doing it as a matter of right to secure the bonus?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. By taking the bonus away we reduce the number of reenlistments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think we are.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. By reducing the number of reenlistments will we not reduce the need for longevity pay?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; because this is applicable almost entirely to men who have spent a long time in the Army. They reenlist regardless of the bonus, because if they do not reenlist they lose the 30-year retirement privilege. When a man has spent 15 years in the Army a reenlistment bonus is not the inducement that keeps him in the Army thereafter; it is the prospect of retirement at three-quarters pay at the termination of 30 years' service. The longevity pay increases each five years, as I recollect, as he goes on in the service. The longevity money must be paid the men. The number of men who have had 15 years of service or more is almost stationary. It is a fixed charge. The variation will be very slight no matter what the pay of the enlisted men upon the first enlistment or the second enlistment may be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 18, line 6, the last items read being as follows:

For pay of the officers on the retired list, $5,000,000.
For increase pay to retired officers on active duty, $275,000.

Mr. KING. May I make an inquiry of the Senator from New York pertinent to the items just read? We have here an item for pay of officers on the retired list of $5,000,000, and then the next item is $275,000. I presume that is by reason of the fact that there were more officers retired?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. The second item is for the pay of retired officers on active duty. When a retired officer goes on active duty he is paid the full pay of his grade. If he is on retired duty, he is paid only three-quarters of the pay of his grade. It so happens that to-day there are 203 retired officers on active duty. To pay them the full pay would cost $369,000. Both committees joined in the reduction to $275,000, which would compel the War Department to reduce the number of retired officers on active duty from 203 down to 178.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the bill which we passed some time ago has expired by limitation, which authorized the increasing of the number of officers to approximately 18,000 or a considerable number? I may not state the number accurately. The Senator will recall that during the consideration of the Army bill some time ago a provision was added which permitted the retention of a very large number of officers for the replenishing of the Army, and there were added to the Army probably some 14,000 officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator must be referring to the Army reorganization act, which authorizes a maximum commissioned personnel strength——

Mr. KING. No; I am not alluding to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the only existing law on the subject.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that last year provision was made for the temporary addition or retention of approximately 14,000 officers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That provision was supplanted by the Army reorganization act and no longer exists. All of the emergency or temporary officers were discharged December 31, 1920.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator state that in view of the reduction in the size of the Army there will be a necessity for the employment of the retired officers in active service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I pointed out a moment ago, we are compelling a reduction in the number employed on active service. Most of the retired officers who are on active service are acting as military instructors at schools and colleges, where some of them are very useful; they are doing good work for the Government and for the colleges and schools. They are not fit for active, hard service in the field, and if they can be employed in that way, especially when the schools and colleges like one of these officers particularly well, it is a good thing to do it.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But we wanted to reduce the number, and we have reduced it by 25.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 20, line 5, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," to increase the appropriation for pay of nurses from "$800,000" to "$900,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 17, after the word "duty," to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$6,000,000," so as to read:

For commutation of quarters and heat and light to commissioned officers, warrant officers, members of the Nurse Corps, and enlisted men on duty at places where no public quarters are available, including enlisted men of the Enlisted Reserve Corps and retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, $6,000,000.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York what is the necessity for that increase? If we are reducing the Army, it seems to me there is no necessity for an increase of a million dollars in this item. Certainly the House must have given consideration to the subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will state the facts to the Senator. It is very difficult to estimate just how much money will be required for commutation of quarters, heat, and light for all officers and men who may at one time or another draw allowances of that kind. The revised estimate of the department was $7,233,000. The House cut it to $5,000,000. We had a long discussion about it, and some of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs sent for an officer in the War Department who gives more study to this thing than anyone else there. He insisted—and I speak frankly—that $7,000,000 was needed and he did not see how they could get through with less. The Senate committee split the difference and made it $6,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 2, to increase the appropriation for additional 10 per cent increase of pay of officers on foreign service from "$250,000" to "$325,000."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to inquire about that item. What is the reason for believing that the number of officers in foreign service and men in foreign service will be greater than the number estimated by the House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are greater to-day by actual count.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Greater than at the time the estimate was prepared?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The estimate of the department for 10 per cent increase of pay for officers in foreign service was $362,784. That would pay the officers who are now on foreign service, and there are 1,297 of them. The House cut that to $250,000, making it possible to pay only 890 officers. Some one must pay the balance of those officers or else they must be brought home from foreign service.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Most of them are in Germany, I suppose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; some are in Germany, some in the Philippines, some in China, and some in Alaska.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Alaskan is not foreign service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the officers and men in Alaska are entitled to the foreign-service increase. I regret to say to the Senator that I can not recollect whether Panama is foreign service or not. I think it is not and I think Hawaii is not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire of the Senator, then, with respect to the officers and men who are in Germany. For what period is it contemplated that this amount will pay their extra compensation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. One year.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that we are now——

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I modify that a little? The Senator will notice that the appropriation proposed by the Senate committee is $325,000. The estimate was $362,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And that is upon the basis of the officers and men now in Germany remaining there for another year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. A little short of a year. It would make it possible for them to stay and for all the officers on foreign service in other places to stay a little less than one year on the appropriation recommended by the Senate committee. If they do not stay, then the money is not spent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We are appropriating on the basis that the Army is going to remain in Germany another year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Approximately.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill, and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 21, line 4, to increase the appropriation for additional 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service, from "$1,000,000" to "$1,750,000."

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York whether the testimony shows that, in view of the advantages to us in exchange, it was considered proper to give such a large increase in pay for foreign service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is fixed by law.

Mr. KING. I know that; but the law is not immutable; and I was wondering if the committee considered the advisability of changing the law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean changing the law by reducing in dollars the pay of our soldiers in Germany?

Mr. KING. No. I mean by reducing the amount allowed for foreign-service pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In what currency would we then pay them?

Mr. KING. Of course, we should necessarily pay them in American dollars.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then we should pay them less than the law provides that they shall receive.

Mr. KING. I grant that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it would be rather difficult to amend the law from time to time just to suit the situation in Germany.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator entirely, but I was wondering whether or not there was testimony tending to show that there ought to be increased pay for foreign service. My experience with soldiers who have been abroad is that they regard it as desirable to go to Alaska, to Panama, or to China; they do not hesitate; they are not reluctant to accept foreign service. Many of them would prefer foreign service, at least for one trial, to remaining at home; and I was wondering if the committee had considered the question of reducing the foreign-service pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it has not. That matter should be taken up by the joint committee of Congress provided for in the temporary pay increase bill of last year. That is one of the problems of the pay of the Army.

Mr. KING. That will be considered?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator think that, so far as the army of occupation in Germany is concerned, an entirely different situation exists from that which has existed heretofore in the case of foreign service? The enlisted men and officers of the American Army in Germany are using their American money to buy German money at an enormous discount, so that the ordinary pay of the American soldier over there is purchasing for him very much more than it would purchase in any other part of the world.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, they have that advantage, but it would be rather difficult for us to make the pay of officers differ in accordance with the part of the world in which they happen to be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If it is proposed to keep that Army there for another year, as the Senator has indicated by his answer——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not indicate that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator indicates that an appropriation is made for that purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For a little less than a year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is careful not to be very definite on the subject; but an appropriation is made for keeping the Army there for another year, something which I think is not going to happen and which can not happen.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the appropriation of $1,750,000 for the additional pay of enlisted men on foreign service is not based upon a year; it is considerably less. We must remember not to think of this merely in the terms of our men on the Rhine. We have 10,000 of our troops in the Philippines and 1,600 in China; and for the number of men on foreign service to-day $2,269,000 are necessary to pay them for one year, while we are appropriating only $1,750,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the Senator from New York is really taking into account in this item the bringing of the soldiers back within the year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the possibility of that; but we have no information as to when they will return.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 21, line 15, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War shall determine what officers are required to be mounted within the meaning of the law authorizing the furnishing of mounts and horse equipment and the payment of additional pay to officers who furnish additional mounts at their own expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Assistant Secretary continued the reading of the bill to the end of line 11, on page 22, the last clause read being as follows:

The appropriation for "Pay, etc., of the Army," for the fiscal year 1921 shall be available for the authorized pay of members of the Reserve Training Corps or other persons authorized by the Secretary of War to attend the advanced course training camps during such fiscal year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In line 9, page 22, after the word "Reserve," the word "Officers'" should be inserted. I suggest that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York, merely for information, how it comes that in this bill we make the appropriations which are provided for on page 21 for the widows of certain officers of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not say where those items originated. They have been in the Army appropriation bill for years. In my judgment they really do not belong in the bill. The persons referred to should be put upon a pensionable status. If the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] were here he might recollect how it was that those three items got into the Army appropriation bill. They were originally inserted before my day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I made the inquiry because my attention was some time ago called to the fact that for some 10 years prior to 1917 there was a general law which accorded to the widow of an officer in the Regular Army six months' pay on his death. That law was repealed, my recollection is, in October, 1917, but was reenacted in 1919.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was repealed by implication in the war risk insurance act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but it was reenacted in 1919, so that the widows of officers dying prior to October, 1917, were accorded six months' pay; the widows of officers dying since 1919 are accorded six months' pay; but the unfortunate widows who lost their husbands during the intervening period, it seems, are excluded and thus unjustly discriminated against. I was wondering whether the widows mentioned were in that class and therefore special provision was being made for them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I confess I can not recollect where these items originated. I have become so accustomed to seeing them in the bill that if I did know I have forgotten. There must be some special state of circumstances surrounding them that caused their inclusion originally in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator see any reason why the act to which I have referred should not be made applicable to widows of those officers dying during that intervening period?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should think not. I have consulted with one or two members of the committee, and perhaps the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] would not object if I suggest that we strike out these three items of the bill and let the matter go to conference and find out just what ought to be done with them; that is, without prejudice, of course, to the beneficiaries.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquired through no antagonistic spirit; I merely wanted to know what the items meant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out, on page 21, commencing in line 20, the remainder of that page, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 on page 22.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the three paragraphs, beginning on page 21, with line 20, down to and including line 4, on page 22, as follows:

For amount required to make monthly payments to Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, late major, United States Army, $1,500.

For amount required to make monthly payments to Mabel H. Lazear, widow of Jesse W. Lazear, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, $1,500.

For amount required to make monthly payments to John R. Kissinger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, also late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, $1,200.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that during my temporary absence there was some inquiry made concerning the items of the bill on page 21 providing monthly payments to the widows of certain officers.

Those provisions have been incorporated in the bill for many years to fulfill laws enacted by Congress a long time ago. They are widows whose husbands lost their lives by tendering their bodies to the medical service for use in connection with certain scientific investigations and experiments, such as to ascertain the cause of yellow fever and what the mosquito had to do with the spread of that disease and other important experiments of hazardous nature in the interest of health and the protection of human life throughout the Nation.

While I remember all the cases, as to one of them—the Kissinger case—I should have to refresh my memory to some extent, but in the cases of the two widows, in each instance the officer sacrificed his life to medical science and for the welfare of the race. Their families were left without means following the death of the noble men who were willing to take chances in the interest of medical science and lost their lives as a result.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the widows of officers who lost their lives on the Panama Canal by allowing their bodies to be subjected to the bite of a fever-infested mosquito in order to aid medical science were granted a pension of $125 a month, and they draw their pensions the same as other pensioners under the pension laws.

Mr. WARREN. That does not apply to the three items carried in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know as to the three cases mentioned.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I undertook on one or two occasions to have the payments to the two widows mentioned placed in the bill under the laws governing the Pension Bureau, and to have the items taken out of this bill, but the cases were so extreme and the devotion of the officers who lost their lives was such that there was very serious objection made, and it was insisted by their comrades that the items be carried as they had theretofore been in the Army appropriation bill, as a tribute, and every year since the appropriation has been made, and, as I have said, the law requires it to be made.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 22 is an item reading as follows:

For amount required to make monthly payments to John R. Kissinger, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-seventh Indiana Volunteer Infantry, also late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, $1,200.

How is that in this bill?

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall the particulars about that case, but I think that it was placed in the bill on the initiative of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I repeat, I am not entirely certain about that one case, but we had an investigation concerning the other cases, as to what the necessities of the widows mentioned were, some complaint having drifted in to us. I will not refer to the details, but it became necessary to know something about their circumstances, and the results satisfied the committee that it was just and proper to continue the items in the bill, and they will have to be continued until the law is repealed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I suggest that I think it would be well for the Senate to reinstate those items which were stricken out? I am well satisfied from the explanation of the Senator from Wyoming that they ought to be in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. By all means they ought to be in the bill.

Mr. MYERS. If the bill goes to conference with the items stricken out, the House conferees may say, "We will accept the amendment"; and then what could we do? We could only insist on our own amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I repeat that the law provides for payment in these cases, so that the items should remain in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by me striking out the three items was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and without objection, the amendment will be considered as not having been made.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 25, line 12, to increase the appropriation for subsistence of the Army from "$29,350,000" to "$30,500,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator the reason for adding something over $1,000,000 to that total?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The appropriation made by the House of $29,350,000 is the estimate of the amount which is regarded as necessary to subsist an Army of the size contemplated by the House. The War Department tells the Senate committee that for an Army reduced to 175,000 men $31,500,000 would be necessary; but as we have reduced the Army to a trifle under 170,000 men the committee thought that $30,500,000 would be sufficient. This item and the one covering the pay of enlisted men are the only two items in the bill which have anything important to do with the size of the Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Assistant Secretary continued the reading of the bill, reading under the heading "Regular supplies" to the appropriation of $16,500,000, in line 1, on page 28.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 28, line 3, after the words "civilian employees," to strike out:

Not to exceed $1,750,000 shall be expended for power, heat, and electric current, of which not exceeding $52,300 may be used for improvement of electric power supply system at Governors Island, N. Y.; not to exceed $100,000 shall be expended for maintenance and repair of buildings (including repair of machinery) for laundries; not to exceed $300,000 shall be expended for the maintenance and repair of heating apparatus (other than stoves); not to exceed $200,000 for maintenance and repair of electric wiring and fixtures; not to exceed $10,000 for the repair and exchange of typewriters.

And, on line 13, before the word "not," to insert "and," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That from this appropriation not to exceed $1,750,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees, and not to exceed $5,225,000 for fuel.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to advise the Senate that when we get through with the amendments offered by the committee I shall move to reduce the amount of $16,500,000, in line 1, page 28, as well as the very large items carried for civilian employees in other parts of the bill. It seems to me that $1,750,000 for the payment of civilian employees in the expenditure of the $16,500,000 is entirely too much when we take into account the large number of other civilian employees, and the organization which is existing now to care for all branches of the Government, and some of the duties of which would extend into the labors involved in the expenditure of this $16,500,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 28, line 14, after the word "fuel," to strike out:

Not to exceed $6,265,000 for forage, including salt and vinegar and bedding for animals, and straw for soldiers' bedding; not to exceed $350,000 for ice; and not to exceed $550,000 shall be expended for stationery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 17, to strike out:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to sell as soon as possible after the approval of this act, upon such terms and under such conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the best interests of the Government, such horses and mules now being held at remount stations and posts as are not in actual use, and in any event not less than 10,000 of such animals shall be sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 20, after the word "recruiting," to insert "and of the sum appropriated for incidental expenses, $100,000 shall be immediately available"; and in line 23, after the word "including," to insert "draft evaders and," so as to read:

Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, when ordered to active duty; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster Corps, including the care of officers' mounts when the same are furnished by the Government; compensation of clerks and other employees of the Quartermaster Corps, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States disciplinary barracks, and incidental expenses of recruiting; and of the sum appropriated for incidental expenses, $100,000 shall be immediately available for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including draft evaders and escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $10 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement under court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operation of the Army and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $5,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 11, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$2,450,000"; in line 12, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$2,900,000" and insert "$2,825,000"; and in line 14, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That from this appropriation not exceeding $2,450,000 shall be expended for the hire of labor; not exceeding $2,825,000 shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees other than laborers; not exceeding $100,000 shall be expended for telegrams, cablegrams, and postage; and not exceeding $25,000 shall be expended for experimental and development work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, not as a committee amendment, but as an amendment which has been brought to my attention and which I think should be offered, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to go in after line 16 on page 30, and call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

MONUMENTS OR TABLETS IN CUBA AND CHINA.

For repairs and preservation of monuments, tablets, roads, fences, etc., made and constructed by the United States in Cuba and China to mark the places where American soldiers fell, $1,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My information is that this item has always been carried in the sundry civil bill, and by some accident it was left out. It is a standing item to take care of the monument at San Juan and the monuments in China, with a caretaker to take care of the grounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 34, line 3, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That the amounts to be expended from this appropriation for the objects hereinbefore set forth shall not exceed the following respective sums: Animal-drawn transportation, $1,530,000; transportation by water, $10,620,000; rail transportation, $10,200,000; and motor transportation, $6,375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 8, after the words just stricken out, to strike out:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of draft or pack animals or animal-drawn vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In line 3 the word "Provided" should be stricken out as an amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think it would be better to leave that in and to strike out "Provided further," in line 11.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to move to strike out the word "further" in line 11.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest striking out the words "Provided further," in line 11.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "Provided further," in line 11. Then it will read: $28,725,000: Provided, That no money appropriated by this act—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for my own information I should like to know the method by which the department reaches the conclusion that such a stupendous sum—nearly $29,000,000—will be required for transportation charges.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The department reached the conclusion that $61,500,000 was necessary, and we cut them to $28,000,000. Under the item of "Transportation" the transports taking supplies for the troops in Germany are paid for, coming and going. The transports crossing the Pacific to the Philippines and to China, to Hawaii, down to Panama and up to Alaska, are all paid for under it. Whenever any soldier or a unit of soldiers travels on duty the railroad fare is paid for under this item. All the repair and maintenance of the trucks used in the Army is paid for under this item; all the escort wagons, everything on wheels, purchase, repair, and maintenance, is paid for under this—the care of horses, purchase of horses and mules, pack animals, everything that has to do with moving the Army or its supplies.

The item is one that can be made variable, great or small, by the Secretary of War, unless the Congress places severe restrictions upon it. The present Secretary of War has laid down a rigid rule that no officer shall be ordered across the country or on special duty involving travel pay without his approval. A careless habit grew up during the war and immediately afterwards. Vast numbers of officers were traveling all over the country. It became an easy thing to do, to order an officer back and forth across the continent, and men in the same way. That is being cut down severely, and the committees have set the example by cutting that estimate from $61,500,000 down to $28,000,000; and, if the truth must be told, they do not see how they are going to get on with that amount. They will have to, but it is going to immobilize most of the Army.

Mr. KING. They may have to walk.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I know, of course, that an agreement has been made to take up first the amendments offered by the committee; but since we are at the part of the bill which relates to the sale of motor trucks, while I will offer the amendment later if the rule is insisted on, I want to ask the chairman of the committee as to an amendment which I understand is to be offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is not here.

The amendment is, on page 34, line 17, after the word "Army," to insert the words:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to dispose of by transfer to the Post Office Department, for use in the Postal Service, such number, not exceeding 2,000, of three-quarter ton motor trucks as in the judgment of the Secretary are not necessary for the use of the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not accept that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to press it at this time. I know it is not in order at this moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator can present it now, and it can be printed, I take it, and considered later.

Mr. LODGE. I can present it after the bill is finished, of course.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; but I mean if the Senator is asking that it be now presented, it can be printed.

Mr. LODGE. No; I wanted information in regard to it. I shall offer it at the appropriate time. The amendment was sent to me by the Postmaster General.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He sent it, I think, to every Member of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Very likely. I did not mean to claim any peculiar privilege; but as it was sent about generally, and it was said that it was to be offered by the Senator from Kansas, I wanted to know what the objection to it was. On its face it sounds very reasonable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is now quarter of 5. I do not know whether it is the pleasure of the Senate to embark upon a discussion of the motor-truck problem to-night or not.

Mr. LODGE. Then I will let it go over until the bill is concluded and at the proper time I will offer it, unless by that time the Senator from Kansas has reappeared.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am quite sure it will take more than 15 or 20 minutes to settle the motor-truck problem.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; let it go over then until the time when it is in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in this connection I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. We had a discussion of this matter, and an amendment was adopted on this bill at the last session requiring the Secretary of War to turn over to the States and counties for road purposes all unused trucks and automobiles.

I understood the chairman to say they have all been disposed of, and that they have no surplus on hand. I would like to know if that is true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. What surplus they have on hand is worn-out material. They have no surplus of usable trucks. They are 1,500 short to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. And that is true as to automobiles?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are 480 short in passenger-carrying automobiles.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wanted to have that appear in the RECORD, because it will probably prevent a fight.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will find a discussion of this question in the hearings before the committee on pages 34 and 35. The conclusion there reached is that there is now a deficit of 1,505 trucks and 487 passenger-carrying automobiles.

Mr. OVERMAN. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. FLETCHER. The details are given in the hearings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 7, to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That not to exceed $700,000 of this appropriation shall become immediately available for the shipment of sodium nitrate from present storage points to the Savanna Proving Grounds, Ill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 16, to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That hereafter the cost of transportation of civilian employees and of materials in connection with the construction or maintenance of seacoast fortifications, or the acquisition of land therefor, by the Engineer Department, or with the manufacturing and purchase activities of the Ordnance Department and the Chemical Warfare Service, shall be charged to the appropriations for the work in connection with which such transportation charges are incurred.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 36, to strike out:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed and authorized to transfer, without charge, within 30 days after the approval of this act, to the Department of the Interior, six serviceable light motor trucks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 14, after the numerals "$2,000,000," to strike out "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for new construction work."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 10, after "1921," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That all the money hereinbefore designated under the titles "Subsistence of the Army," "Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps," "Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps," "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," "Water and sewers at military posts," "Clothing and camp and garrison equipage," shall be disbursed and accounted for, except as specifically limited, as "General appropriations Quartermaster Corps," and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 20, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the rent of offices for military attachés.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Military post exchanges," on page 42, line 1, after the word "rooms," to insert "hostess houses," so as to read:

For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations for the conduct of the post exchange, school, library, reading, lunch, amusement rooms, hostess houses, chapels, and gymnasium, including repairs to buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902, for the rental of films, purchase of slides, supplies for and making repairs to moving-picture outfits and for similar and other recreational purposes at training and mobilization camps now established, or which may be hereafter established, $150,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move as an amendment to the amendment, on line 1, after the word "rooms," to insert the words "for the conduct and maintenance of hostess houses."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 3, on page 44, the last paragraph read being as follows:

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF HOSPITALS.

For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, and for temporary hospitals in standing camps and cantonments; for the alteration of permanent buildings at posts for use as hospitals, construction and repairs of temporary hospital buildings at permanent posts, construction and repair of temporary general hospitals, rental or purchase of grounds, and rental and alteration of buildings for use for hospital purposes in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including necessary temporary quarters for hospital personnel, outbuildings, heating and laundry apparatus, plumbing, water and sewers and electric work, cooking apparatus, and roads and walks for the same, $900,000.

Mr. KING. Before passing the item of hospitals, permit me to say that the appropriation bill last year carried a considerable sum, and we had a number of hospitals following the war. May I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill, in view of the appropriations heretofore made, and the legacies of the war in hospitals, whether this sum is deemed necessary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator refer to the appropriation on the top of page 44?

Mr. KING. I was called from the Chamber, and as I was coming in I heard the item of hospitals referred to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Construction and repair of hospitals?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is for the standard number of hospitals which are now actually operated by the medical department. They are all in operation. The department asked $1,625,000 for the construction and repair of hospitals. No new ones are being constructed, and the committee gives them $900,000.

Mr. KING. I supposed that with the reduction of the Army there would be a material reduction in the amount appropriated for new construction.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have reduced it $700,000 below their estimates, and I would go very slowly in reducing it any more, because it might injure the sick.

Mr. KING. Of course, we must make adequate appropriations, but in view of the large appropriations made for the Public Health Service, and the reduction in the Army, I was led to inquire whether or not this amount was necessary.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 5, to increase the appropriation for vocational training from "$1,200,000" to "$1,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 9, on page 50.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS IN COLORADO.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It relates to the sufferers from the flood in the district of Pueblo, Colo.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to take such temporary sanitary measures as he may deem necessary and to furnish subsistence and quartermaster supplies belonging to the Military Establishment and available and issue the same to such destitute persons in Colorado as have been rendered homeless or are in needy circumstances as a result of the recent flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries, and in executing this joint resolution the Secretary of War is directed, in so far as possible, to cooperate with the authorities in the State of Colorado and the mayors of such cities on the Arkansas River or its tributaries as may have sustained damages.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution just read. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think this is a very proper resolution. I do not object, because I think we ought to grant the relief. But I do not think we ought to let it go through as a merely perfunctory matter. I think the Senator should advise the Senate as to about what the cost will be. We would like to have a statement about it.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, considered the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, it was thought advisable to put the joint resolution in this form for the reason that it is as yet impossible to secure definite estimates as to the amount of Federal relief which may be necessary in assisting the local authorities and the State of Colorado to provide relief. It is not sought at this time to take any note of the property damage, such as the destruction of buildings, the washing down of the levees along the two rivers, the crop destruction, or anything of that nature, but simply to provide for the relief of sufferers from the flood.

In the case of San Francisco, which I may cite, not exactly as a precedent, but to state what action was taken at that time, the first joint resolution passed by the Congress appropriated $1,000,000 for use for relief of sufferers. That was followed later by additional measures, making a total appropriation for the purposes of relief of $2,500,000.

In the cases of the Ohio floods the War Department, and I believe in that instance also the Navy Department, as it had been the case in the San Francisco earthquake, were authorized to proceed with the work of relief, and the expenditures in the cases of the Ohio floods, amounting to something over $800,000, were covered by appropriations subsequently made to the departments which had provided the supplies for the sufferers.

The matter of covering this emergency immediately and in a proper manner was taken up by the Colorado delegation with the chairmen of the Appropriation Committees of the Senate and of the House. The suggestion we made to them was to place an upper limit of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, in the form of an appropriation which would be carried by the joint resolution. The chairmen of those committees agreed, in conferring with the Colorado delegation, that it would not be advisable to do that. They thought it would be preferable to give the authority to the War Department to utilize supplies out of stores and to render assistance to the sufferers without stipulating the amount of cost that would be involved.

I think the record will show that in all cases, without perhaps more than one or two exceptions, in disasters of any magnitude the Federal Government has rendered assistance immediately.

Perhaps the Secretary of War has authority without this legislation to render aid and assistance, but I know, after conference with him, that he would prefer to have specific authority, as is proposed by the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I doubt whether the Secretary of War has any authority to render aid under the law. He may render aid and have his action approved by Congress subsequently, but under the law I do not think he has any authority to do it. I believe the Senator's joint resolution is a very timely one and a very proper one, and it is limited within the scope of the action of Congress in the past. I do not think the Congress has ever gone to the extent of paying for permanent damages.

Mr. PHIPPS. It has not, and that is not contemplated in the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The joint resolution, as I understand it, relates to immediate relief for the sufferings of the people there, and I think it should meet the approval of all. Where it is practicable and possible I would like to see some limitation put in the measure and not give a blanket order, but, as the Senator says, under these circumstances that could not be done at this time, and the joint resolution should pass in the form in which it is presented to us.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 8, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 7, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art our refuge and strength and our heavenly Father, too, in whom we find repose. We linger in the outer court of the Holy of Holies. Hear our call and give answer to our little prayer. When the load is heavy, give us support; when the way is uncertain, give us guidance; and when the pathway is lonely and forbidding, bless us with Thy companionship. Feed us not with the bread of tears, but give unto us that living manna that cometh down in bountiful measure from the Father of Life. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE NAVAL BILL.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 4803, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments thereto, to the end that the Senate amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendments be, and hereby is, agreed to, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. GARNER. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that we might facilitate this matter and avoid the passage of the rule if the conferees would assure us that they would give us a vote on the Borah amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the discussion on the floor when the matter was up a few days ago, and it was my understanding then that the probable conferees on the part of the majority said that they would bring the matter back in such a way as to allow a vote on the question. I will now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. GARNER. The contemplated minority conferees who will be appointed, I assume, are in the Chamber; and may I ask the gentleman from Michigan if he would agree to give the House a vote on the Borah amendment if we consent to send the bill to conference by agreement?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say that I thought I expressed myself the other day as clearly as I knew how, that the Borah amendment would be brought back for a vote by the House. There is no other way.

Mr. GARNER. So that there may be no mistake about it, will the gentleman from Michigan bring the Borah amendment back and give us an opportunity to vote directly on the proposition whether or not the Borah amendment shall be agreed to?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There is no question but what that will be done, and I will do that.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman will do that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That, of course, means that a motion to concur with an amendment would be in order. I would not undertake to prevent opportunity for amendment.

Mr. GARNER. That is exactly what I want to call attention to. The gentleman knows that under the rules of the House, when he comes back from the conference and moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, any gentleman having the floor can move to concur with an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is true.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman resist a motion to concur with an amendment and give the House an opportunity to vote directly on the Borah amendment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I can not say that——

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will yield, after the bill has gone to conference and it comes back, a motion to concur has precedence over a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. GARNER. There is just where the gentleman is mistaken about the rules of the House.

Mr. PADGETT. After it comes back from conference, I say.

Mr. GARNER. No; we looked that matter up, and on a motion to recede and concur you ask for a division of the question.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, if you divide, you are correct; but if not, a motion to concur has precedence.

Mr. GARNER. The rules of the House kill the preferential motion to concur with an amendment. What I want the gentleman to agree to now is that we may have an opportunity to vote directly on the Borah amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. So far as I am concerned, I think the Borah amendment should be amended, and I think the gentleman from Texas thinks so, too. I would not ask unanimous consent to vote directly upon that without an amendment to it.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, the gentleman is not willing that the House should vote directly on the Borah amendment?

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. With a motion to concur in the Senate amendment and another to concur with an amendment, the gentleman gets a direct vote——

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no. I prefer that the House should have an opportunity to vote directly on the Borah amendment and thus test the judgment of the House.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman's desire is that this side of the House should bind itself not to offer an amendment to the Borah amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen will yield——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no doubt but that every gentleman here has an opinion with regard to every one of the Senate amendments on this bill; no doubt that every gentleman would like to have every amendment in the bill presented to the House just in the way that would best please him. Manifestly that can not be arranged. The rule proposes to send the bill to conference in the usual way, with the conferees uninstructed, the House reserving all its rights on the conference report, and nothing more than that can be asked.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Wyoming says that the House will reserve all its rights. Now, the gentleman from Wyoming has been on a number of conferences. The gentleman from Wyoming knows that if you take the bill up under the rules of the House the House would have an opportunity to vote on the Borah amendment and agree to it. The gentleman knows that. The House will take away from itself the opportunity to vote on the Borah amendment by the adoption of this rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield further.

Mr. MONDELL. What the gentleman from Texas said is not correct. If the bill were taken up under the rules of the House, it would go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARNER. But it comes back from that committee to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Committee of the Whole House could agree to the Borah amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We do not know how the matter would be presented. The possibilities are that it would not come back from the committee with the Borah amendment in it at all.

Mr. GARNER. But the committee would have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It would have the same opportunity to consider the question involved in the resolution that is now pending in the House. When this bill is sent to conference the conferees will do as they usually do, representing the House. They will assert their opinions with respect to the question involved.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and other gentlemen will have an opportunity of voting to agree or to disagree to the conference report or to that part of it which is in disagreement.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the rules of the House the conferees can not agree to that legislation with an amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all.

Mr. PADGETT. They will come back to the House without a conference agreement, and then it can be submitted to the House. The conferees can not bring it back to the House with an amendment under the rules of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not new matter or matter that would not have been in order when the bill was under consideration in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] for the purpose of debate.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this appears to be one of those peculiar legislative proposals which has the support of everybody and yet is never enacted into law. I refer to the great question of universal disarmament. I speak for myself, and I know I speak for some others on this side of the Chamber, if not for very nearly all. We in good faith wish to give the President of the United States an opportunity to see what he can accomplish by way of agreement with the great nations of the earth to lift from the shoulders of the people at least a part of the burden that is imposed by the great naval establishments. We would like, if we could so arrange it, to have an opportunity to vote for the Borah amendment, or for that amendment substantially, and if gentlemen on the other side can give us any assurance that that opportunity will be given to the House, this rule will be adopted with practical unanimity. That is the position on this side of the Chamber in so far as I have been able to ascertain the attitude of the minority. We have no desire to embarrass the President. I saw a statement published in the paper the other day by the distinguished author of the so-called Borah amendment which has a great deal of common sense to it. He wanted the amendment made as simple in terms as possible. He did not desire any conditions. He wanted a vote squarely on his proposal.

Certainly this is a proposal concerning which men ought not to attempt to play politics. On this side of the Chamber I know that there are many who in perfect good faith are willing to give the President untrammeled opportunity to see what he can do. It would, I honestly believe, be more accurate to say the minority is unanimously willing to give the President such opportunity. We will be grievously disappointed if when the conference report comes back the Borah amendment is camouflaged by the so-called Porter resolution. We do not want any such gold brick as that. Here is a practical opportunity for the President to make a move in the right direction, supported by a minority here well-nigh unanimous. Mr. Speaker, upon the wall of every home in America should be written the statistics which indicate the burden of the expense of war and preparation for war. From 80 to 90 cents out of every dollar appropriated by this Congress will be for the maintenance of the Army or the Navy or for the paying of pensions or for meeting other expense made necessary by war. Almost 90 cents out of every dollar must go to pay the penalty of past wars or for the purpose of making ready for future wars. How long the taxpayers of America will permit this war budget to grow in size because of the danger of future wars is problematical. This much is certain, they will not stand it always, for the end is national bankruptcy. We hope that you will give us an opportunity to vote on the Borah amendment. We put this matter squarely up to you of the majority in absolute good faith. We ask you to give the House opportunity to vote. If you do, we stand ready to cooperate with you. If you do not, you had better make ready your answer to the people of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I merely want to say to the gentleman that I as one Republican want an opportunity to vote direct on the Borah amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. I know also that the gentleman from Ohio does not stand alone. I know that there are gentlemen on this side of the House, as well as on that side, who are willing to approach this question in a sincere, honest manner, and to place it above any political consideration. We have no right to attempt to play politics in a great matter like this which affects all the American people.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Under the new rules of the House are not the conferees required and compelled to come back with the Borah amendment, as it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and give the House an opportunity to express its opinion?

Mr. POU. I do not think so. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, this motion involves a question of general policy of supreme importance. That is the independent right of two legislative bodies to place items on an appropriation bill. That independent right surely leads to extravagance and waste. In every appropriation bill which becomes a law we see manifest evidences of the different preferences and ideas of the two Houses, together with the result of personal efforts to obtain appropriations. On this very bill there was for a long time a controversy between the Senate and House. The House preferred the building of battleships while the Senate preferred the building of cruisers. When the conference report was agreed upon, the amounts in the bill were very much increased because of a recognition of the preferences of the two Houses. I do not anticipate any hasty change in this system. I would indulge in no baiting of the Senate, no derogation of its prerogatives, but the best system is one in which a single House has the responsibility for appropriations. We recently passed a budget bill which will create a great reform, but it will not create a millenium. Possibly a joint committee of the two Houses may be a partial solution of the question. In other countries single houses have full authority. In England the Lords even for clerical service must appeal to the Commons. In France the question has never been definitely decided, although the right of the Senate to add amendments has always been denied.

What have we here? A bill very carefully considered in this House. It goes to the Senate and a hundred million dollars are added. I shall be disappointed, Mr. Speaker, if a total of

$1,000,000 of those additions is recommended by the conferees, when the bill comes back to the House. [Applause.]

The Senate might, if it had an independent responsibility, frame a most excellent appropriation bill, but this House, where there is earnest and sometimes even acrimonious debate, speaks most accurately, most correctly for the will of 110,000,000 people. [Applause.] The people are demanding economy. Occasionally the demand is too vague and general and those who ask it are seeking appropriations for their own special interest, inconsistent with the views they advocate. But the duty rests upon this House to promote economy. The overburdened taxpayers of the country are crying aloud for relief. The whole world, with the mounting cost of militarism, is threatened with universal bankruptcy, and I trust the conferees will stand firmly and bring back to this House a report of nonconcurrence in these additions so that the bill may remain as it was in the House. Thus we shall do our duty to the country by expressing the opinion that we are opposed to this mad race for an increase in military expenses. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield some of his time?

Mr. POU. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in his suggestion that the conferees on the part of the House at least ought to try to eliminate from the conference report the increases of the Senate. I believe that 90 per cent of the membership of this House are in favor of retrenchment in the matter of expenditures in military affairs. Now, as for myself, for instance, I know I have well-formed views that I believe are based on premises that are conclusive from the testimony that I have, and that is that the military branch of the Government should be reduced to 100,000 men. I would like to see disarmament in the Navy, but I shall never support disarmament in the Navy as long as other nations are likely to be armed and are dangerous to the safety of our Republic. [Applause.] Now, that is my position. The gentleman from Ohio has spoken to the House in reference to the best method of getting adopted the House views on this bill. The gentleman from Ohio has been on many conference committees. He understands exactly the methods of a conference. He understands also that when you trust to the conferees a matter of disagreement to a Senate amendment without instructions that when the conferees' report is once agreed to there is no escape except to vote it up or vote it down, and the gentleman will recall in his long service in this House and in the other body that seldom, if ever, has he known of a complete conference report on an appropriation bill having been rejected. So I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio and those who believe with him that this House should assert itself, should make itself felt in the matter of appropriations and in the matter of economy, and give the House an opportunity to instruct its conferees. You can get that in this instance. The reason heretofore why we did not consider Senate amendments under the general rules of the House was because we did not have the time, but now the gentleman from Wyoming is dragging out the session because he has got nothing to do. We are adjourning over two or three days in order to kill time. We have plenty of time to send this bill to conference under the rules of the House. Why do you not do it? You older Members know why you do not do it. You do not want—the leader [Mr. MONDELL] does not want—to give us an opportunity to vote on the Borah amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Could any Member of this House deny to the House an opportunity to vote for the Borah amendment if he saw fit to do so if the Senate conferees did not recede on the Borah amendment?

Mr. GARNER. He will never get an opportunity to vote directly on the Borah amendment if any gentleman in the House availing himself of the rules of the House makes a motion to concur with an amendment, and if that motion is agreed to the Borah amendment will never be considered.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the motion to concur with an amendment is voted down, then would not the House have an opportunity to vote on it? Then why does the gentleman from Texas say——

Mr. GARNER. Because I know. I have been here long enough to know the gentleman from Kansas and know the art by which he prevents an opportunity to vote directly on a question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, every gentleman here knows what has happened. I am going to read from the mouthpiece of the administration, from the Washington Post. Does anybody deny this is the mouthpiece of the administration? No one doing so, I will read from this authentic document. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The House Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday reported a joint resolution concurring in the declared purposes of President Harding with respect to the international limitation of armament. It is not the present intention that that resolution shall be passed by the House as a legislative enactment. In this respect it is most unusual—

I think we can agree to that—

The Foreign Affairs Committee has simply taken this occasion to inform the conferees on the naval appropriation bill—

I call that to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]— who will be appointed this morning, that the House prefers this expression of opinion to the Borah disarmament amendment added to the naval bill in the Senate. The inference, of course, is that this procedure has the approval of the House leaders, and that the understanding has been reached by informal conferences among them. The House naval conferees are favorable to the Porter substitute and against the Borah amendment.

Now I give that as authority for my statement to the gentleman from Kansas that the leaders on his side are opposed to the Borah amendment and are in favor of the so-called Porter resolution. Is it true?

I give that as authority for my statement. Is it true that the gentleman from Kansas and the leaders on his side are opposed to the Borah amendment and favor the Porter resolution?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman four minutes more.

Mr. SWEET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. SWEET. Is the gentleman reading from an editorial?

Mr. GARNER. I was reading from the report of a reporter who is usually inspired in his argument.

Mr. SWEET. An item in the Post?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; and I challenge the gentleman over there to deny it, and I call upon the gentleman from Kansas to know if it is true.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman is not on the stand.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Kansas is a leader, and I have referred to the leaders on his side, and I include him as one of them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And I disclaim the soft impeachment.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is on his feet now. Will he tell me that it is not true?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No such agreement has been entered into with respect to this matter or any other matter, to my knowledge.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say, as a probable member of the conference committee, that no person has mentioned to me any particular phraseology as a substitute.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does he favor the procedure—the so-called Porter amendment to the Borah amendment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What does the gentleman mean by the "procedure"?

Mr. GARNER. Substituting the Porter resolution for the Borah amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I suppose the gentleman from Texas and those on that side are very eager——

Mr. GARNER. I am asking you——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am getting at that. It is easy to have this matter disposed of on the naval bill and not by separate resolution. Now, he seems to have changed front.

Mr. GARNER. I asked the gentleman a direct question, whether he wants the Borah amendment or the Porter resolution?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not read the Porter resolution.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has not answered the question.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. How could I know, if I have not read it? I am not in the habit of preferring one thing or another until I read it.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does not know anything about the Porter resolution?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I do not.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, this only illustrates——

UMI

Mr. MONDELL. The minority caucused yesterday afternoon on the Borah amendment. Did the minority agree to support the Borah amendment as a political proposition? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to the gentleman from Wyoming that the Democratic membership of the House did not caucus yesterday, as he stated.

Mr. MONDELL. Who were the gentlemen who were here?

Mr. GARNER. I do not know that I could enumerate them. Nearly all of the Members were here, but it was not a caucus. And may I say to the gentleman from Wyoming that the Borah amendment was not discussed in the conference yesterday at all. So the gentleman is misinformed in the premises.

Mr. MONDELL. And this question that the gentleman is now discussing was not discussed?

Mr. GARNER. It was not discussed. Does the gentleman from Wyoming favor the so-called Porter resolution in preference to the Borah amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. GARNER. That settles it. These gentlemen then understand what they will get when the committee of conference comes back.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be considerable confusion about the parliamentary situation that faces us as to what the conferees will do. I want to talk to the Republican Members a minute. In my opinion the Porter resolution will not be considered at all in the conference, for the reason that anything that is not in dispute, anything that has not been up in one or the other of the Houses will not be a matter that is in order.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield a moment just there?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. PADGETT. If it comes back to the House from the conference, as under the rule it is required to be brought back to the House, a motion to recede from the House disagreement and concur with an amendment substituting the Porter resolution is in order and will be preferential.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Let the "gentleman from Ohio" make his statement first, and then he will yield.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] expressed the situation. I stated that I did not believe it would be considered in the conference, because I do not think it is in order. But when the conferees come back, they being unable to agree to the Borah resolution, because that would be out of order if presented here, they can not agree to a thing that was put on in the Senate that would have been out of order if offered here. And it has to come back here for a vote. That is the new rule. It will come back here.

Now, I want to say to the membership on this side, which seems to be somewhat confused, that when it comes back here the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] will probably have the floor, because he will have charge of the report, and it is true that a motion to concur in the Senate amendment would be in order. It would also be true that you could concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, provided the amendment would be germane. Now, the question that the Democratic side of the House is raising, that you are not going to have a chance to vote directly on the Borah amendment, is without force, because if that motion were made by them and the motion to concur with an amendment is made, the motion to concur with an amendment will be voted on first. Those who do want to vote directly on the Borah amendment would simply vote down the motion to concur with an amendment, and that would give the House an opportunity to vote directly on the Borah amendment, so that this contention of my friend from Texas that you are not going to have any chance to vote on the Borah amendment flatly is not in good form.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I will yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Ohio, with his very great influence on the Republican side, help us to vote down that amendment and give us a chance to vote on the Borah amendment?

Mr. FESS. I will not.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is just now telling his side of the House not to be alarmed; that they will have an opportunity to vote on the Borah amendment, and yet he is not willing to vote down the amendment to that amendment.

Mr. FESS. Certainly not. The gentleman has just requested that this side of the House will vote for a unanimous agreement to prevent any amendment from being offered. What kind of legislation is that? The truth of the matter is that this whole question is in the control of the House. If the House does not want it, they can very easily get a modification of it. That is what I believe will be done. That is what I believe ought to be done. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] use some of his time?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, from which yesterday morning was reported the Porter disarmament resolution, which is proposed by the Republican side of this House as a substitute for the Borah disarmament resolution to the naval appropriation bill. I was not exactly present at its birth, because it was born at a secret conclave of the Republican members of the committee, but after it was christened and dressed up in its fine raiment the Democratic members were permitted to look at its beaming face. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, just a moment about the situation in which we find ourselves. Gentlemen will remember that when the naval appropriation bill was originally before the House I offered an amendment providing for the calling of a conference on disarmament, and gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle then had an opportunity to vote for disarmament, but voted against it when the question came up for a vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A point of order was made.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. No. A point of order was made, and it was overruled, as the gentleman from Kansas will recall. The point of order was overruled, and it came to a vote, and you gentlemen over there who are now proposing the Porter resolution voted against that resolution which had teeth in it.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not going to vote for any kind of disarmament, because he believes in our having the greatest Navy in the world. He is not going to vote for any disarmament.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I initiated a movement last January in favor of disarmament, and the RECORD will show it. It is broader than anything that has yet been offered.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman will have a chance to prove that.

He will have an opportunity to-day. I want to say a word to the Republican Members. This is not a partisan question. I observe, however, that gentlemen who carry around in their vest pockets large, lazy majorities, usually start out by tyrannizing over the minority, but they wind up generally by tyrannizing over their own majority. Why are you being denied a vote on the Borah resolution or some other kind of a resolution that really means disarmament? The minority over here can not adopt it. Less than one-third of the membership of this House can not vote down two-thirds. You gentlemen on the Republican side of the House are the ones that are being denied the right to really express your sentiments. Oh, they will not come out boldly and admit that their plan is to not let you vote on it, but they use this parliamentary device; they are going to chloroform and give knock-out drops to disarmament by reason of the Porter substitute. Let me read it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe under the rules of the House that the House conferees would have the right to bring in the Borah amendment amended by the Porter resolution? Will the gentleman answer the question? He has just stated that that could be done.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I believe they could do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They can not do it under the rules of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will answer the gentleman. We have the word of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who is high in your councils, and the word of your leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], that whenever the conferees come back with a proposal of that kind one of you will rise in his place and say, "I move to concur with an amendment," that will kill the Borah amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the gentleman from Texas, if he has his wits about him, will make a point of order against the amendment as amended.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, no; not with success.

Mr. GARNER. And the gentleman from Kansas will bring in a special rule to make it in order, if necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I thank my colleague from Texas for interjecting that, because now the time has come when almost every morning we have a new rule, a special rule, a fresh one, reported by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. What do we find? We found the other day, when we wanted to get a vote on the Borah amendment, or something with some substance to it, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] withdrew his unanimous-consent request to send the naval bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. May I have one minute more?

Mr. POU. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Now, gentlemen of the House, do not adopt this colorless, vapid, denatured, one-half of 1 per cent Porter disarmament resolution. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] It does not mean anything, except that it means the death of disarmament in any form in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What does it mean? It says:

The Congress hereby expresses its full concurrence in the declaration of the President "that we are ready to cooperate with other nations to approximate disarmament," and further fully concurs in his declared purpose and intention to call an international conference—

And so forth.

That is to say, "We concur in an intention to call a conference that has never been announced by the President." I have here his inaugural address, and I have his message to Congress, and I challenge gentlemen to point out in either one of these official pronouncements where the President has ever declared his intention to call such a conference. We concur in something that does not exist. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] has 15 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas has 10 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Kansas has used 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is no more adroit politician in the land than the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. BRITTEN. Which gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. GARNER. There are other adroit politicians from Texas also. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has taken the laboring oar here in an attempt to persuade Republicans that in some way or other in following the usual procedure of the House we are depriving some one of his rights. But before I go to that matter let me say that the gentleman from Texas is not justified in saying that the gentleman from Wyoming or anyone else has been killing time. We were a few days late in getting started, owing to the fact that the minority did not have their committee places filled. [Laughter.] Since that time by unanimous consent we have several times adjourned over Saturday. And may I suggest to the gentleman from Texas and to the other gentlemen on that side that if that is held to be killing time I shall not hereafter prefer any request for unanimous consent to adjourn over Saturday? Notwithstanding these adjournments, for which the gentlemen on that side have pleaded, we have worked more continuously and diligently and have passed more good legislation through the House in this session of Congress than in any like period during the 25 years I have been in Congress, and no one can deny that fact. We are progressing in a businesslike way and are disposing of many very important and pressing questions.

Now, what is the proposition before us? It is to send this bill to conference in the way in which nine-tenths—and I do not know but I might properly say ninety-nine one-hundredths—of the bills that come before the House go to conference. It is the most extraordinary and unusual thing for a bill coming back to the House with Senate amendments to go to a committee.

I remember only two or three cases in the eight years when our friends on the other side had charge of the affairs of Congress when a House bill coming back to the House with Senate amendments was sent to a committee. The usual practice, the wise practice, the sensible practice is to send the bill to conference without instructions, leaving the conferees free to discuss all the matters in controversy. And there is no doubt that that is the better practice in view of the new rule of the House under which the conferees can not bind the House to agree to a Senate amendment which under the rules could not have been placed on the bill in the House. The gentleman from Texas imagines that he can arouse fear on the part of some on this side by suggesting that the vote will come in a little different form than he would like to have it. Now, gentlemen, the most important proposition on this bill is not the Borah amendment. The most important question is whether or not we shall add nearly $100,000,000 to the naval appropriation bill, and so far I have heard no suggestion from the minority side that that increase of $100,000,000 should not be accepted, every dollar of it. All that we have heard from that side is a partisan attempt to make political capital out of the disarmament provision on the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas never raised his voice in protest against these increases——

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Give us an opportunity to vote on it and we will register. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. We will give you an opportunity to vote on them. Curiously enough you seem to have forgotten all about these increases. They constitute the real issue in connection with this naval bill. The question is, Shall the House adhere to its view that the appropriations made for the Navy in the House bill are sufficient? I hope and believe the House will adhere to the sums the House voted.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). The time of gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. POU. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in order to relieve the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] from any anxiety as to his last statement, I think I can say to him that he will find the Democratic side of this House voting for the naval bill as it went through the House. With equal confidence I am satisfied that we will find the gentleman from Wyoming voting for increased appropriations on the naval bill before it passes the House. I say that because when we came to the Army bill he then voted for a larger Army than he had voted for in the House last February. When we come back to the House, with the House conferees, as I hope, standing up for 100,000 men, I fear that the gentleman from Wyoming may be standing for 120,000 or 110,000 men. But I did not intend to refer to that. Instead of that, gentlemen of the House, I desire to pay tribute to the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. In the last Congress when the naval bill was up an effort was made to add an amendment providing for the suspension of naval construction until an invitation was extended by the President on the subject of disarmament. I opposed that along with the majority on this side of the House, because we did not desire to interfere with the action of the President who was to be inaugurated on March 4.

The bill went over to the Senate, and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] began a fight to place upon the naval bill an amendment which was in order, which did not tie up the funds of the Navy, but provided for an invitation to a disarmament conference. Rather than agree to that, through the influence of the administration, the naval bill was filibustered to death in the closing hours of that Congress. Therefore it had to be reintroduced in this Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. It was not the administration——

Mr. MONDELL. What administration?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I mean the administration of the Senate, the senatorial leaders in charge of the bill on the floor of the Senate who represented the incoming administration and who now represent the administration.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a different matter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not yield to the gentleman. When the bill was introduced again, it was endeavored to amend the bill on the floor of the House. All efforts were vain, because points of order were made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. The bill went to the Senate, and there we found the friends of the administration on the floor of the Senate again opposing the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Idaho. Now, I recall that the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said on April 28 in the House:

I trust that during this session of Congress it may be apparent to us and to those directly charged with responsibility in the matter of foreign affairs that the time is ripe for the Congress to take action suggesting a conference on disarmament. At such a time I think the Congress should act, and I have no doubt that Congress in due and proper time will act. This is hardly the time to take further action in that direction in view of the authority the President now has.

He spoke of it as in the distant future. The time was not ripe. But when this bill went to the Senate, the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] again began the fight for his disarmament amendment.

He was opposed by the Naval Committee of the Senate, and yet after two weeks his voice had reached all sections of the country, had even penetrated the White House, the time became ripe in two weeks, and the newspapers carried the information that there was no longer any objection by the administration to the amendment of the distinguished Senator, and it was unanimously adopted by the Senate. But there has been another change, and to-day I fear we are witnessing the funeral exercises of the Borah amendment. I read an editorial in the Post of Monday, and I fear the editor of the Post is much closer than the distinguished leader on the floor of the House to the administration, and I have to accept its statement. [Laughter.]

The statement is: "There really is no occasion for any pronouncement by Congress at this time on the subject of disarmament." That is the statement of the editor of the Washington Post. I fear it is the death knell of the Borah amendment in this Congress. I did not believe it until this morning, but when my good friend from Michigan said that when the conferees come back to the House he will move to concur, with an amendment——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I did not say that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understood the gentleman to say that when the conferees came back he would move to concur with an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I said that I might do so.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will say that he will not move to concur with an amendment, I will withdraw everything I have said this morning.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not consulted with the other conferees.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, let us consult now. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There are three others to consult besides myself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Let us, you and I, consult right now. [Laughter.] I know that my friend would love to do it. But the administration is now against this Borah amendment. Whatever becomes of it, the reputation of the distinguished Senator from Idaho will not be injured. The fact will remain that he pushed them to the brink of disarmament even if he could not throw them into it. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, there seems to be a unanimous opinion on the question of disarmament. It is all a dispute about how we shall proceed. It only takes a minute's consideration to convince oneself that disarmament comes about or can come about from any one of three ways. The first way that disarmament can be brought about is for this House—you do not have to consider the other side of the Capitol—if this House is sincere in disarmament, as we are led to believe this morning, we can refuse appropriations of any amount whatever for any naval program or any Army program, and we are not entirely discharging our obligations when we authorize or request the President of the United States to call a conference. You and I have certain moral responsibilities to answer to our people back home for having voted an appropriation in the first place. [Applause.] You can not get out of it.

Now, I want to take the second way of getting disarmament, and that is authorizing or requesting the President of the United States to call a conference. But before I discuss that I want to say that there is a third way, and that, in my judgment, is decidedly more to be preferred than through a conference, and that is, for the President of the United States to enter upon negotiations with the great powers of the world looking to an agreement for immediate disarmament, which at the very latest will be six months before a conference could be called. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] says that if we were assured that we would get action he would have no more to say, and the gentleman from South Carolina says that he speaks on the authority of one of the newspapers. I want to say to you men on this side of the Chamber and you men on that side of the Chamber that we can not discharge our solemn obligations to the American people by quoting newspaper articles on the question of disarmament.

Suppose you adopt the Borah resolution or any other resolution that authorizes or requests the President of the United States to call a conference. I ask you what have you done? Instead of doing the greatest possible thing toward disarmament, you have tied the hands of the Executive of the United States in entering upon negotiation. In other words, you have forced him to go one of the three ways, regardless of what important developments in the world's affairs may have been secured in the negotiation. I want to say to you men on the Republican side and to you men who are here for the first year that this is a question upon which you must do your own thinking. There are three ways of disarmament, as I said before. There is no way, absolutely no way, that you can be deprived of exercising your choice on voting for or against disarmament, unless the conferees on the part of the Senate withdraw and recede from the amendment. It seems to me that if you gentlemen on the Democratic side are honest, if you are sincere, if you are not playing politics of the peanut variety, you want to disarm in the most effective way and to start a reduction in dollars the quickest way. You can not call a conference and have it convene the world powers short of six months or a year, or two or three years. The facts are that history shows that the average time of calling a conference of the world powers runs about two years. I simply say that we do not want to tie our hands in such a way that no amendment can be offered to furnish the very best solution possible to get action at the earliest date. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina has 5 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas 10 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There will be but one more speech on this side.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York Mr. [COCKRAN].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Before the gentleman from New York begins, let me say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I said there would be but one more speech on this side. I have since had a request for two minutes aside from the remarks I shall make myself. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. POU. Not if the gentleman will yield me two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not the time.

Mr. POU. The time can be extended two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have no objection to extending the time two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is necessary to obtain the consent of the House before that can be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an additional two minutes be added to the time for debate, and that those two minutes be given to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that two minutes be added to the time for debate, and that those two minutes be granted to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, my main object in rising is to answer a question which was propounded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] by the leader of the House, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. He asked whether there had not been a conference or a caucus of Democrats here on the floor of the House last evening with reference to the Borah amendment. The gentleman is mistaken in his assumption. The Borah amendment was not debated nor discussed. It was not even mentioned. No reference whatever was made to it from the beginning to the end of our proceedings. We did meet to consider our attitude upon the resolution recently reported to the House with reference to peace. That gathering, however, was not a caucus but a conference called for the purpose of ascertaining whether we should take united action on the proposal reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and after full discussion it was decided that a question so momentous, so vital to the well-being of the country, as one affecting peace or war was a matter not for partisan political discussion but for patriotic individual action. [Applause.]

We separated after a very extensive comparison of views without the slightest attempt to establish control over individual action. Everyone was left absolutely free to come here and express his conscientious conviction by the vote that he will cast.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I was misled, evidently, as other gentlemen have been misled by what we saw in the newspaper.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am sure that the gentleman from this experience will learn caution, if he does not learn anything else, and that in the future when he propounds a question with reference to Democratic action he will take pains to equip himself with more reliable information than a newspaper article. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I think there is no one in the House more deeply concerned in attempts to effect universal disarmament than I. I can claim, I think, to be the first in this country who took definite action to secure it by offering a resolution at a meeting early in May last year, of the New York delegates to the Democratic convention, pledging them to stand for a declaration in the national platform favoring disarmament—not partial disarmament or disarmament at some future time—but disarmament now, universal and immediate. The one opportunity that can possibly come before this House so far as I can see now to express ourselves on disarmament is offered by the Borah amendment. It is not the amendment that I should myself submit. It is not in my judgment the best that could be framed, but it is the only one we have before us—the only one apparently that we can have before us. I am quite sure that a vast number of members on the Republican side of the House, as I know all on this side, would like to see that amendment adopted, failing a more comprehensive declaration by Congress in favor of disarmament. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] promised us such a comprehensive declaration, and the redemption of his promise is this—this—this—

Mr. GARNER. Porter resolution.

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; I was seeking an adjective that could adequately describe it, but I could not find one—this Porter resolution. [Laughter.] The Porter resolution is nothing but an attempt to evade the question of disarmament. It is a declaration that this House approves what the President said on the subject. It is not a momentous fact whether the House approves it or not. Whether this House likes or dislikes the course of the President has no international significance whatever. Then the resolution appropriates $100,000 to meet the expenses of a conference, if the President chooses to call it. But suppose he assembles this conference; he has no power to agree on disarmament, because he has no power of himself to bring about disarmament. The utmost he could do is merely to come back here and make a recommendation to Congress, which might or might not be adopted. The world which recently has had an experience of dealing with proposals made by a President of the United States which were subsequently planned by the Senate is not likely to treat seriously this proposal for a conference not to effect disarmament but merely to make mere proposals. When a motion was offered in the Committee on Foreign Affairs to amend the Porter resolution by adding to it a provision giving the President power to disband and reduce our armed forces by land and sea until there would remain no more than sufficient to maintain domestic peace—that is, no more than sufficient to constitute an effective police force—provided other nations did the same, it was voted down. And it was voted down because the intention underlying this Porter resolution is not to effect disarmament, but to talk about it for the amusement of Republican politicians and satisfaction perhaps of the conscientious, among Republican voters, who constitute, I am glad to say, a vast majority of them. [Applause on Democratic side.]

If there were a determination or disposition to have this House make a clear, emphatic declaration upon the whole subject in any form that could be effective, I would gladly vote for it in preference to the Borah amendment. I would gladly welcome a frank, full, free discussion of the whole question of disarmament on a separate proposal, dealing with it exclusively and comprehensively rather than be forced to discuss it on an appropriation bill for one branch of the Military Establishment. But when every Republican here takes the attitude, with cynical candor, that the one chance to declare in favor of disarmament offered by the Borah amendment shall be denied us, when it is clear that we shall be allowed no opportunity whatever to make a declaration upon the subject that will be effective if this procedure be adopted, then, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is my duty, as one who wants to see disarmament actually effected rather than talked about, to cast a vote against this rule, or any rule that will prevent this House from expressing in some way or other its judgment, its honest conviction that disarmament has become absolutely necessary to the safety of civilization, and, indeed, to the preservation of the human race. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, calling attention again to newspaper articles, I would point out that the Porter resolution, according to the newspapers, was voted on in the Committee on Foreign Affairs and reported out by a vote of 14 to 1. Doubtless the 1 vote was that of the gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. COCKRAN].

Briefly, in the two minutes allotted to me, I want to point out to the Republican membership of this House that the Porter resolution is not an attempt to deceive the Republicans and to undermine the purpose of the Borah amendment. It is an improvement upon the Borah amendment, and is meant as such. [Applause on the Republican side.] I ask every Member of this House, in particular the Republicans, to read the Porter resolution and find out for himself by its contents what the declared intent of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was in reporting out that resolution. We all want approximate disarmament, we all want to limit armaments, and you will find that the Porter resolution goes much further in bringing about what we desire to accomplish than any other amendment or resolution that has come before this House or any other body, regardless of the statement of my distinguished colleague from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that it would be possible for me as one Member of the House to support this rule, but I said in the beginning that I would not vote for the rule unless I had assurance from those in control that the House would have an opportunity to vote on the Borah amendment, or substantially that amendment. That assurance has not been given, and I for one shall vote against the rule. To give such assurance would not have been at all improper, and I believe it would have been received with universal approval throughout the country.

Before I take my seat, there is a correction which I think should be made. I am informed that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who has just taken his seat, is entirely mistaken as to the attitude of the minority on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am informed that the members of the minority did not support the Porter resolution at any stage of the proceedings. I may be mistaken in that, but I think I am not.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that our friends have worked themselves into a frenzy over a matter that should not disturb them. They have worked themselves up to the belief that if this resolution sending the Navy bill to conference is agreed to they will be denied the right to vote upon a provision that the Senate added to the bill, which is not in order under the rules of the House.

Now, let me read just what the rights of the House are:

Rules XX and XXI as amended June 21, 1920.

Now, listen:

No amendment of the Senate to a general appropriation bill which would be in violation of the provisions of clause 2 of Rule XXI—

That is the clause which prevents amendments which are not germane to an appropriation bill—

if said amendment had originated in the House, nor any amendment of the Senate providing an appropriation on any bill other than a general appropriation bill, shall be agreed to by the managers upon the part of the House unless specific authority to agree to such amendment shall be first given by the House by a separate vote on every such amendment.

Now, the gentleman from Texas and other gentlemen who have fretted themselves into a fury about this matter could have saved themselves all their agitation by simply reading one of the last rules adopted by this House.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the present rules of the House if a motion is made to concur——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes. But if a motion is made to concur with an amendment that motion can be separated and the amendment voted down and the House would have control over the whole matter.

Mr. PADGETT. But it puts a man who voted against it in the position of voting against the only motion that is before the House, and he has no opportunity to vote on the Borah resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the amendment is voted down, then the vote would be on agreeing to the Borah amendment. I do not yield further. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I can not yield further.

Mr. PADGETT. Will not the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

I know, as gentlemen know who have studied the rules of the House, that there will be an opportunity for this House to vote upon an amendment put on an appropriation bill by the Senate before the House agrees to it. I am amazed at gentlemen here who have for years insisted that the House was losing its standing before the country because it yielded its prerogatives to another body or to Executive authority, aside from any question as to which is preferable, the Borah amendment or the Porter resolution, in respect to the attitude that the President could take upon the question of disarmament, should take the position taken by any Member of another body is infallible, and that any position taken by a committee of this House, clothed with authority and under the necessity of performing its duties, must be set aside and the opinion of a Member of the other body taken in preference.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know which of these propositions the President should act under, but I do know—I will yield in a moment—I do know that the language of the Borah amendment has been very much misunderstood, or gentlemen have not read it at all. I have been led to believe from what gentlemen have said about it and from letters and telegrams I have received about it that if the Borah amendment were agreed to at once every nation in the world would begin to throw its arms into heaps and the question of disarmament would begin at once. Now, listen to the Borah amendment:

That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference, which shall be charged with the duty of promptly entering into an understanding or agreement by which the naval expenditures and building programs of each of said Governments, to wit, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, shall be substantially reduced annually during the next five years to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, which understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval.

So it comes back to this House for approval as to what shall be done. Under the resolution proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs the same question comes to the House, not representing three nations of the world but of the entire world. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is a little confusion in my mind as to whether one who might vote against an amendment of the so-called Porter resolution, if the House voted that up, would then have an opportunity to vote for some amendment looking toward disarmament. That is, in other words, if it were voted up and he voted against it, and being on record against disarmament, would he then have an opportunity to vote on an amendment to the amendment? I am of the opinion that, an amendment to Senate amendment having been agreed to, the vote would then come on agreeing to the Senate amendment as amended.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. As amended?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. As amended. The amendment of the Senate is not in order at all without a vote of the House. Now, any amendment to that amendment can be voted up or down, and the question then before the House is on the amendment as amended, and ultimately the exact wording of the Borah amendment may be the matter voted upon by the membership of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). The time of the gentleman has expired, with the exception of a quarter of a minute.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. May we have the resolution again reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be again reported on the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

The resolution was again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 110, not voting 88, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. FRENCH, Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. OLIVER.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution 4.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint commission is hereby created, to be known as the joint commission of agricultural inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress within 90 days after the passage of this resolution upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the present condition of agriculture.
2. The cause of the difference between the prices of agricultural products paid to the producer and the ultimate cost to the consumer.
3. The comparative condition of industries other than agriculture.
4. The relation of prices of commodities other than agricultural products to such products.
5. The banking and financial resources and credits of the country, especially as affecting agricultural credits.
6. The marketing and transportation facilities of the country.

The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission or any subcommittee of its members is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditure shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives in equal proportions, upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the rule; that is the resolution that is before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no rule proposed from the Rules Committee before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no rule for the consideration of the Senate resolution just read is presented from the Rules Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. The Committee on Rules has not presented anything here that would make this Senate concurrent resolution in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This resolution was reported from the Committee on Rules—reported out—and submitted by me on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas will point out to the Chair some authority for presenting the resolution at this time and making it privileged.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not say that the rule was privileged.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kansas has not presented any rule or resolution whatever from the Committee on Rules, but simply has had read from the Clerk's desk the Senate concurrent resolution, and that, without a rule from the Committee on Rules, it would not be in order at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The only question pending before the House is whether or not this resolution is privileged. Before anybody makes the point of order that the resolution is not privileged, I will concede the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not now. I want to see if anybody makes the point of order that the resolution is not privileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas presents a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any great need for this legislation at this hour?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think so.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Does somebody else besides the distinguished gentleman from Kansas think so?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes. The Senate of the United States thinks so. They voted so unanimously a few days ago. Five hundred gentlemen who make their living by working on a farm assembled here in Washington the other day and agreed upon this resolution. They thought it was necessary.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that although there is no farmer in my district I am a friend of the farmer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the Senate concurrent resolution, but I raise the question of orderly procedure, because the Rules Committee has not yet presented any rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman is raising the only question that he can raise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas presents a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas if the popgun tariff bill that was passed some weeks ago did not fix the farmers all right? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Kansas presents a report recommending that the Senate concurrent resolution be adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. That report has not been read by the Clerk yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Clerk read that the first thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. That is the point I make. He has not read any such report from the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Clerk whether he read the report or not.

Mr. BLANTON. He read only the Senate concurrent resolution. He did not read any report or rule from the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that he did not read the report. He will now read the report submitting this resolution presented by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred Senate concurrent resolution 4, submits a privileged report on said resolution, with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point of order now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of order that no rule has been presented for the consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution. No objection has been interposed to its consideration. The Chair assumes that the House acquiesces to have it considered at this time and in this manner. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT rose.

UMI

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. PADGETT. I am in favor of the resolution, and it is proper to report it. But is not the gentleman from Kansas in error in stating in his report that he is submitting a privileged report? It is not a privileged report.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not a privileged report. I did not know that the word "privileged" was in the resolution, because it is not a privileged resolution in its form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall use only a few moments. Then I shall yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. At the conclusion of that time I shall move the previous question. I am more anxious that this resolution shall be adopted and the work be proceeded with as outlined in this resolution than I am for a discussion of the very important matters involved.

There is no doubt that there is a great economic question that has not been settled by the American people. The enormous waste between the producer and the consumer, or the enormous expense that is attached to an article from the time it leaves the producer before it reaches the consumer, raises an economic question in this country that challenges the best judgment and the best attention of the Congress and of the people. The producer gets a very small per cent of what the ultimate consumer pays for the products of industry in the United States. Where is the waste? Who applies the additional cost, some of which should go to the producer, much of which should be saved to the consumer.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the gentleman think that a great deal of the trouble is in the cost of transportation—the freight rates?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is an element of it, but that is not a bagatelle, that is a very small part of the cost attached to the price paid by the ultimate consumer in addition to what the producer gets.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. I will say to the gentleman that it was brought out at a conference the other day in New York that the American producer gets only 50 per cent, whereas in Holland the producer gets as much as 95 per cent of the price of his product.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I doubt if the American producer gets 50 per cent. I am sure that in many instances he does not get 50 per cent. In many instances he does not get 25 per cent. In some instances I doubt if he gets 10 per cent of the cost to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. PADGETT. Hogs are selling at less than 8 cents a pound to the farmer, and yet they are charging 50 cents a pound for bacon right here in Washington.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And much more than that down here in this restaurant, where for a poorly cooked strip of bacon you pay about 30 cents.

Mr. PADGETT. Beef cattle are selling at about 8 cents a pound, and they charge us here in Washington 50 cents for round steak and 65 cents for sirloin. I want to call attention to another instance——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield further. All these things are true, and more.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As to the scope of the work of this commission, would it be within their province to investigate, for instance, the necessity for regulatory legislation, such as board of trade bills and packer bills?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; because they may well go into every element that adds to the cost to the ultimate consumer that the producer does not get. All these things should be inquired into by this commission. The whole purpose should be to reduce the expenses that attach to an article from the time it leaves the producer until it reaches the consumer. A larger percentage of what the ultimate consumer pays for the product should go to the man who produces it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. I think it is only fair to say that the scope of the concurrent resolution was broadened upon the suggestion of the minority. We not only were in favor of the resolution, but we were in favor of making it broader, and it was made so by including that clause which directs the joint commission to investigate the difference in cost at the farm and in the hands of the consumer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House by discussing this resolution. Every thinking man must have come to the conclusion that there is a great task ahead of the proposed joint commission, a task stupendous in its proportions. If they can not report a remedy they can at least establish the incontrovertible facts. Representatives of almost all the farming organizations in America appeared before the Committee on Rules and stated that this was the one thing above all others that they urged just at this time. It is a matter of common knowledge that throughout the country agricultural conditions have been growing steadily worse, and this resolution will at least give our Republican friends an opportunity to explain why that prosperity which they promised in the last campaign on every stump throughout the length and breadth of America did not arrive on schedule time.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are only two words in this resolution to which I object. Those are the words "or elsewhere." Authorizing this commission to hold hearings either in Washington, "or elsewhere," which takes in the whole world. In other words, after Congress adjourns this commission of 10 men may sit anywhere in the world they want to, and at Government expense. They can take a trip to France, as has been done in the past in several instances. They can go anywhere they want to, in Europe or on the other side of the United States in California, if they want to to have hearings. They can thus spend the hot summer time——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No, I can not yield, as I have only two minutes. I think we ought to have some kind of a reasonable limitation on the expenses of this commission. We are all in favor of the purposes of this resolution, but what is the necessity of giving this commission the right in the recess of Congress, after we adjourn, to sit anywhere in the United States or in Europe they want to, and charge the expenses up to the House and Senate, which will ultimately come out of the Treasury and out of the pockets of the people? I hope the gentleman will strike out the words "or elsewhere," and will place some reasonable limitation upon the expenditures. If he will not move the previous question and permit amendments to be offered, I will offer such amendments.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the passage of this resolution was requested by the congress of farm organizations held here in the city of Washington in April last. Representatives of 16 farm organizations met here in conference. They knew that the farmers were receiving only about 10 or 15 per cent of the price that the American people are charged for their commodities. They knew that the prices of farm products had been deflated but that all supplies and materials that the farmer buys were still carrying the war price. They knew that credits had been restricted to agriculture, that cattlemen were being sold out, and the stock herds sacrificed. They knew that cattle, sheep, and hogs, corn and wheat, oats, cotton, butter, eggs, and all farm produce which they were being forced to sell at prices far below the cost of production were still being sold to the consumer at prices they could not afford to pay, which robbed the producers of the sympathy which would otherwise result in protecting them from ruin.

They want a committee of Congress to investigate these conditions. It has been charged that they were the result of restricted credits; it has been charged that they were the result of high railroad rates; and it was charged that they were the result of improper marketing. They want to go before some committee of Congress and lay all the cards on the table and have Congress, after complete investigation, make report to this House and the country of the true conditions of agriculture and what Congress could do by way of remedial legislation. They prepared a resolution and asked Senator LENROOT to introduce it in the Senate and myself to introduce it in this House. It has been perfected some in the committees and has their unanimous indorsement. It has passed the Senate and has the indorsement of all the farm organizations. They are asking the American Congress to take this action in order that they may be able to present the true condition in which agriculture is situated and also determine what remedial legislation can be proposed for its relief. The resolution should pass without objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

VETERANS' BUREAU.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau, and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of the paragraph that was read when the bill was under consideration last week, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee about the lines 6 to 10 on page 2. I would not presume to suggest to this committee how they should write this bill in reference to the powers to be given to the director of the bureau, but I do respectfully call attention to the fact that you are clothing him with a great deal of power in the way of organization and in establishing such staff officers, experts, and assistants as he may prescribe. I congratulate the committee on this bill, and it is high time that we should enact legislation of this character, but it occurs to me that you clothe the director with too much authority in building up these organizations in this veterans' bureau. I appreciate the fact that it would be difficult for the committee to designate specifically just how many bureaus are necessary or how many employees should be in each bureau. It is altogether probable that the right man and a big man will be selected to take charge of this work. I take it that it was the idea of the committee to find such a man and clothe him with all this responsibility and authority and let him be responsible for his acts and the conduct of the various bureaus. In other words, this is to some extent an experiment.

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Was the committee unable to figure out or designate in this bill just what powers were necessary and just what staff officers and bureaus, and so forth, were necessary, or was that deemed impossible?

Mr. SWEET. That is true. I will say that the director will be clothed with unusual powers. That was the thought of the committee in authorizing the director to select the officers, to divide it up into sections and bureaus, and it was a matter left to his discretion. It must be remembered that the complaints that came to the committee were largely caused by a division of authority, largely due to passing the responsibility from one bureau to the other, and in the organization of the veterans' bureau it was thought that that power should be vested in the director. Now, mind you, in this case we are combining the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the Public Health Service in so far as it deals with disabled ex-service men. This is the organization of a great bureau, and it was thought best by the committee not to go into the question as to the division of it, but in the first instance, at least, to vest in the director of the bureau power and authority to make it an efficient organization.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Right there, if the gentleman will allow me, there is no restriction or limitation on the salaries that he may designate that are to be paid to his staff of officers.

Mr. SWEET. Only so far as they have been prescribed in certain appropriation bills. Reference is hereafter made to that proposition in another section which states that he will be bound by the restrictions imposed in appropriation bills which are passed by Congress.

Mr. McDUFFIE. In other words, he will not have the power to create unnecessary staff officers or such experts as he may deem proper with salaries that are higher than those already being paid in the bureau.

Mr. SWEET. That is true, and that he will follow along the line already established in that direction. In addition to that, if the gentleman will turn to section 14, in order that Congress may understand the situation, we provide:

> The director shall file with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate on the first day of the next regular session after this act takes effect an itemized account of all expenditures made under this act, including names, classifications, and salaries of all staff officers, experts, assistants, and employees. Thereafter, on the first Monday in December of each year, the director shall make a report to Congress of his doings under this act for the preceding fiscal year.

In other words, your committee felt that in order to meet this situation and have efficient service rendered by the new bureau, at least in the first instance, the director should have the whole authority of organization.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I will say I think that it is a dangerous proposition to clothe any one man with that much authority, it matters not how good a man he may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that there is already reorganization going on at the War Risk Bureau. I was talking this morning with Col. Raynor, who has charge of the personnel section, and if we would just let him alone and not hamper him he will get rid of a whole lot of surplus employees who ought to be sent home. He is doing his best right now, and if we will stop making him do something that he does not want to do, he will continue to send them home. I have in my hand a statement which was furnished me by President Martin A. Morrison, of the Civil Service Commission, showing that on June 30, 1916, we had the following employees: 39,259 in the District of Columbia, and 400,539 employees elsewhere in the United States, making a total of 439,798 civil-service employees then in the United States. He also certifies that on the date of the armistice, November 11, 1918, we had the following civil-service employees: 117,760 in the District of Columbia, and 800,000 elsewhere in the United States, making a total of 917,760 civil-service employees then in the United States. He also certifies that on December 31, 1920, we had the following civil-service employees: 86,650 in the District of Columbia, and 553,525 elsewhere in the United States, making a total of 640,175 civil-service employees then in the United States.

He also certifies that on May 1, 1921, we had 84,231 civil-service employees in the District of Columbia, and that by July 1, 1921, it is contemplated that this number will be reduced about 4,500.

In other words, from December 31, 1920, when we had 86,760 civil-service employees in the District of Columbia, until May 1, 1921, when we had 84,231 civil-service employees in the District of Columbia, we succeeded in reducing the surplus employees here in Washington only 2,529 in number; and even if the further reduction contemplated by President Morrison of 4,500 by July 1, 1921, is accomplished, we will have reduced the surplus employees here in Washington only 7,029 from December 31, 1920, to July 1, 1921.

Even with this contemplated reduction accomplished on July 1, 1921, we will then still have 40,472 more civil-service employees here in Washington than we had before the war. And for two years I have been clamoring to get these surplus employees sent home and taken from the pay roll. It is true that since the armistice to July 1, 1921, we will have reduced the number of civil-service employees here in Washington from 117,760 to 79,731, yet we must remember that we had only 39,259 before the war, and the people are looking to us to get rid of this surplus.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. I may say to the gentleman that, as far as the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is concerned, the number at the time the hearings were held on H. R. No. 3, had been reduced from 15,000, or nearly that, down to about 5,700.

Mr. BLANTON. But the great trouble is this, that the very minute they are put out of that place, the gentleman or some colleague of his takes them right down to some other department and says, "Here, put them back on the pay roll somewhere else," and they are put back, and while they get out of one department they go right back into another, and they are still on the Government pay roll.

Mr. SWEET. But I will say to the gentleman that we are discussing to-day the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and service to be rendered the soldiers.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but I have just used this as a preliminary statement to what I am about to say, that if we will just back up Col. Raynor down there when he puts them out, and let them stay out, and if we will just back up every other bureau executive who puts them out and not go and force him or some other bureau to take them back, we can get rid of these 40,000 surplus clerks still on the pay roll and send them home and stop this expense.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a few questions. I notice in the first section of the bill that the director of the veterans' bureau is to be an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. What is the idea of making him an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury?

UMI

Mr. SWEET. So as to have him as near to the Secretary and the President as possible. In that event he reports directly to the Secretary and to the President.

Mr. MILLER. Would he not report in the same manner if he is not made an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SWEET. He would be under some other Assistant Secretary.

Mr. MILLER. What is the salary of the other Assistant Secretaries?

Mr. SWEET. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. MILLER. And this salary is made $10,000?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; because of the great responsibility imposed upon him.

Mr. MILLER. I am not quarreling over the salary. If anything, it is too small.

Mr. SWEET. The present Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance gets $7,500, and when this House passed the Sweet bill, in September, 1919, we gave him $10,000. That was cut down to $7,500 in the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. It is, then, the idea of the committee that the director's duties are so much larger than those of any other Assistant Secretary that he is entitled to twice the salary?

Mr. SWEET. The gentleman must remember we are combining the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I know that; I have read the bill.

Mr. SWEET. And that the responsibilities imposed upon the director are as great, if not greater, than any other officer in the Government of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. By this combination you are bringing about a unit and paying a man twice as much as you pay any other Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, because his duties seem so much greater than those of any other Assistant Secretary?

Mr. SWEET. And the responsibilities imposed upon him under this act.

Mr. RAYBURN. And do we not, under this act, abolish two other offices that pay $5,000 a year?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; we abolish indirectly the director of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Mr. MILLER. But that will be passed right on down.

Mr. SWEET. And we abolish the office of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. MILLER. All of those men will be passed right on.

Mr. SWEET. Not necessarily, because the director will reorganize the whole bureau.

Mr. MILLER. But somebody will have to be in charge of vocational training.

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And he will be subordinate to the director?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. So that you pass them right down the line. You do not get rid of anybody.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I note that there is an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury now in charge of the War Risk Insurance and Public Health.

Mr. SWEET. That Assistant Secretary will still be in charge of the Public Health, because we do not take over the Public Health Service only in so far as it pertains to the services to be rendered by that Public Health Service to the disabled ex-service men.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. So this means an additional one?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; it means an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLER. We will then have six Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury instead of five.

Mr. SWEET. We will have one more, whatever the number is.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in lines 6 and 7, page 1, the following:

The director of which shall be an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 6, after the word "Bureau," strike out the words "the director of which shall be an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if we allow this provision to remain in the bill Congress will be impelled to increase the salaries of all the other Assistant Secretaries from $5,000 to $10,000. There is no question but what the salary of the other Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury and Assistant Secretaries of other departments should be increased, but we should not attempt in this way to increase the salary of the other Assistant Secretaries. I am not in a position to say that the Assistant Postmasters General, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, of War, and other Assistant Secretaries should receive $10,000 or even more, but the committee can see that if we create this director as an Assistant Secretary we immediately raise the salaries ultimately and in the near future of the other Assistant Secretaries. I can not agree with the gentleman having the bill in charge that this director will have greater duties than the Assistant Secretary who has supervision of the income-tax collections and of customs, and the other Secretaries attached to the Treasury Department.

I have no quarrel with the salary fixed by the committee at $10,000. I believe that the salaries of these supervisory officials, and particularly Assistant Secretaries, are not commensurate by far with the work imposed, but for us indirectly to increase the salary of all the Assistant Secretaries, for this is what we are doing, is subject to strong objection. Now, the further question which is before the committee is whether this director should be constituted an Assistant Secretary. No great advantage will result from an administrative point of view by creating him an Assistant Secretary. He will be placed under one of the five existing Secretaries of the Treasury. We do not detract from his powers or minimize his position by failing to appoint him an Assistant Secretary. If it is going to be the purpose of the Congress whenever we create a director of a bureau, director of child labor, or of anything, immediately to invest him with the title of Assistant Secretary, why that would result in an army of supervisory officials. I think we have enough Assistant Secretaries in the Treasury for the time being without creating this one, and particularly if it is going to result in the leveling up of the salaries of all the Assistant Secretaries of the Government. I will yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. DALE. I was wondering if the gentleman from Wisconsin out of his experience had come to the conclusion that a man who is to be placed in charge of this immense organization would not necessarily have to have the qualifications or would not necessarily have to meet the enormous duties of the other Secretaries or meet duties less than those?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the duties imposed upon Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, all of them, are very onerous and great, but I do not think there is any need of creating an Assistant Secretary or making an Assistant Secretary out of the director. He will have the same power as provided in this bill without constituting him an Assistant Secretary. For the two reasons advanced, because we will have to raise the salaries not only of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, but of all the Assistant Secretaries in the departments, and because no greater power will be conferred, I am opposed to his being constituted an Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This country is trying to save money. I am not in favor now of raising the salary of anybody who gets a big salary. These other people who are Assistant Secretaries do not receive any such salary as this, and I do not believe——

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Excuse me a minute. I do not believe every time we create something new we have got to raise the salary. This man is not going to do any more work than scores and scores of other men here in Washington who do not get that salary. In my judgment we ought to try to save money instead of looking for a place to increase a salary, and I think this is a good one to begin on.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the present Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance receives $7,500. This bill legislates out of office the Federal Vocational Education Board, and I understand there are two or three civilians on the board, each of whom receives a salary of $5,000, so that the total salaries there alone would be $17,500, and this man only receives $10,000.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The board does not cease to exist at all.

Mr. LITTLE. I think we ought to save a little money, and there is no reason why we should begin to squander it. Let us save it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, the purpose of the amendment I have offered is not to diminish the salary of the director. I have no intention of making a motion to diminish the salary carried in the bill. My idea is that you should not create an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury out of this director and give him a salary of $10,000 which will necessarily force the giving of the other Assistant Secretaries, charged with responsible work, $10,000.

Mr. LITTLE. There is no sense in every time you get near the Treasury of sticking your hand into it and taking out more money. Let us stop it, and stop it right here.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Kansas. I fear they have not read this bill over very carefully.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. The facts are—just a moment——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is making a statement in the nature of a reflection upon me. I have read the bill very carefully; otherwise I would not have risen to offer an amendment. I have several amendments to offer, not with the intention of being captious but in order to try to improve the bill.

Mr. SWEET. I did not mean to make a captious statement. But the truth of it is the director is vested with full authority over this new bureau. The director is made an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Now, then, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], the office of Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is abolished. The director of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education will go out of existence, and there will be a new organization of these agencies, as provided in section 1 and in other sections of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. What, then, becomes of the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who is now in charge of the Public Health and War Risk Insurance?

Mr. SWEET. He will have charge of the Public Health Service, just as he has now, and he will receive his $5,000.

Mr. MILLER. There is now a present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who has charge of the united functioning of the War Risk Insurance and Public Health?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. MILLER. Now, are you going to duplicate here, when your War Risk Insurance Bureau is swallowed up in this thing?

Mr. SWEET. Let me say to the gentleman that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who now has supervision over the Public Health Service and Bureau of War Risk Insurance has no such powers as are given to this new Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MILLER. That is not the element I am after.

Mr. SWEET. He is between the Secretary and the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to-day.

Mr. MILLER. Are you going to continue, then, the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who has charge of the War Risk Insurance?

Mr. SWEET. As far as that is concerned, it is a matter to be determined hereafter.

Mr. MILLER. The War Risk Insurance is turned over to the director of the veterans' bureau by your bill here. Are you going to keep that man?

Mr. SWEET. Let me say to the gentleman that he will be a director of this bureau, and all questions that pertain to the benefit of the soldiers of this country will be submitted to him. He will have charge of the regional offices and the suboffices, and the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has no such duties or responsibility.

Mr. MILLER. Let me ask the gentleman another question. He probably did not understand my question.

Mr. SWEET. I think I did.

Mr. MILLER. There is at the present time an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and Public Health?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Now you take away from him the Bureau of War Risk and put it in the hands of the veterans' bureau under your bill. What becomes then of the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SWEET. He is still Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and has charge of the Public Health Service.

Mr. MILLER. Which is not enough to keep him out of mischief.

Mr. HUSTED. There is an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who has had supervision of this work.

Mr. MILLER. General supervision, but no responsibility.

Mr. HUSTED. I understand; but he was in the Treasury Department before the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was created.

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. HUSTED. He was not created for that purpose, and he assumed it as an additional function.

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. HUSTED. And he still remains in the Treasury Department and is performing all the duties that he formerly did?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the assertion and statements made by the gentleman from New York are not entirely founded on fact. There was no Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the War Risk Insurance and Public Health when the original War Risk Insurance Bureau act was passed, and when the gentleman says here——

Mr. SWEET. That is just what he asserted.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. With the permission of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it the gentleman's understanding that when the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was created there was also created an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of presiding over this bureau?

Mr. STAFFORD. There was not. It is an aftercreation entirely. There was no Assistant Secretary at that time.

Mr. HUSTED. That Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was in the Treasury Department before the War Risk Insurance was created.

Mr. STAFFORD. He was an additional Secretary, created after the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was organized.

Mr. HUSTED. Not at all.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do this in opposition, really, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. By reason of the circumstances in which the committee that framed this bill finds itself and the circumstances surrounding the wounded and disabled soldiers generally we are forced to place a great deal of discretion and authority in the director of the veterans' bureau. In other words, we are forced to intrust to his care and keeping, for the time being at least, the welfare of every man that has been wounded in the service or every man that must look to the Government for care and protection, either in vocational training, compensation, insurance, or any other matters concerning relief for the World War veterans. In doing this they have been compelled to allow the director to name his own assistants, fix their salaries, and to create his own staff, and to designate the number of sections, and so forth, that shall operate and function under him. In giving him this authority it seems to me that it is wise to give him a salary that is commensurate with the position and the responsibility that he must assume. If the gentleman's amendment carries, I presume that he would offer another amendment, on page 6, section 9, which would have the effect to relieve the director of the veterans' bureau of any responsibility whatever to the Treasury or to any other department.

Mr. Chairman, since we are compelled to put so much authority in the hands of the director and lodge with the director so much responsibility, I believe that the disabled men ought at least to have one avenue by which they may appeal to some other authority if there should be an injustice done to them in the enforcement of the provisions of this act. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is a wise provision contained in this bill which makes the director of the veterans' bureau an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and gives to the ex-service men, as it does in section 9, the right of appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, who has authority to control or direct the director should there be any injustice in the administration of this law. We want to make certain that prompt and adequate relief will be granted to the wounded and disabled men who served in the great World War and to whom this Nation owes a debt of gratitude that no amount of money can ever repay.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think it is conceded that $10,000 is not too much salary to pay to the director, a most important official. It is thought that with that salary the appointing power may be able to get a real big man for the job. I think it is generally conceded that the highest-class men can not be obtained for $5,000. Granting that that is true, it would seem to be absurd to put a $10,000 man in a $10,000 job under the supervision of a $5,000 man who would be an Assistant Secretary over him. Surely you would not ask your $10,000 man, that you paid that large salary to get, to be ordered and directed by an Assistant Secretary who would be getting only $5,000. Therefore it is entirely proper to make the director of this most important bureau an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

I differ with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in his view of the duties of the assistant who is to be relieved of his work in connection with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. That is only one part of his duties. The Public Health Department is still under him. It is a very large department, and it is growing every day, and the only thing that he loses is that part of the Public Health Department that applies to soldiers. But if we, by this legislation, abolished his duties entirely, it would not justify putting this $10,000 man under a $5,000 Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. The former Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance told me that if he himself desired to make a journey to New York, to make an official inspection as a part of his duty, he had to go to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and get the permission of that Assistant Secretary of the Treasury before he could make the trip. I think the gentleman from Indiana will agree that that is a perfectly absurd situation.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It would be.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I made this inquiry not in order to criticize the committee. That is what I am on my feet now to explain. I shall vote with the committee and not with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. I asked the question that I propounded merely for information, to find out if the present Assistant Secretary did have any such powers now, and if it were contemplated merely to increase his power.

There is no question in my mind but that the committee has done absolutely right. You can not afford to put anyone at the head of this bureau who is not a big man, and you cannot expect such a man to come down here unless you make him at least an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and give him at least the salary the committee provided for in this case.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I have been impressed with the possibility of what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] said occurring, that if we make this man an Assistant Secretary at this salary, there will be immediately an effort to make all Assistant Secretaries' salaries the same. That does not necessarily follow, does it?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Not to my mind.

Mr. FESS. An effort will be made to that end; everybody knows that. But the character of this work is so outstanding and so different from the others that I do not think it would follow that giving this particular salary to this particular man means that we shall give it to all the others.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I entirely agree with the gentleman. Much complaint has been made in the past, and righteous complaint, for neglect, not of Congress, but of the inefficient manner in which the different bureaus dealing with wounded veterans of the World War have been managed. We have all been cognizant of many such cases. Only the other day I read in a Washington paper of the appointment of a committee by the local board of trade here to investigate cases of alleged ill-treatment of convalescent soldiers.

The committee is to be congratulated on the comprehensive bill it has brought in consolidating the different bureaus.

Nothing we can do will be too much for those who were wounded in defense of this country and are doomed in consequence to a life of invalidism.

Anyone who attended the impressive ceremonies in the amphitheater at Arlington on Memorial Day and saw the crippled soldiers from the Walter Reed Hospital come into the inclosure must have felt a determination to do their utmost to prevent the occurrence of such calamities in the future. When I was in France during the war I was taken to a studio in Paris where an American sculptress was molding delicate masks for the benefit of men whose faces had been mutilated in the war. She was aided in her work by the use of photographs taken before the soldiers were injured. I saw there two men, one of whom had part of his face blown off and the other most of his mouth, and when she had affixed to them these masks their appearance became almost normal.

It is the realization that these and other calamities are the result of war that makes us want to go to almost any length to prevent it. For the sake of those who may be maimed or killed and not merely for the sake of economy we want some agreement to prevent war. Disarmament will not do it if we are the only ones to disarm, for the history of the world from century to century shows that it is the weakly armed and poorly prepared nations with riches coveted by others that have been the ones to fall. This country does not intend to fall, and for that reason we are going to keep an adequate Army and Navy.

As long as other nations keep up their armed forces and as long as there are covetous nations in the world capable of striking us we must be prepared for defense. There is only one way to make a curtailment in our military and naval forces safely, and that is through an agreement with other nations for disarmament or the establishment of an international court with sufficient power to make their judgments effective. With the present advancement in civilization, one or both of these accomplishments must surely be possible of attainment.

Gen. Pershing has said:

It would appear that recent experiences should be enough to convince everybody of the danger of a renewal of this competition. But one nation cannot reduce armaments unless all do. It is time that enlightened people everywhere should undertake to reach some rational agreement which would not only relieve the world of its heavy financial burden but which in itself would go far toward the prevention of war. We are not a warlike people.

Admiral Sims has said:

Those things were continually discussed, and one of the commonest remarks made was that when we should get done with this war we will all be pretty faulty if we cannot find some means by which we can get along peaceably in the world and safely without the enormous expenditures.

Gen. Bliss likewise put the matter clearly when he said:

Now, if the real problem is to minimize the chances of another world war, which will necessarily be a war between the great civilized powers, the problem can be solved only by getting these few nations together for a full and free conference. * * * I believe that the common peoples of the nations represented would not permit that conference to adjourn until at least one definite step toward a general limitation of armaments had been taken.

The President stated in his recent address to Congress:

We are ready to cooperate with other nations to approximate disarmament.

In 1910 Congress passed a joint resolution providing for the appointment by the President of a commission of five members—to consider the expediency of utilizing existing international agencies for the purpose of limiting the armaments of the nations of the world by international agreement and of constituting the combined navies of the world an international force for the preservation of universal peace, and to consider and report upon any other means to diminish the expenditures of Government for military purposes and to lessen the probabilities of war: Provided, That the total expense authorized by this joint resolution shall not exceed the sum of $10,000 and that the said commission shall be required to make final report within two years from the date of the passage of this resolution.

In 1916 a provision was added to the naval appropriation bill whereby—

The President is authorized and requested to invite, at an appropriate time, not later than the close of the war in Europe, all the great Governments of the world to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of formulating a plan for a court of arbitration or other tribunal, to which disputed questions between nations shall be referred for adjudication and peaceful settlement, and to consider the question of disarmament and submit their recommendation to their respective Governments for approval.

Thus we see that the United States has been an active advocate of this policy, and this year at the last session and again at this session the Senate has passed an amendment to the naval bill by a vote without any dissent authorizing and requesting the President to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to a conference on disarmament. The United States has gone even further than that, however, for in the year 1817 it proposed to Great Britain the limitation of armament on the Great Lakes. The proposition was made by our State Department and agreed to by Great Britain through its minister to this country. The arrangement was approved by the United States Senate, and on the 28th day of April, 1818, it was proclaimed by the President of the United States, and from that day to this, 103 years, this document has remained a vital and effective force for the limitation of armament and peaceful settlement of disputes between two great nations.

It gives grateful proof that honorable nations can make joint agreements for disarmament and live up to them. This precedent seems to me of so much importance that I wish to quote the proclamation in full so that it may become more generally known to the present generation of the world.

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas an arrangement was entered into at the city of Washington, in the month of April, in the year of our Lord 1817, between Richard Rush, Esq., at that time acting as Secretary for the Department of State of the United States, for and in behalf of the Government of the United States, and the Right Hon. Charles Bagot, His Britannic Majesty's envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, for and in behalf of His Britannic Majesty, which arrangement is in the words following, to wit:

"The naval force to be maintained upon the American lakes by His Majesty and the Government of the United States shall henceforth be confined to the following vessels on each side, that is—

"On Lake Ontario, to one vessel not exceeding 100 tons burden, and armed with one 18-pound cannon.

"On the upper lakes, to two vessels not exceeding like burden each and armed with like force.

"On the waters of Lake Champlain, to one vessel not exceeding like burden and armed with like force.

"All other armed vessels on these lakes shall be forthwith dismantled, and no other vessels of war shall be there built or armed.

"If either party should be hereafter desirous of annulling this stipulation, and should give notice to that effect to the other party, it shall cease to be binding after the expiration of six months from the date of such notice.

"The naval force so to be limited shall be restricted to such services as will, in no respect, interfere with the proper duties of the armed vessels of the other party."

And whereas the Senate of the United States have approved of the said arrangement, and recommended that it should be carried into effect, the same having also received the sanction of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of His Britannic Majesty.

Now, therefore, I, James Monroe, President of the United States, do, by this my proclamation, make known and declare that the arrangement aforesaid, and every stipulation thereof, has been duly entered into, concluded and confirmed, and is of full force and effect.

Given under my hand at the city of Washington this 28th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1818, and of the independence of the United States the forty-second.

JAMES MONROE.

By the President:
JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,
Secretary of State.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The functions, powers, and duties conferred upon the Federal Board for Vocational Education by the act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto, are hereby transferred to and made a part of the veterans' bureau.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the introducer of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUSTED. I notice that the Federal Board for Vocational Education as a board is not abolished by this section, but is still continued.

Mr. SWEET. They still have other duties.

Mr. HUSTED. I notice that the functions, powers, and duties conferred upon the Federal Board for Vocational Education by the act approved June 27, 1918, are transferred to and made a part of the veterans' bureau.

Mr. SWEET. Yes; they are vested in the new bureau.

Mr. HUSTED. What powers are retained by the Federal board, may I ask?

Mr. SWEET. The Federal board has the supervision and control of all matters that arise under the act that was passed in 1917 providing for the promotion of vocational education to men employed in agriculture, trades, and industries, and so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will allow me, they also have charge of the subject matter of the bill passed at the last session of Congress for the rehabilitation of industrial cripples.

Mr. HUSTED. Will this bureau have any control over the education of disabled soldiers?

Mr. SWEET. No. We are passing that over to the new bureau, so that everything pertaining to disabled soldiers will be there.

Mr. HUSTED. Am I correct in supposing that everything in relation to the care of disabled soldiers is vested in this new bureau, and no power will be reserved in any other branch of the Government?

Mr. SWEET. That is true as to hospitalization, allowances, allotments, compensation, insurance, and vocational training. They are all vested in this new bureau and are placed under the control and management of the director.

Mr. HUSTED. But the Federal Board for Vocational Training still remains in existence for certain other purposes, including the rehabilitation of industrial cripples?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. And what else?

Mr. SWEET. And for the carrying out of an act passed in 1917 which related to the education and preparation of men for occupations, and the like of that.

Mr. FESS. The Smith-Hughes Act, which carries $7,000,000 annually.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have not consumed any time of this House until now, but I do want now to make some few remarks on the general features of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, a considerable amount if not all important legislation proposed in this House calls forth a sharp difference of opinion upon the part of its Members, but in the proposed law under consideration, which has been very appropriately designated by the committee as "the veterans' bureau," we have a measure upon which there should be no difference of opinion as to the principle involved in the bill or the objects sought to be attained, and the measure should receive the solid support of the Members of this House.

In my opinion, no more important and necessary legislation than that proposed in this bill will be considered at this or any future session of Congress. There may be said to be two classes of our citizens at least who are entitled to and are sorely in need of legislation by Congress at this immediate time that will materially advance and promote their rights and welfare. One of these is the so-called ex-service men and their dependents, the other is the farmers and producers of this country, both of whom are badly in need of our help and are crying out for our assistance. We are in duty bound to hear them both and answer their call. The well-being of our Government demands that we should. Here in this law it is proposed to discharge the overdue obligation to the first class mentioned, and any delay or uncertainty of purpose upon our part to speedily enact this bill into law must be carefully avoided; and I wish to make it clear that I shall not only vote for this measure but will resist to the utmost of my energies and ability any act that may even tend to delay its passage or render less effective any of its provisions; and following its enactment into law, which I confidently expect, it is to be hoped that we can then continue to direct our energies in behalf of serving the interest of the second class of our citizens which I have mentioned as requiring our consideration.

The committee handling this legislation is to be commended, and I most whole-heartedly do commend them for the painstaking, thoughtful, and intelligent manner in which they have worked out the details of the legislation proposed in this measure, all of which is so vital to the interest and welfare of the ex-service men and their dependents, and the necessity for which has become apparent and well recognized by not only every Member of this House but by all the people of this country who are in any degree familiar with the subject under consideration. In making this statement I have in mind both the inadequacy of our present laws upon the subject under consideration and the inefficient and unsatisfactory manner in which those laws have been administered, both of which evils will be corrected and largely, if not entirely, overcome by enacting this measure into law.

This bill correlates all of the agencies of the Government heretofore in any way dealing with, relating to, or having to do with the interest and rights of the ex-service men, such as the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Rehabilitation Division, Vocational Training Department, hospitalization work, medical, surgical, dental, convalescent care and treatment, and such other like agencies too numerous to mention, and brings them under one general head, to be hereafter known as the veterans' bureau. In other words, a complete overhauling and reorganization of the whole system and placing it on a practical working basis by which the business can be thoroughly, expeditiously, and systematically handled in the shortest period of time possible and at a minimum cost. A law of this character is not only desirable but has been demonstrated by past experience to be absolutely necessary if we are to give to the ex-service men of this country that which is justly theirs and make clear to them what rights they have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROACH. Without purpose to unnecessarily condemn or criticize previous legislation on this subject, it must be recalled that all such legislation was enacted under the emergency created by the World War and out of necessity more or less hurriedly prepared and considered, rendering it next to impossible to give to it the consideration which it deserved or to take into account the many phases of the rights and interests of the soldier and his dependents as they would naturally arise in the future. Our beloved country had on short notice been drawn into a world war 3,000 miles across the sea. The deadly conflict was on—no time to reflect or consider. The thing to do then was to act. Our young men, the best of our manhood, had been ordered to fall in line and march by the millions; and even had they so desired, they had no choice but to obey. But let it be said to their credit that the red blood of patriotism which enabled their ancestors to firmly establish the institutions of this country was fired in their veins, and that without hesitation or halting they leaped to the defense of our flag and the institutions of this Government. We have all witnessed the sight of their going, of the father who stood by supporting a grief-stricken mother as with tear-dimmed eyes he waved a farewell to these gallant sons, the pride and future hope of their home, many of whom were never to return. They were vigorous, strong, erect, full of life, ambition, and courage. We were proud of these men, who for the most part had just begun to take on the serious responsibilities of life and to take their place in the business life of the country. They made the supreme sacrifice, turning their backs to father, mother, wife, sweetheart, home, bright futures, prosperous business engagements—everything that is dear and sought after by men—all at the command of their Government; and now, in turn, this Government must answer their call. The privations and hardships which they uncomplainingly suffered, and which I shall not take the time to recount, only emphasizes, strengthens, and adds further to their rights. Many of them never returned; others have returned, but not the bright, smiling-faced boy that went. We find many of those who have returned broken in health, maimed, wounded, shell shocked, and nervous wrecks of their former self; their once bright future dissipated, business engagements and former opportunities taken over by others, and to otherwise be confronted with discouragement and disappointments. To these men and their dependents this Government owes a stupendous and solemn obligation, which must be promptly met. This bill measurably undertakes to fulfill that obligation and to correct and clarify present laws upon the subject written under the stress of the moment and which are admittedly inadequate. We should not falter or hesitate; our duty to these men is plain; the country is demanding that they be dealt with fairly, wisely, and justly, and no right-thinking person is going to question the propriety of liberal provisions for these men by a grateful Government.

It is not to be wondered that the emergency legislation in their behalf by no means discharges our obligation to them or that the administration of these laws has not proven satisfactory. What we are interested in now is to see that justice and right are no longer delayed. Now that we have a knowledge of the defects of our laws on the subject of their rights and of the inefficient manner in which such laws as we have have been administered, we subject ourselves to condemnation without measure if we do not now, without further delay, remedy a situation that has become deplorable, and from which the ex-service men and their dependents have been made to suffer and ofttimes denied that which is due them from a just Government.

No doubt every Member of this House has had brought to their individual attention case after case and claim after claim of deserving ex-service men or their dependents who, owing to the present inefficient methods of handling their claims by the Government under the present complicated and overlapping system of bureaus, divisions, and agencies, has been denied justice at the hands of the Government. Many of these cases that have come under my own notice are pathetic and heart-rending; that the present system of duplications and overlapping of authority, multitude of separate and independent agencies, departments, and bureaus, is recognized as chiefly responsible for this condition, and it is not to be wondered. These various agencies of which I speak, each with their own complicated methods of handling business, has proven so confusing to the ex-service man that he could seldom get results on his claim when presented by him personally, and have likewise dumbfounded and confused lawyers of experience and legal training who have undertaken to help the soldier or his dependents get action on their claim. This bill overcomes all that and renders it a comparatively simple matter for the soldier or his dependents to assert and obtain their rights, by bringing all of these various departments, bureaus, and agencies into one centralized department of general control.

Hereafter, whether the claim be one of insurance, compensation, hospital, medical, dental, or other treatment, vocational training, or whatever rights to which the claimant is entitled, there need no longer be any confusion under this bill consolidating these several agencies heretofore handling such claims in obtaining a prompt adjustment of such rights. If this law is properly administered a simple letter to the "Veterans' Bureau" by the claimant should and no doubt will set the machinery in motion for a prompt and businesslike disposition of the claim thus presented. The bill not only centralizes the work in Washington under one general department but decentralizes the work to be done in the field; and these two combined facts, both of primary importance, argue strongly for efficiency and a prompt and proper handling of these claims. The provisions of this bill for the 14 regional offices and such suboffices as may be required to properly function the activities of the field work—not exceeding 50 in number, it will be seen—brings the Government in close contact with the service men—carries the work to their door, as it were—and it is apparent that this provision of the bill will enable the Government to promptly get in touch with these men or their dependents and arrive at a speedy and correct decision and adjudication of their rights. If this bill becomes a law there will no longer be division of authority and responsibility, duplication of work, and overlapping of departments, which has directly resulted in inexcusable delays and inefficient handling of claims for insurance, compensation, hospitalization, vocational training, and like claims, all of which will be avoided.

In other words, it is proposed by this bill to "cut out so much red tape" in discharging the obligations of the Government to these men, dispense with a few unnecessary departments and clerks, exercise some common sense in handling their claims, and inject such business methods in the general program relating to their affairs as will make it comparatively simple for them to obtain their rights. Such a change will not only be welcomed and receive the plaudits of the ex-service men and their dependents, who have indorsed this bill through the American Legion and in other ways, but will likewise receive the approval and commendation of the general public. The clear and well-defined purpose of this legislation is to facilitate and expedite a proper handling and prompt dispatch of this important branch of the Government's business and to make it possible by practical and simple methods for the ex-service men and their dependents to secure their rights under the law and to make known those rights in clear and certain terms. The bill not only preserves to them all rights and privileges under former laws, but materially adds to, extends, and liberalizes the present provisions of such laws.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, here is this bill. Let us highly resolve that these men have not sacrificed in vain, in so far as a just Government can make suitable provisions and recognition of their splendid services. Let us pass this bill into law, with the same energy, resolution, courage, and determination that made it possible for these boys to win the war and perpetuate the principles of our Government that has made our country great, with a prayer on our lips for its faithful administration and execution by those charged with that duty. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee one or two questions. I wish to preface my questions by making a very brief statement.

What we want to achieve by this legislation is to get speedy action for the benefit of the veterans of the Great War. That is the purpose the committee have in mind in bringing in this bill.

Mr. SWEET. That is what we are endeavoring to accomplish.

Mr. McKENZIE. Some time ago the Congress of the United States enacted what was known as the Smith-Hughes bill, to provide vocational education, in which the States were to participate.

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. McKENZIE. I assume there has been some organization along that line?

Mr. SWEET. There has.

Mr. McKENZIE. Later on we enacted what is known as the Smith-Bankhead bill, for the purpose of taking care of industrial cripples—men injured in industry.

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. McKENZIE. We have also provided that in the War Risk Bureau there shall be rehabilitation treatment given the soldiers disabled in the war.

Mr. SWEET. The question of vocational training pertains to the Vocational Board.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. And of course we are granting hospitalization through the laws passed with reference to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the point I have in mind, Mr. Chairman. Under this section you provide that all the activities of the Vocational Educational Board and all of the activities heretofore exercised by the Public Health Service for the rehabilitation of the crippled veterans shall be transferred to this new Federal bureau. The question I want to ask is, Will that expedite the treatment of these boys? If so, how do you expect this new bureau to proceed? Do you expect they will investigate a man's case and then turn him over to the vocational or rehabilitation organization that is now in existence, or do you intend that there shall be built up in this new bureau a new organization to take care of these veterans?

Mr. SWEET. They will be completely taken care of by the new bureau.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he does not think that that sort of a proceeding will delay or retard, rather than expedite, the treatment?

Mr. SWEET. It is the judgment of all those who have had charge of this matter—the present director, Mr. Lamkin, and everyone who is connected with it—that if that phase of it is put into the new bureau and carried along it will be expedited, and that the soldiers will receive better and more efficient treatment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me ask the gentleman further: Do you intend, then, that the organization that is now in existence for treating these soldiers and giving them vocational training shall be transferred over bodily into this new bureau?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; we do.

Mr. McKENZIE. And that will wipe out, then, the organizations now in existence for vocational training and for the rehabilitation of cripples from civil life, in so far as soldiers are concerned?

Mr. SWEET. Oh, no. In section 3 we refer specifically to the act providing for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment. This separate act, which pertains to the soldiers, and the amendments to that particular act, are transferred, and all the functions, powers, and duties conferred by that act are transferred, to this bureau and exercised by it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me cite a specific case. Suppose we have a soldier who is crippled. He goes before one of these boards out in the country, under the new department that you are going to create. He is examined and found to be entitled to rehabilitation or vocational education. It is approved down here in Washington. Now, is there a board in existence or an organization to which that young man can be sent or transferred for treatment at once?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; as quick as the transfer is made; of course it will be under the supervision and direction of the new bureau. Not only that, but before he can get vocational training of course he must get the record from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance as to whether he is receiving compensation, or the like of that. So you see we are bringing this whole matter together in one bureau, so that he may receive more efficient treatment.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am afraid that you will have confusion worse confounded.

Mr. SWEET. There is no confusion.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SWEET. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. To-day this rehabilitation work is under the direction of the Federal board. All this will do is to transfer it from the direction of the Federal board to this director of the Federal bureau.

Mr. HICKS. In other words, that does not change the matter any, but merely transfers it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of securing recognition I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I should like to ask the introducer of the bill if there are in the Vocational Educational Board at the present time separate organizations for the treatment of soldiers, and another organization for the treatment of industrial cripples, and a still further organization for the treatment of people under the Smith-Hughes Act?

Mr. FESS. Will my friend from Iowa allow me to answer that?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. FESS. This organization for the treatment of industrial cripples will be under the Federal Board and it works through the various State compensation commissions. The law did not go into effect until June. It was passed a year ago to take effect this June. This bill does not touch that.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the transfer bodily of the entire rehabilitation organization from the Federal Board into the veterans' bureau leave you without any organization to take care of industrial cripples and take care of the Smith-Hughes Act?

Mr. FESS. No; the only thing we take from the organization is this particular feature of the work of the soldiers' division; the industrial cripple work is not to take effect until this June.

Mr. HUSTED. And the machinery will still be left to execute these two acts?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. All personnel, facilities, property, and equipment, including leases, contracts, and other obligations and instrumentalities in the District of Columbia and elsewhere of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, of the United States Public Health Service, as described and provided in a written order of the Treasury Department issued and signed by the Secretary of the Treasury on April 19, 1921, and designated "Order relative to the transfer of certain activities of the United States Public Health Service, relating to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, including the trainees of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education," and of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, are hereby transferred to and made a part of the veterans' bureau under the control, management, operation, and supervision of the director, and subject to such change in designation and organization as he may deem necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, That all commissioned personnel detailed or hereafter detailed from the United States Public Health Service to the veterans' bureau, and such other personnel as shall be added from time to time when such added personnel is employed for the same purpose and for performing the same or similar duties, shall hold the same rank and grade, shall receive the same pay and allowances, and shall be subject to the same rules for relative rank and promotion as now or hereafter may be provided by law for commissioned personnel of the same rank or grade or performing the same or similar duties in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "education," insert "as a result of the administration of the act of June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto."

Mr. SWEET. I will say that that amendment is offered at the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] in order that there may be no question as to the extent to which section 4 goes. It was not the intention of the committee to include the industrial cripples, and the amendment is as follows:

As a result of the administration of the act of June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto.

In other words, in section 3 we were simply transferring the functions, powers, and duties which pertained to this particular act and amendments thereto, and it is the desire of the committee that we should simply refer to the same act and amendments thereto.

Mr. ROGERS. I suppose the gentleman will offer the same amendment to section 5.

Mr. SWEET. I think that is taken care of.

Mr. ROGERS. It is exactly the same in language.

Mr. SWEET. If the gentleman will examine section 5, at the top of page 5, he will find that we are making the transfer in regard to the rehabilitation division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

Mr. ROGERS. Not in the first paragraph of section 5.

Mr. SWEET. Well, the amendment may be offered there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the gentleman from Iowa in reading the amendment left out the word "approved." He read it "act of June 27, 1918."

Mr. SWEET. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may modify my amendment by inserting the word "approved" instead of the word "of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "education," insert "as a result of the administration of the act approved June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he regards it as essential that the order referred to beginning in line 13, page 3, shall be referred to in the form in which it is mentioned, instead of incorporating the material provisions of that order. I confess that to me it seems very loose legislation to incorporate in this way what is a mere temporary regulation, subject to change, having no sanctity and no real validity except from day to day within the department.

Mr. SWEET. Let me say to the gentleman that the order, as the gentleman will find, is rather lengthy, and we are simply referring to it as a description of the property. We describe it as "order relative to the transfer of certain activities of the United States Public Health Service relating to beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, including the trainees of the rehabilitation division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance." This order provides for the transfer of this property in a manner that we desire to have it transferred under the terms of the bill. In order to meet that situation we simply refer to the order as being descriptive of that property. We consider that far better than to describe it in general terms.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman undertook in section 4 to quote accurately the title of the order?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. In two respects the language in the bill varies from the language indicated in the gentleman's own remarks of last Thursday as the title to the order. If the gentleman is quite convinced that this is both a suitable and a necessary way of legislating, at least we ought to embody in the bill the accurate title of the order as issued by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SWEET. I have the accurate title of the order before me and we have followed that title. The reference in my remarks was taken from a report made to me, which I inserted in the RECORD, but I have now an exact copy of the order from which the bill was drawn.

Mr. ROGERS. The bill is correct and the gentleman's speech was incorrect?

Mr. SWEET. The quotation in the speech is not exactly correct.

Mr. ROGERS. The order begins by transferring all of the "activities" of the United States Public Health Service with the exception of certain hospitals and dispensaries. Was it the intention of the committee of which the gentleman is a member to transfer any of the so-called public health hospitals to the veterans' bureau?

Mr. SWEET. No.

Mr. ROGERS. All the hospitals now under the operation of the Public Health Service will continue under the control of the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the actual operation of the hospitals continue under the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. They will.

Mr. ROGERS. I notice that the language of the Treasury order is that all of the activities shall be transferred.

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. "Activities" does not sound like a physical-property word.

Mr. SWEET. Yes; but the truth of it is that these hospitals at all times under all circumstances have been in the Public Health Service and when we are making this transfer it is simply the activity; we are doing away with the condition that existed previously between the Public Health Service and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and when we refer to it we say "all personnel, facilities, property, and equipment, including leases, contracts," and so forth, and then when we make the transfer we are simply leaving to the Public Health Service the hospitals. And I may say right here, so that the House may get a clear conception of what the bill does, that as far as the new bureau is concerned, it has full charge over men who are desirous of obtaining hospitalization. The new bureau will determine that question, and these men then will be turned over to the Public Health Service to have rendered to them hospitalization. When they are turned over to the Public Health Service for hospitalization, it will be just the same as if the gentleman would send his boy or girl to a hospital. When the boy is in the hospital he will receive the care and treatment from that hospital. In other words, this hospitalization question, as far as disabled soldiers are concerned, is to be determined by the veterans' bureau. The hospital service is to be performed by the hospital, either private or public, as the case may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it the fact that so far as the Public Health patients are concerned, the change contemplated by the proposed bill is limited to the physical examination and the assignment to hospitals of the applicants for hospitalization, both of which will hereafter be under the veterans' bureau?

Mr. SWEET. That is practically true.

Mr. ROGERS. In other words, as far as the maintenance and control and operation of the hospitals are concerned, and as far as the care and treatment of the men while they are in the hospitals are concerned, the present conditions remain practically unchanged?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. ROGERS. And the intent of this section is to bring about that precise result?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I take it that only those facilities and property, equipment, leases and contracts, and other matters mentioned specifically in this Executive order or departmental order are transferred to this new bureau?

Mr. SWEET. As far as the Public Health Service is concerned. As far as the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is concerned, everything is transferred. As to the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, everything is transferred.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Is this order a matter of public and permanent record?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Where would a man go to see under this section what is transferred? Would he go to the Treasury Department and get a copy of that order?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; he could get it in that way. These orders are published and bound. They are regular orders, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. So that they are in the full sense a matter of public record?

Mr. SWEET. I think that is true.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, in the case of hospitalization, where the boys are sent to the hospital, are they still under the care and direction of this bureau?

Mr. SWEET. Up to the time they are assigned to the hospital they are under the supervision and care of the veterans' bureau, but after their assignment to the Public Health Service hospital, or any other hospital, in that event, of course, they are under the control of that hospital, so far as as hospitalization is concerned; but I may say this, that section 9 of the bill provides that the new bureau shall inspect these hospitals to ascertain whether or not the boys are receiving the care and attention to which they are entitled, and if they are not, then they can be taken away and other hospital facilities furnished them.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is that the case in regard to vocational training? When the boys are undergoing vocational training, are they actually under this bureau?

Mr. SWEET. They are under this bureau.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then a boy who would stop vocational training has his vocational training pay stopped?

Mr. SWEET. Yes; and his compensation then would start at once.

Mr. STEPHENS. And there would not have to be an intermission of one or two or three or six months?

Mr. SWEET. That is one of the propositions we endeavor to reach in the formation of this bureau.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. As far as the transfer of the "facilities, property, and equipment, including leases and contracts," and so forth, of the Public Health Service is concerned, what, in the gentleman's judgment, will be comprehended within that transfer? Hospitals are expressly excluded in the order of April 19, and dispensaries are expressly excluded. I suppose the equipment of hospitals, naturally and inevitably, would be excluded. What Public Health property would be transferred to the veterans' bureau?

Mr. SWEET. I can say, referring to the order, that all of the activities of the United States Public Health Service, with the exception of such hospitals and dispensaries as are operated for that service, in so far as they affect the beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, including trainees under the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, are transferred to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby directed to administer such activities and shall hereafter be responsible for the examination, hospitalization, and satisfactory medical care and treatment, including supplies for the said beneficiary.

Mr. ROGERS. That transfers the "activities" of the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Which are intangible things. What physical property will be transferred from the Public Health Service to the veterans' bureau as a result of this act?

Mr. SWEET. There is not a great deal of that, except perhaps property that has been used by the Public Health Service in carrying out the directions of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. ROGERS. In other words, was it the intention of the committee to disturb as little as possible the action of the Public Health Service, having, of course, in mind the necessity of consolidating the interrelated soldier agencies of the Government?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. While the ex-service man is in the hospital and his compensation has been determined while he remains in the hospital, how is that to be determined afterwards by the veterans' bureau except through a report of the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. If a man is in the hospital, his compensation continues just the same as if he was out of the hospital.

Mr. DOWELL. But the compensation changes from time to time through examinations of the various boards of the War Risk Insurance. Is there any change in that during the time he is in the hospital; and if there is not, how is the compensation determined while he is in the hospital?

Mr. SWEET. As far as that is concerned, if he enters a hospital, unless he has a reexamination, unless the board determines that his rate shall be different, of course it continues just the same in the hospital as it does when he is not in the hospital.

Mr. DOWELL. Assuming he has a 10 per cent disability when he is sent to the hospital, does that 10 per cent remain during the time he is in the hospital?

Mr. SWEET. We do not change the law in that respect in any way.

Mr. DOWELL. How would it be determined whether or not he can have an increase in compensation while he is in the hospital?

Mr. SWEET. I will say to the gentleman the question of rating and rerating is passed upon by a board in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and when a man is granted a rehearing it must be presented to the board and that board determines the matter, so you see the very fact he enters a hospital does not mean that his compensation will be increased or decreased, and we do not interfere with that in any way.

Mr. DOWELL. But the general rate may be changed possibly by the fact that he is in a hospital?

Mr. SWEET. That may be true.

Mr. DOWELL. His compensation, I take it, will increase according to his health——

Mr. SWEET. Yes; it does now.

Mr. DOWELL. What I am getting at is this: The rate of compensation is now determined by the veterans' bureau under this bill. After he goes into a hospital, as I understand it, he is then under the hospital direction and under the Public Health Service. Now, does the Public Health Service determine the rate?

Mr. SWEET. Oh, no. The Public Health Service has nothing to do with it.

Mr. DOWELL. How may he get an increase?

Mr. SWEET. The question of increase will be presented to the board under the new bureau just as it is now presented under the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, or presented to the regional office under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. And they have nothing to do, however, with hospitals?

Mr. SWEET. No.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand in reference to the activities transferred from the Public Health Service, War Risk Bureau, it contemplates in the examination made of a man for vocational training or compensation direct reports to the director of the veterans' bureau which heretofore have been going through the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. That is a matter that will be left under the direction and supervision of the director. We hope, at least, that they will be made under the director.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is not that the very purpose of this provision in transferring the activities of the Public Health Service "intangible," as referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, so that these endless delays through examinations may not occur, and reports go through the present long channels to get to the veterans' bureau; but the man's case may reach the veterans' bureau and be acted upon within a reasonable time?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. The gentleman has spoken here of putting a case not properly treated, in an assumed case, in the Public Health Service. What are you going to do with him now?

Mr. SWEET. You can send him to another hospital or send him to private institutions, because they are under contract, and the whole matter suggested by the gentleman from Indiana is covered in section 9, but a young man can receive such hospitalization as the new bureau may determine.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. And the discipline of the boy, as is indicated in some other section of the bill, is that to be carried out by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. By the new bureau, the veterans' bureau.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Although the boy is under the direct care of the Public Health Service?

Mr. SWEET. As far as discipline is concerned, to pass upon the discipline.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Well, are you going to have an inspector down there at the hospital?

Mr. SWEET. Section 9 provides for inspection. There will be a medical division, of course, in the veterans' bureau, and there will be a system of inspection whereby they will go through the hospitals and see whether or not the young man is getting that to which he is entitled.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It looks to me like there would be a conflict of authority.

Mr. SWEET. There is no conflict of authority.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman from Iowa will yield, I would like to ask him a question. If I understand his explanation correctly, the new bureau will have nothing to do with the Public Health hospital in itself, but what will be the situation in reference to the Public Health Service? Will they be authorized to provide such necessary facilities so that there will be sufficient to take care of these ex-service men who may require hospitalization?

Mr. SWEET. Under section 9 we make provision for that, so that all the facilities of the Government are required to furnish hospitalization at the direction of the director of the veterans' bureau, such as the Public Health Service, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of the Interior, and the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think that is clear in my mind now. I had gotten the idea that the director would do it himself.

Mr. SWEET. In other words, the Public Health Service furnishes that hospitalization to the new bureau.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Either public or private?

Mr. SWEET. Either public or private.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All records, files, documents, correspondence, and other papers in the possession of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and those which as a result of the administration of the act of June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto, are in the possession of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall be transferred to the veterans' bureau.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAYTON: Page 5, line 9, after the word "and," insert the word "such" and strike out the rest of line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that section has not been read. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a few questions. While we are discussing this admirable bill reported by your committee, and of which you are the author, the Civil Service Commission have made it almost impossible for ex-service men to qualify for certain positions under the proposed veterans' bureau. I want to ask the chairman if it is possible to amend the bill, and where it could be amended, to change these qualifications? I refer to the qualifications for assistant placement officer. The qualifications and requirements prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, together with the rehabilitation bureau, demand that these young soldiers, averaging around 25 years of age, must have had two years of experience in adjusting labor disputes. I submit that there is not a single soldier of that age, a single ex-service man, who can qualify as having adjusted disputes between capital and labor. In my own district I have four cases of men who have been turned down for that reason. The result is that a large percentage of the employees of that bureau are not ex-service men. I believe it is the sense of this House and of the public that ex-service men should have preference, and it should be made easy for them to qualify. We should not permit obstacles to be placed in their way that make it impossible for them to do so. Does the chairman understand the point that I am making?

Mr. SWEET. I will say that I think that would hardly be an amendment to what is termed the war risk insurance act. It would probably be an amendment to some other statute which relates to the Civil Service Commission or the qualifications of those who are to hold certain positions. And I really do not believe it would be proper in a bill of this kind.

Mr. FISH. I agree with the chairman. I do not see any place in this bill in which you can properly offer such an amendment. It is a very important matter. Has Congress any right to make qualifications for civil-service examination?

Mr. SWEET. It surely has. Amending of the civil service laws is a matter that is purely legislative.

Mr. FISH. I want to read for the information of Congress the requirements for assistant placement officer, which is the main office that a service man can qualify for. It is more difficult for him to qualify as a training officer, because he has to have certain experience in teaching or as a supervisor of education.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I will yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman inform the House just what the duties of a placement officer are?

Mr. FISH. I will. Reading from these civil-service requirements for placement assistant, $1,500 to $2,400 a year, it says:

The duties of appointees will be to secure suitable employment for rehabilitated men who are entitled to assistance through the Federal Board for Vocational Education; to follow up such cases while in training on the job and after placement in employment and render such advice and assistance thereafter as may be necessary or as directed by the officers of the division; the adjustment of questions arising concerning the employment of such men; to cooperate with other officers in arranging for the training of rehabilitated men in productive establishments; and the making of such other investigations concerning these subjects as may be directed by the officers of the division.

Now, as to education and experience, it says:

The prerequisites for consideration for this position are: Education equivalent to the first eight grades of common school and at least two years' experience in handling and adjusting industrial controversies or in some position requiring a similar degree of tact and judgment in contact with employers and employees and in which the duties performed by the applicants required a wide knowledge of the requirements of the various trades and industries.

Now, I submit that there is not a single service man that can qualify properly under those qualifications.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Could anybody qualify under that requirement unless he was a walking delegate of some labor union?

Mr. FISH. That is exactly the point.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wish to say that I know of an instance in my own State of a man who served two years overseas and who has been doing the work of a placement officer and doing it acceptably, but he could not qualify so as to get the $2,400 compensation under that very rule.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I will.

Mr. HILL. I have three cases of precisely the same kind in my district in Baltimore in which excellent men were barred out by that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FISH. I want to call the attention of the chairman to this matter again.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from New York has addressed the Civil Service Commission and called their attention to that fact, and ascertained whether or not they could change this?

Mr. FISH. I have.

Mr. DENISON. What did they say?

Mr. FISH. They said it was within the power of the Federal Board for Vocational Education to make the change in qualifications. Then I went to the Federal board, and they told me that it was within the power of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DENISON. I think that is true.

Mr. FISH. I do not think it is in the power of Congress. I wanted to make sure from the chairman himself whether it would be proper to offer such an amendment to this bill, and furthermore, I wanted to call the attention of Congress to this matter, because it affects every one of us, and we all want to give adequate preference to ex-service men in taking civil service examinations for positions under the various governmental agencies dealing with the welfare of the ex-service men and to prevent any unreasonable barriers being written into the civil service requirements whereby they are unable to qualify for these appointments. Inasmuch as such an amendment would not be germane to this bill, I have served my purpose by calling attention to the matter.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Has the gentleman a suggestion for putting it in that form? The gentleman speaks of the fact that the person who seeks employment must have such experience as will enable him to take the job.

Mr. FISH. I had that in mind.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. What kind of experience would you require the soldier to have outside of knowing how? You want him to have experience.

Mr. FISH. I will give you an example. My own secretary has been adjutant of a post of 500 paid-up members for the past two years. He took the civil service examination and passed with high honors, but was turned down because he did not have two years' experience in adjusting labor disputes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It says:

Two years' experience in adjusting labor disputes or experience in connection with employment of men.

Mr. FISH. As adjutant of the post and as my secretary, he has been doing this for two years. He has placed scores of them.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. You would require the soldier to have some experience in that work, because otherwise you could not expect him to perform the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and answer this question, and propose a plan that might be workable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to section 5. It is along the line of the last amendment I offered to section 4. It is for the purpose of making it more definite and certain. After the word "education," in line 17, insert "as the result of the administration of the act approved June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEET: Page 4, line 17, after the word "education," insert "as the result of the administration of the act approved June 27, 1918, and amendments thereto."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I wanted to ask the gentleman what was the purpose of the words "to be rendered," in lines 11 and 12? This section apparently contemplates the transfer of documents of the various kinds from the Public Health Service to the new bureau?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. That, of course, is essential if the new bureau is to function successfully?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. But it seems to contemplate the transfer of existing documents.

Mr. SWEET. Or those relating to services to be rendered.

Mr. ROGERS. Under this bill the service of the character mentioned is to be stopped, is it not?

Mr. SWEET. The Public Health Service will have certain records in regard to patients that will be sent there by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and of course we will want the hospital record of each man, and so by the language used the veterans' bureau may obtain possession at least of copies of the records made in each hospital for each patient.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what I thought as to the meaning of the language; but if that is so, should not line 14 read, "who are now, have been, or shall be patients"? In other words, you want to have this a continuing authority, do you not, and not an authority limited to past and existing patients?

Mr. SWEET. Of course, the moment that a patient of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is assigned to the Public Health Service for hospitalization, so far as the immediate control of that patient is concerned, he passes to the Public Health Service, subject to inspection, of course, at all times by the veterans' bureau, so that I think the language used there covers the situation—"who are now or have been patients or beneficiaries."

Mr. ROGERS. But in order to have the language "to be rendered" matched by the patients in the hospital, the matter should be followed in the future. You want to transfer the hospitalization records.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. This first provision carries the expression, "all records, files, documents, correspondence, and other papers." As the gentleman from Massachusetts will notice, these papers may relate to the service that has been rendered or service contemplated by the Public Health Service before this bill was ever thought of. The second provision refers to persons who are now patients, or will be at the time the act takes effect, or who have been patients or beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. After this bill takes effect there will be no such thing as beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or the Rehabilitation Division, because they will all be merged in the new veterans' bureau.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. A provision is made to the effect that the veterans' bureau shall have the power to assign to the hospital patients, and the hospital is under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service, and you say that after the veterans' bureau shall have directed the transfer of the patients, in a way they lose jurisdiction over their patients except to make a certain inspection?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Which board shall determine the duration of the time that the ex-service man is to stay in the hospital?

Mr. SWEET. The new bureau, the veterans' bureau.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. It will have control over his treatment and decide when he is cured?

Mr. SWEET. Yes. It will decide when he is cured.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that on line 4 of page 5 appears the language "of June 27."

Mr. SWEET. Yes. That language should be changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] calls my attention to the use of the word "of," on page 5, after the word "act." I ask unanimous consent that the word "of" be changed to the word "approved."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the word "of" be changed to the word "approved." The Clerk will read the amendment proposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEET: Page 5, line 4, amend by striking out the word "of" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "approved."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The director shall establish a central office in the District of Columbia, and not more than 14 regional offices and such suboffices, not exceeding 50 in number, within the territory of the United States and its outlying possessions as may be deemed necessary by him and in the best interests of the work committed to the veterans' bureau and to carry out the purposes of this act. Such regional offices may exercise such powers for hearing complaints and for examining, rating, and awarding compensation claims, granting medical, surgical, dental, and hospital care, convalescent care, and necessary and reasonable after care, making insurance awards, granting vocational training, and all other matters delegated to them by the director as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office. The suboffices shall have such powers as may be delegated to them by the director, except to make compensation and insurance awards and to grant vocational training.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I wish to propose an amendment. On page 5, line 15, after the word "powers," insert the following: "as may be delegated to them by the director."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEET: Page 5, line 15, after the word "powers," insert "as may be delegated to them by the director."

Mr. SWEET. I will say that during the time of the general debate the question arose as to whether or not the regional offices would have such power as may be delegated to them by the director.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it contemplated by the gentleman's amendment that we should give to the director the power to do that which at the bottom of page 5 we say shall not be done? By that I mean, does it include these words:

Except to make compensation and insurance awards and to grant vocational training.

Mr. SWEET. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that that only applies to the suboffices.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is all the gentleman's amendment is intended for?

Mr. SWEET. My amendment applies to the regional offices. My amendment is after the word "powers," in line 15. The same question has arisen as to whether or not the director has the right to delegate the powers to be exercised by the regional offices, and this amendment, as I believe, makes it clear that these regional offices shall have such powers as are enumerated in this section and such other powers as may be delegated to them by the director.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I have no objection to that. I am in favor of it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. My understanding was that the committee meant to give these powers to the regional offices, not by delegation of the director.

Mr. SWEET. I am frank to say to the gentleman from Texas that I understood at all times that these regional offices would have such powers as were delegated to them by the director.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then you do not want to say affirmatively in the law that they shall have power to make these awards.

Mr. SWEET. They are to have that power, and then in addition to that, such other powers as may be delegated to them by the director.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, then it will say that the director may do so and so.

Mr. SWEET. That is true. It is left to the director under this amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then under that amendment the director may confer on some regional offices the power to make final awards and withhold that power from others. What I thought we wanted was to confer by law upon all of the regional offices the power to make final awards and such other powers as the director might delegate to them.

Mr. LITTLE. If not, what is the use of having them?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, it leaves it entirely to the director to determine whether some regional offices shall have this power and others not. Does the gentleman think that is wise? Ought we not to confer upon the regional offices the power to make these awards, without leaving it to the director?

Mr. LITTLE. If not, what is the use of having them?

Mr. QUIN. I should like to have the gentleman's definition of the word "may"—"may exercise such powers." Does not the gentleman think it ought to be "shall"?

Mr. BRIGGS. If the power is given to them to do that, they will exercise it.

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

Mr. SWEET. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor. The Chair will submit the request at the conclusion of the gentleman's time.

Mr. FISH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from New York can not take the gentleman from Iowa off his feet for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Iowa has yielded to me for a question. I wish to ask him, if his amendment is adopted, the gentlemen who constitute these 14 tribunals will have no powers except those delegated to them by the director?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. LITTLE. If the director should not happen to delegate any powers to them, what would be the use of having these 14 regional offices? They could not do anything. They could not accomplish anything. The purpose of the gentleman's bill, as I understand it, is to get speedier justice for these boys; and if these 14 regional offices have no right to give them justice, if everything has got to come up here to Washington for determination, what is the use of having the 14 regional offices?

Mr. SWEET. There is no question that the director will establish these regional offices.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now submit the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWEET: Page 5, line 15, after the word "powers," insert "as may be delegated to them by the director."

Mr. DENISON rose.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], a member of the committee.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET]. The statute specifies—and we are not changing that language—that these regional offices may perform any of the duties that may be performed by the central office, but we think that ought to be done under the direction or delegation of the director of the bureau. Now, I think that is a proper amendment. If you do not do that you are going to make every one of the 14 regional offices absolutely independent of the central office, and one of the regional offices may go ahead and perform certain acts, and if the director should raise an objection or attempt to get it corrected, the head of the regional office could say "No; it shall stay as we have fixed it. We have our authority under the act of Congress and we are independent of the central office."

Now, gentlemen, I do not think we ought to have 14 veterans' bureaus in this country independent of one another. We ought to have 14 regional offices, and all of them, to some extent, accountable to the central office. There ought to be some system. There ought to be one man at the head of all of them, and these 14 offices ought to operate under uniform regulations and directions of the director.

Mr. JACOWAY. What is the use of having the regional offices at all, then?

Mr. DENISON. For the very purposes specified in the act. It can not be the intention of Congress to establish 15 veterans' bureaus, independent of each other. We must have some coordination and some responsibility to the central office.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. Why could not the purpose that gentlemen have in mind be served without the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, by putting in, after the word "may" in line 15, the words "under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the veterans' bureau," so that it will read, "Such regional officers may, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the veterans' bureau, exercise such powers for hearing complaints," and so forth.

Mr. DENISON. That would suit me all right if that would accomplish the purpose I have expressed.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand the purpose of the bill is to give the regional offices full power to act on men's claims under such regulations as will bring a uniformity of action in the regional offices.

Mr. DENISON. That is what we are trying to accomplish by the amendment, and any proper language that will accomplish that purpose is agreeable to me.

Mr. BRIGGS. The other provision puts it in the possession of the director, a power which, I think, is contrary to the provisions of the bill as reported and contrary to the wishes of the people.

Mr. DENISON. It is my idea and, I think, the idea of the gentleman from Iowa also, that the regional offices shall have all the powers enumerated in the section, but that they shall exercise them under the directions and regulations issued by the director of the bureau.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman believe that this amendment gives the regional offices this power?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. There must be some power in Washington to bring about uniformity of action in the regional offices.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; there ought to be one directing head to the bureau.

Mr. SWEET. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that my object in offering this amendment was to put it in such shape as would put it in accord, as I believe, with the ideas of our committee. That is what I had in mind. If I have not met that, I am willing to have it amended.

Mr. RAYBURN. The intent was to give the regional offices these powers, and the only thing I am insisting on is that there shall be no language put in the bill that will take it away from them.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 14, strike out the sentence beginning on line 14 and ending on line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following: Such regional offices shall, under the control of the director, have the power to hear complaints, to examine, rate, and award compensation claims; to grant medical, surgical, dental, hospital, and convalescent care and necessary and reasonable after care; to make reasonable awards; to grant vocational training; and, if delegated to them by the director, may exercise such other powers as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa offered a simple amendment limited entirely to the amount of powers that may be exercised by the regional officers. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a substitute which embodies a different subject than that included in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman's amendment is not a substitute, but an entirely different proposition; it has no relevancy to the question before the House as to whether the purpose shall be limited to the authority delegated to the director. The amendment under consideration is of an entirely different character than the proposition before the committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that to determine the propriety of the amendment offered in the nature of a substitute against the point of order raised the question for the Chair to determine is not the language of the proposed amendment in the determination of whether the language is in terms a substitute for the original amendment, but, rather, a determination of whether the idea of the substitute amendment is in reality a substitute more or less equivalent to the idea of the original amendment. With that test in mind, it seems to me that it is perfectly clear that my amendment is in order as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The idea of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa was to regulate the powers to be exercised by the regional officers under this bill.

The gentleman from Iowa has one idea, namely, that the powers which ought to be exercised by the regional offices should be limited to the powers delegated to those offices by the director. The underlying idea of the amendment which is offered as a substitute is identical, with one qualification, and that qualification is that I think the regional offices ought to be exercised automatically and without delegation of certain fundamental powers which are enumerated both in the bill and in my amendment. In other words, the issue is an extremely narrow one, as far as the substance is concerned, although I am willing to admit, if it is material, that the language of my amendment is more voluminous than the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman contend that if the amendment under consideration was that suggested by the gentleman from Texas that the powers should be under such regulations as the director may prescribe, that the gentleman's amendment would be in the nature of a substitute? The gentleman will have due time to offer his amendment after the committee has acted on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman's amendment is not a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. ROGERS. I can only repeat what I have already said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa perfects the text with respect to two propositions. It strikes out no language in the text, but the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts strikes out all of the text beginning with the sentence beginning on line 14 down to line 22. It amends the text of the bill in many particulars not touched at all by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. The Chair thinks that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not a substitute, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the Sweet amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment, as I understand it, is to give more speedy justice to the soldiers. If it does that, it is a good thing; if it does not, the bill is no good. They begin by fixing a scheme by which they establish 14 places over the country where the soldier can go and get a final conclusion whether one is right without going to Washington, and I may say in confidence to you that the gentleman is going to withdraw his amendment, so that it will stand just as printed. He can go to 14 different places and get a decision under this bill, as it will be as soon as my friend withdraws this amendment. As it is now he has to come here. That gives the man that much better opportunity to have a decision. He has 14 places where he can get a decision. You have 50 substations, so to speak, one in every State, in addition to that, and you give them some powers, but you do not give them enough. What is the use of having them? You say in the bill not as originally drawn, but as it has been changed by the committee, that these substations can not decide as to compensation, can not decide as to insurance, and can not decide as to vocational rehabilitation. How will the bill stand when the gentleman withdraws the amendment? You will have 50 places where you might as well have final decisions as not, and yet the man has to be sent to one of 14 places, perhaps a thousand miles from him. He may just as well come to Washington and be done with it. There is no use of fixing a lot of substations, 50 of them, unless you are going to have them accomplish something. If you will give to each one of them the right to hear evidence, which they have now——

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Why did the committee put in the language in respect to their powers, except as to making compensation, insurance awards, and granting vocational training? Why did they take that power away from those suboffices?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not know why they made that mistake.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman is not a member of the committee?

Mr. LITTLE. No.

Mr. QUIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The limitation on the suboffices is not a limitation on the bureau of regional offices.

Mr. LITTLE. I know it is not, and it should not be on the suboffices either.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The committee were wholly agreed that the suboffices should not have those three powers.

Mr. LITTLE. The bill was drawn the other way. It gave to the suboffices the right to make compensation and insurance awards and grant vocational training, but the committee has changed it, and they are wrong. We all make mistakes, however. If you are going to compel a soldier to depend upon 14 places that he can not get to, you may as well have him come here. If he is a thousand miles away from one of the 14 stations, he may just as well be sent to Washington. He will not have a Congressman at any one of these 14 stations to take care of him. He had better have one place at Washington where he has a friend at court who can go down and attend to his business. If you will give the 50 stations the right to make awards, as the bill originally intended, the boy can present his evidence, and, if necessary, he can go to the substation or he can have a lawyer at home go up there, and he can have somebody to protect him, or if you leave it as it is here at Washington, his Congressman will have to do it; but scatter the matter around to 14 different places, where he will be as far from some of them as he will from Washington, and you will have no improvement. I want to have read in my time for information the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not offering this amendment in his time.

Mr. LITTLE. No; I want to have it read for information in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be read for information.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 5, lines 23 and 24, after the word "director," strike out the comma and the words in lines 23 and 24.

Mr. LITTLE. That will leave the power as originally intended in those 50 substations, giving them the power to pass on a man's rights.

Mr. LAYTON. Unless the suboffices have that right to final adjudication, what is the use of it?

Mr. LITTLE. There is no use for them at all.

Mr. LAYTON. Who will confirm their findings?

Mr. LITTLE. They will have the right to hear complaints, to pass on claims and to decide on them, but as it is proposed you want to have them send up the evidence to the 14 different stations. They can examine the compensation claims, and then they have to go to these 14 stations to be heard. The 14 stations will not have the original evidence before them, but they will just have a transcript of the lower court, and a man who has not seen the case will have to decide it on the record. It is much better to let the lower court, the 50, pass on their own hearings. If they do so the claimants will secure rapid decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. This is the main point of this whole bill. If this section does not turn out properly your bill does not amount to a row of pins. It all turns on this particular section, on the point that we have been discussing. If you put this through as it now stands, you will have 50 substations that will hear all of the evidence and then check it up to one of the 14 to decide. It is better for the original 50 to decide.

If you are going to have it sent up to the 14, you may just as well have it sent here where the boy can have a chance to be heard through some friend at court. I hope the House will consider this amendment of mine very carefully, if I can get your patience, because this is extremely important.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is it the gentleman's contention now that if his amendment, which has been read for information, should prevail, the 50 suboffices would pass finally on these questions?

Mr. LITTLE. Just the same as the regional people would do.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Then, if that be true, what use would you have for the regional offices?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not know.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I thought the purpose of this law was to get rid of the red tape, or as much of it as possible.

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I am trying to do. Cut them out if you want to. There is no use building up 50 substations and going to this expense unless we utilize them and use the evidence they get. If you are going to have 14 places scattered around far from the boy, you had better let it stand just as it is and let the Congressman take care of him. Such methods will not improve his opportunities. If the plan purposed by this bill is a good one, there should be in a every State a tribunal which should hear and decide and avoid delays by sending the evidence to some of 14 points far from the claimant. If it is finally decided at a distance, you will save time by forwarding the facts proven to Washington, where his Congressman may aid the soldier. You can not help him at some "regional" center like St. Louis, Kansas City, or Boston. This is a fine bill, but a flaw in this section 6 will deprive it of all utility. This section is the hinge on which the whole proposition swings.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the Sweet amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 15, after the word "may," add the following: "Under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the director."

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, the substitute offered will not take away from the regional organization the power to make compensation and insurance awards, but will give the director power to make such rules and regulations as to prescribe uniformity and otherwise direct their activities.

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say I am in hearty favor with the thought the gentleman has in mind, but has the gentleman considered the significance of the word "such" in line 15?

Mr. BRIGGS. I did.

Mr. BURTNESS. "Such regional offices may exercise such powers." Why is the word "such" used there, unless you have to follow it up——

Mr. BRIGGS. The powers are designated in the preceding sentence to that very section, and it is only under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. BURTNESS. I would like to ask if that would not be construed, "such regional offices may exercise such powers by hearing complaints," and so forth, and all other matters delegated to them by the director?

Mr. BRIGGS. I think the powers are sufficiently specified as to indicate what shall be exercised under rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the director. If the gentleman will recall, there was an early section of the bill, I think section 3, where there was a general designation that the director shall have the power to prescribe such rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of the act, and some confusion arose as to whether it would apply in this case to regional boards, and it was for that purpose that I understood the chairman of the subcommittee offered the proposed amendment. It went further than that, it seems to me, because it took away the final power, and now it seems to me to have no power at all. This keeps the power in the regional organization subject to such rules and regulations as the director may prescribe.

Mr. SWEET. I wish to say I believe the gentleman's amendment is better than my amendment, and as far as I am concerned I am willing to accept the substitute.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not that involve a change of language a little farther down? I think the amendment does carry out the purpose in mind, but it may be necessary to change a word or two farther down in order to be harmonious.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment nominally. Gentlemen of the committee, I regard this as a very important matter, and in order that hereafter there may be no possible confusion as to the purpose of the House in passing this legislation I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee this question: You are providing here for one central office in Washington?

Mr. SWEET. That is true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If this bill passes as amended by the gentleman from Texas a soldier in Alabama, for instance, if he desired to exercise that discretion, could file his claim for compensation directly with the central office in Washington. Is that true?

Mr. SWEET. Or the regional office, or suboffice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And if he exercises that discretion, the central office in Washington has the plenary and final jurisdiction until concluded. He could not take it back to Alabama after he had filed it in Washington?

Mr. SWEET. The situation will be this, as I regard it: It will be under the direction and supervision of the director, and consequently the soldier would be required to have his case determined at the regional office or at the suboffice, or wherever it may be, under rules and regulations prescribed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, under the gentleman's construction it makes it mandatory in its last analysis. He can not file his application with the regional director. Is that true?

Mr. SWEET. It might turn out that way, although as I view it he can file his application with a suboffice, a regional office, or in Washington.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us take a concrete case in order to have a clear understanding of this matter. Suppose an Alabama soldier files his claim at Montgomery in the event an office were established there. Under this bill will that office have absolute and plenary power to consider all phases of the evidence and finally dispose of this claim?

Mr. SWEET. If it is a regional office; yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Without any supervision or review whatever from the central office in Washington?

Mr. SWEET. He will have the right of appeal if he does not get what he deems is just.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose the regional office at Montgomery misconstrues the law or puts too liberal an interpretation on the law or is too restricted in its construction of the law, what does the general office in Washington do with reference to that office——

Mr. SWEET. It operates under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the director, and it is up to him to administer this law equitably and justly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has said the suboffices have final and arbitrary power.

Mr. SWEET. I said regional offices. I did not say that they had final and arbitrary power.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What kind of power have they, then?

Mr. SWEET. They can determine upon awards as to compensation and insurance, and granting vocational training, and the like of that, and if a party is aggrieved he can make appeal here to the Washington office.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do you make provision for that?

Mr. SWEET. A provision will be made under the rules and regulations of the director.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not prescribed in the bill?

Mr. SWEET. It is not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to express a good deal of anxiety, I will say very frankly, as to the practical administration of this bill under those circumstances. I very seriously doubt the wisdom, although it might make for some expediency in the administration of these claims, to withdraw the restraining end of the central administration here in Washington absolutely and turn it over to the arbitrary decision of the regional offices.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not find anything in this section that would give them that arbitrary power, unless the director made such rules and regulations as would entitle them to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The chairman of the committee says that is the purpose of the committee, and that is the reason I am raising this question.

Mr. SWEET. Now, if the gentleman has misunderstood me, let me say this. This is what I said, namely, that at these regional offices they will have the right to pass upon compensation and insurance claims; that is, to make the awards, and they will also have authority to grant vocational training, and that will be subject to review at the Washington office. In addition to that, I call his attention to section 2, which says:

> The director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall administer, execute, and enforce the provisions of this act, and for that purpose shall have full power and authority to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this act but which are necessary or appropriate to carry out its purposes, and shall decide all questions arising under this act except as otherwise provided herein.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then that means that the powers are not conferred upon these regional offices that the gentleman alleges are conferred upon them, to wit, that they have arbitrary and final jurisdiction to settle and determine this question?

Mr. SWEET. I have denied that twice. I have not said they have arbitrary power. The gentleman puts that in my statement. I said that they have a right to pass upon them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What does that mean?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWEET. To pass upon it; but not arbitrarily.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWEET. To answer the gentleman's question, I would say that they do not pass upon it arbitrarily but under proper rules and regulations prescribed by the director.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then they have no absolute and definite power to determine the merits of the case?

Mr. SWEET. They determine them except in cases where they have been appealed as provided under rules and regulations prescribed by the director.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, that is the information I want to get. In the last analysis the central office is not surrendering its supervision?

Mr. SWEET. It is not.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is bringing about an invitation to appeal these cases, and ultimately it is going to cause more delay.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last half of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment. Have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has offered an amendment that is in order.

Mr. LITTLE. I moved to strike out the last half of the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE to the substitute offered by Mr. BRIGGS:
> Strike out the last half of the substitute.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to attract the attention, in this connection, of the gentleman from Iowa to the language, which seems to me to dispose of the inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. This bill says:

> Such regional officers may exercise such powers as may be performed lawfully under this act by the central office.

There is some confusion now on this floor as to just what the committee means. But the language is susceptible of the interpretation that the regional officials can come to a final conclusion. If so, we relieve the central office of much of its labor and expedite the claims of the soldiers. If every case must come to Washington for final determination we will lose time, not gain.

If this bill passes in its present form, each regional office shall exercise such powers as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office, and that is what it says. I take it that that means just what it says; that these regional institutions can do anything that the central office could do, which means that they could issue regulations, too. I expect that is what it means.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In just one minute. It is true that the central office is given power to issue regulations. It says so. But that is not all. It says they shall issue such regulations as shall not be inconsistent with the law. The bill apparently says the regional office shall have all the powers the central office has, and to prescribe regulations would be inconsistent with the law; so that when you come down to the finish it means that the regional powers can settle the whole thing. There seems no escape from it. As this bill provides now, the courts will probably hold that the regional powers have ultimate and absolute authority—arbitrary, the gentleman says.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Why does the gentleman want to amend it if they have that? I think they ought to have that power.

Mr. LITTLE. I will withdraw my amendment, having expressed my views on the subject. My amendment was a pro forma amendment, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I sent an amendment to the Clerk's desk a moment ago that I would like to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Indiana: Page 5, line 10, after the word "exceeding," strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and forty."

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the number of suboffices. Suboffices, as I understand it, will have no powers of consequence in administering the law. They are more for the purpose of getting the wounded soldier in touch with the bureau than anything else. At present the Vocational Education Board have about 140 substations. They have three in Indiana. The district office is at Cincinnati, Ohio. They have 14 general regional offices, and Cincinnati is one of these offices, and we are supplied from that center. We have a suboffice at Evansville, one at Indianapolis, and one at South Bend, Ind.

If this bill becomes the law as it is written, we will have only 50 suboffices, and we could only possibly have but one suboffice in Indiana, and probably one in Illinois, with the result that a boy in Evansville, for example, would have to travel two or three hundred miles if he wanted to get in personal contact with the bureau.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. What is the difference in the powers that the suboffices have now as compared with what the offices will have under this bill?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Probably they have more power under the vocational board at the present time than they would have under this law. This law specifically provides that they shall not have certain powers.

In Indiana we have now three places where our boys can go to get information as to what they can have and what they are entitled to and where they can go to get it. Under this law we shall have but one substation in Indiana. The main regional office will be in Cincinnati, probably, and this is too far away to help much. We ought at least to have as many suboffices under this great bureau as we have to-day under the vocational board.

Mr. QUIN. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is adopted. Then how about the limitation of the number?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not think we should do away with the regional offices in favor of the suboffices. In my opinion the suboffices will be merely places for getting information and for getting positions after taking training and not places for the adjudication of the claims.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. JACOWAY. The suboffices have not the power of adjudication and determining vocational training?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. No; I do not think they ought to have that power; but we should have a number of suboffices where the boys can get in touch with the proper authorities. If we have only 50 suboffices where we now have 140, we will be taking the boys farther away from the benefits of the act than they already are. We have been talking about bringing the office closer to the soldier. Let us act accordingly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The existence of 140 suboffices was only correct with relation to the vocational board. The Bureau of War Risk has no suboffices at all; neither has the Public Health Service.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Some of the functions of the War Risk and the Public Health are located with the 14 regional offices now.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the committee thought that as between the 140 which the vocational board has and the none possessed by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, 50 would be enough.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. You thought if they had more duties to perform they ought to have fewer offices?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; not at all.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I think if you have more duties you ought to have more offices; and since you are taking in all the activities in which the soldier boys are interested, I feel that you ought to bring them nearer together and have more or at least as many suboffices than you have had under the vocational board.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bureau never has asked for any such number.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The vocational board asked for them, and the boys are getting in touch with them, and now you are taking them away and cutting them down to 50. We need them. This is a big proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The law will not prevent suboffices being scattered out all over the country.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Only 50. An average of one to a State. But the boys do not know where they are. Let us have an office where the boy will know where it is, and where he will not have to travel 500 miles to get the information he wants.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would have to establish one in every county under the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. We already have three in Indiana, but not one in every county. Why not have them under this bill? The benefits under this law mean more than compensations or pensions; it means training and procuring employment after training. We never had this problem put up to us until after the World War.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think from the study I have been able to give this bill that it contains a great deal of necessary legislation; I fear it contains some legislation that will not be beneficial. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET] know, I have always had some question with regard to this provision. Instead of increasing the number of these suboffices, I doubt the wisdom of creating any, and feel that we are not going to get the benefit from them that the committee feel the soldiers will receive through them.

After the Civil War Congress by legislation created 18 pension agencies throughout the United States to distribute the pensions; these agents had other duties also. Twenty years ago, after repeated reports from the Secretary of the Interior, a fight was begun to eliminate those pension agencies. Secretary Garfield reported that a saving of $350,000 a year could be made by the abolition of those offices without any detriment to the service or delay in the distribution of the pensions, yet nothing was done. That fight continued year after year, and after it had continued for 15 years or more Congress finally did repeal that legislation just a few years ago. The repeal was followed by an administration of the act that reduced expenditures $225,000 a year, and the pensioners received their pensions more promptly than they ever had before.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. In just a minute. These offices were political offices pure and simple. There was one in my State. There was one in nearly every Northern State. They were looked upon as political offices. Now, I shall not offer any amendment here, and I only rise to express my fear that these offices will be political offices. When Mr. Cholmeley-Jones came before the Committee on Appropriations and asked for the creation of these offices he said he felt that these would grow into political offices, and that he had no opposition to fixing the time when they should be abolished. My recollection is that he suggested either three or perhaps five years. It was a very short time. Now, I shall not offer any amendment. May I suggest to gentlemen, however, who have studied this matter and given it a great deal more thought than I have, if now is not the time to place some limit when these regional offices and these suboffices shall be abolished; for after the compensation has been fixed, when the question of vocational education is behind us, and those problems are out of the way, then let the law be administered from Washington.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. With reference to the pension law, the gentleman knows that those agencies were branch offices for the payment of pensions.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that was largely the case.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They were not for purposes of adjudication at all.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; to some extent. The examiners went out from those agencies and examined the pensioners. Under the law there was a board of examiners, composed—in part, at least—of physicians, and when a pensioner made application for a pension or for an increase of pension and he lived in a certain district the information was sent to the pension agent in that district and then some of the work was done there.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. That was long after the pension business had been established and after the soldier had got in touch with the Federal Government.

Mr. GOOD. These soldiers are in touch with the Federal Government.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Not all of them; you have new ones every day.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will yield, I want to supplement what the gentleman from Iowa says—the House of Representatives passed a bill four times before they could get that legislation.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know what limitation ought to go on here, but I am pretty well satisfied in my own mind and the former Director of the War Risk Bureau was satisfied that it ought not to be a general law extending for all time.

[The time of Mr. GOOD having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. GOOD. I wondered if we could not by limitation here fix the time when these offices should go out of existence.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BEEDY. We had our attention called recently to some activities of the local boards, and I notice that we have one of these boards in the State of Maine. The duties of the local boards are entirely different from those given the regional boards under the new act. Would the gentleman or the committee object to an amendment to limit the number of local offices to such as the director might find best adapted to the efficiency of the bureau?

Mr. GOOD. Well, I am not in charge of the bill.

Mr. BEEDY. Has the gentleman any idea of what the effect would be on these communities which have only one local office if this was adopted in the present form?

Mr. GOOD. I have not any opinion on that subject that would be worth anything. Now, in regard to the salaries paid to the officers, you have 14 regional offices and 50 suboffices, with no limit as to salary?

Mr. SWEET. Nothing more than that we provide that the provisions in the appropriation bill restricting salaries shall prevail.

Mr. GOOD. That is for next year only; when this comes up next year for appropriation for the following year, if a Member of the House wanted to offer an amendment appropriating $10,000 for the salary of the regional officers that would be in order.

Mr. SWEET. Of course, the whole matter of salaries would be under the director of the bureau.

Mr. GOOD. No; that would be within the discretion of Congress, I take it. The director will only estimate for the appropriation, but Congress must grant the money.

Mr. SWEET. That is true; but probably when the matter is taken up again there would be some legislation in regard to salaries. In other words, it is the thought of the committee that in the first instance, organizing the bureau, we are unable to give the number of sections, the number of divisions, the number that will necessarily be employed, what the reasonable salaries are to be; and so that is left largely to the discretion of the director; but we did not waive the provision put in the appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. I can well understand how a committee intrusted with legislation of this kind is up in the air, so to speak, in determining what the salaries should be, but it seems to me that there ought to be some limitation, if possible, and it is better to fix salaries first than to let the men fix them. I have some fears about this particular part of the bill. I am afraid that you are creating a political machine that you are never going to get rid of unless you put in the act itself a provision that these regional offices shall cease to exist after a period of, say, 5 or 10 years at the most, or fix some limitation. Forty years after the close of the Civil War we had engrafted on the Government a political machine that cost us $225,000 a year, and former Secretary Garfield said it was costing $350,000 a year. I am not going to offer an amendment, but I suggest it for what it is worth, whether it would not be wise now to put a provision in this bill that the regional offices shall cease to exist after a period of 5 or 10 years. It seems to me that is a reasonable limitation. If you do not do something like this, I say to you that I fear you will not get rid of them for the next 50 years.

Mr. LINEBERGER. That would not prevent their extension if Congress thought it was necessary.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; but the trouble is that when you once create a political machine you will not get the Senate to abolish it. The Senator from your State will appoint the regional officers and the Members of the House will have nothing to say. You give a Senator a political office and you have got to take it away from him with instruments if you get it away from him at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. I am opposed to the amendment offered by my colleague from Indiana increasing the number of suboffices to 140. I have considerable sympathy with the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that a time limit be put on the decentralization, and as far as I am personally concerned—and I know some members of the committee seem to feel the same way—there would be no objection to limiting the duration of the life of these offices.

When it comes to the question of how many suboffices shall be created for this bill, we have two conflicting principles. One is the idea of bringing the activity as near as possible to the soldier. Of course, that is a very desirable thing. The other is the creating of only such number of tribunals or suboffices as shall be consistent with giving careful consideration of the interests of the soldier. We have a number of suboffices, so far as vocational training is concerned. We do not have a great number of suboffices so far as the activities of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance are concerned. We have not any provided by law, but there are some subdivisions of that office. We have still a less number so far as the Public Health offices are concerned. We have combined those three activities. Shall we give 140 suboffices so as to give 140 tribunals that shall be acting for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance?

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. I should like to know where, with reference to the States, each one of these 50 offices will be located? Will there be one in each State in the Union?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is a matter of detail that we leave to the director. The act does not locate the suboffices. Gentlemen, I think it is very important that these suboffices be not increased to such great degree that they will not be responsible positions. We have 14 regional bureaus——

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. What does the gentleman mean by "responsible positions"? You do not give them any power in the bill. It is only what is delegated by the director. The bill does not give them any power. What power are you going to give them except to be an office for the boy to get in touch with?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. These suboffices have entire jurisdiction of everything that shall be delegated to them by the director except the power to make compensation and insurance awards and grant vocational training. They have complete power so far as hospitalization is concerned; they have complete power in those matters which require speedy action.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They may be given complete power.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. They may be given complete power. We have undertaken to create an organization here, putting the matters of detail in respect to the organization in the hands of the director of the veterans' bureau and letting him work out the entire matter. We have not undertaken to hamper him in fixing the different powers and duties in the law, except as to the regional board.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true that under this provision the suboffice could be given power to rate the degree of disability of the applicant?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. So far as making a recommendation is concerned, yes. They can not make a compensation award.

Mr. HUSTED. They could not make the award, but they could rate the degree of disability?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know just what would be included in that technical term, but they could take any step delegated to them that is not included in the making of a compensation award.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the bill we are now considering is exactly contrary to what it is claimed to be. The title of the bill says it is to improve facilities, yet you are cutting the suboffices to 50 where there are 140 actually used and nine more authorized, and yet you say you are improving facilities. You are not enacting the bill that the soldiers asked for, and you know it. Every soldier and every soldier organization in the country is opposed to this bill as it stands here to-day. You can not find one organization that will tell you it is in favor of this bill. Here is a letter from the commander and telegrams are coming to-day from the assistant department commander, the head of the Red Cross, and others, all of them saying that this section 6 is worse than no bill at all, and that is the kind of a bill that you are undertaking to put through. You are cutting down these offices and taking away the jurisdiction they have to-day. Look at the different cities. Eleven States have more offices than are created under this bill, lacking one. Are you going to put one in Texas and send the people across that great State, where they have nine to-day? Is that what the Texas boys want? And yet you say you are improving these facilities. It only takes 24 hours to pass a claim in one of these suboffices to-day and have it completed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Not at this time; maybe when I get through. I am going to ask to read some of these telegrams that have come to-day on this subject, signed by people that you stated here two or three days ago were satisfied. I say to you that they are beginning to learn, and by day after to-morrow morning you will have telegrams from all parts of the country, from the department commanders, saying that this is not the bill that they recommended. You are making it worse than it was before. Eight hundred and twenty-seven are taking training in Cleveland alone. Are you going to take the office away from them? To-day there are five officers in Ohio; the headquarters are at Cincinnati, but no one is complaining. And there is one suboffice in Toledo that is doing a good business, one at Columbus, and one at Dayton.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Not now; not until I read these figures. The eligible list is 914. One thousand nine hundred and seventy in the city of Cleveland alone are entitled to this training. Yet you are going to take this office away from them and send them down across the State. I say to you that that is not improving facilities—not much.

Gentlemen, I can not find a single commander in the United States to-day who favors this bill, not one. I am going to read one telegram—there are perhaps two or three more which I would like to read—which I received this morning:

> The Sweet bill (H. R. No. 3) will be relief to long-suffering disabled veterans only if the principle involved in section 6 as originally drawn is carried out. If passed with section 6 as amended by committee, 2-year fight for disabled will have been in vain. On behalf of the American Legion of Ohio, I urge you to support Sweet bill with section 6 as originally drawn.

That is signed by J. R. McQuigg, department commander of Ohio.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman explain the original amendment No. 6?

Mr. NORTON. I have a copy of it right here. Here is the original section 6——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHALMERS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. This is section 6 as originally drawn. It has since been changed:

> SEC. 6. The director shall establish a central office in Washington, D. C., and not more than 14 regional offices and such suboffices within the territory of the United States and its outlying possessions as may be deemed necessary by him and in the best interests of the work committed to the veterans' bureau and to carry out the purposes of this act. Any such regional office or suboffice may exercise such powers, including the establishment of agencies for hearing complaints and for examining, rating, and awarding compensation claims, granting medical, surgical, dental, and hospital care, convalescence care, insurance awards, pension awards, and all other matters delegated to these agencies by the director as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office.

Now, here is what they say right after this. I am quoting from a letter from the office of the national commander of the American Legion under date of June 1, 1921:

> This section was reported favorably by the subcommittee, but amended by the Committee of the Whole in the following language: "Except to make compensation and insurance awards and grant vocational training."

It did not cut them to 50, but it gave these powers, and they want the powers they practically have to-day. And the last paragraph of the letter of the national commander says:

> On behalf of the American Legion, which for two years has labored unceasingly to relieve the disabled, I urge upon every Member of the Congress his support of section 6 of H. R. 3 as originally drawn.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. I will.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of giving the regional director unlimited authority to establish as many departmental offices as he chooses? For instance, under the resolution he can put one in every county of the United States if he so desires.

Mr. NORTON. I will say this: That the regional director is supposed to be a man knowing what is right, and I do not suppose he would do what was wrong, and he is in a far better position to determine what is needed in his district than the Members of Congress here in Washington. Now, in regard to the speech made a moment ago about the old, disabled soldiers, of course some consider it unfortunate that it did not cover the southern soldiers. I would like to know what man here on this side was or is opposed to the pensions that have been granted to the old soldiers. Where is the man who will say that now? I am in favor of the money that has been expended that way. I want this money now expended with northern soldiers and southern soldiers alike. Why, you told these men when they went to war that you would see to it that you would make them whole. Why, money does not count with these armless and legless men. I want to say to you, gentlemen, the time has not come when we should cut down these offices. I had an amendment providing that they should continue for three years, and at the end of three years all of this, practically, will be over as far as these different parties who have been injured and vocational education are concerned. You have only got three years to look after these boys, and it was only a mighty short time ago when you were saying, "Boys, go to the front; we will see that you are taken care of when you come back." How many are doing it to-day? Now, not only the soldier organizations but the Red Cross are opposed to this change in section 6. Here is a telegram, signed by Col. D. H. Pond, Cleveland Red Cross, saying that they do not want this amendment as it is put in here. Gentlemen, you are spending millions, and if you comply with the wishes of those who defended the country you will never regret it, because in the future it will speak for you. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6611, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday rule to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House dispense with the business in order under Calendar Wednesday rule to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object. I do not want to interfere with the procedure of the House, but I hope we will soon have an opportunity to take up some matters from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MONDELL. Next week.

UMI

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Only on Monday the argument was made that because the committee was soon to be reached we were not to have our day in court.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. What business is it proposed to take up to-morrow instead of Calendar Wednesday business?

Mr. MONDELL. To continue the bill now before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COLORADO FLOOD SUFFERERS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the House has heard with profound regret of the disaster that recently took place in Colorado, and I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 148) for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to take such temporary sanitary measures as he may deem necessary and to furnish subsistence and quartermaster supplies belonging to the Military Establishment and available, and issue the same to such destitute persons in Colorado as have been rendered homeless or are in needy circumstances as a result of the recent flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries, and in executing this joint resolution the Secretary of War is directed so far as possible to cooperate with the authorities of the State of Colorado and the mayors of such cities on the Arkansas River or its tributaries as may have sustained damages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not do so, I would like to ask a question. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman if the governor of this State has sent a formal request to the War Department or any other department for this assistance? I understand it is customary in cases of this kind to present such a request.

Mr. KAHN. It is not customary, so far as I know. I happen to represent the city of San Francisco. I was here in 1906, when that city was overwhelmed by earthquake and fire, and Congress, without any request on the part of the governor, immediately passed resolutions of this kind.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. I would like to say to the gentleman that the governor has made the request of those here in Congress, and elsewhere in the Government, for a larger amount of assistance than we are asking for here.

I have received telegrams from those in authority in Pueblo telling of their desperate condition and asking for substantial aid. This measure will be helpful, but does not afford all the relief that this devastated section is in need of. The telegrams from Pueblo are as follows:

PUEBLO, COLO., June 6, 1921.

GUY U. HARDY,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

Late estimates of total property and crop damage between Canon City and State line is from fifteen to twenty million dollars. Damage in Pueblo, city and county alone, will total six to eight million dollars. Federal Government expends millions of dollars to improve and repair levees in all sections of country. We now ask Federal Government to appropriate sum of $5,000,000, of which the sum of $2,000,000 may be immediately available, for purposes of repairing and improving Arkansas River and Fountain River levees and removing débris from cities damaged, of which Pueblo should have at least one and a half million dollars immediately. Impossible to ascertain loss of life, owing to impossibility of removing débris without great financial assistance, but Pueblo alone will show several hundred people drowned when débris is removed.

JAMES L. LOVERN,
President City Council.
FRANK S. HOAG,
Chairman Levee Repair Committee.
E. E. WITHERS,
President Pueblo Water Works.
C. K. MCHARG,
President Arkansas Valley Ditch Association.

PUEBLO, COLO., June 6, 1921.

GUY U. HARDY,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

To-day's developments, including the current floods, make former estimates to you very conservative. We need help at once. Would suggest Federal investigator at once.

JAMES L. LOVERN,
President City Council.
FRANK S. HOAG,
Chairman Levee Repair Committee.
E. E. WITHERS,
President Pueblo Water Works.
C. K. MCHARG,
President Arkansas Valley Ditch Association.

Mr. KAHN. I will say further for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] that I am under the impression that the War Department is already doing some of this work, on account of the acute condition that exists there. Of course, unless we pass some resolution of this kind, I take it that the officials might be impeached for violating the law. But I think it has always been customary for Congress, upon the happening of a great disaster of this kind, to pass this sort of a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

MINORITY VIEWS ON PEACE RESOLUTION.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] may have two days in which to present minority views on the peace resolution. I make this request in accordance with an arrangement between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] and the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to take up the peace resolution day after to-morrow. Will this interfere with the consideration of it?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] understands that it is the plan of the House to take up the peace resolution on Thursday, and I think there will be no disposition on his part to delay the consideration of it.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure there will be no disposition to delay, but on a former occasion, where permission was granted to file minority views, it was urged later that that time had not fully expired, and that therefore it was not proper to take the matter up for consideration. With the understanding that there will be no objection to taking the peace resolution up should we reach it day after to-morrow, I would have no objection to the granting of the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Wyoming to call up the peace resolution whether we finish the bill under consideration or not?

Mr. MONDELL. I hope we shall finish the bill under consideration by to-morrow night.

Mr. BARKLEY. We all hope that, but in the event we do not finish it, then what?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course that is a matter that we would have to decide after consultation with the gentlemen in charge of this bill. Most of the Members of the House understand that we are going to take up the peace resolution, if possible, on Thursday, and if we do not finish the bill now pending before the House the question would then arise, and it would be settled largely, I take it, on the judgment of the gentlemen in charge of this bill whether or no we will take up the peace resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume, considering the time devoted to that subject last year, it would probably take two or three days to dispose of the peace resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. We expect to dispose of it Thursday or Friday.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. BEGG. I was going to say that unless the request was modified I would object. I am perfectly willing to give them until 12 o'clock Wednesday night. They only wanted until Tuesday. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] will modify his request I will have no objection. Otherwise I will have to object.

Mr. ROGERS. I will modify my request. I think it will be agreeable to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]. I think the purpose is to present his minority views to-morrow night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts modifies his request and asks that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] may present the minority views at any time until 12 o'clock to-morrow night. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until 12 o'clock to-night in which to file the conference report on the bill H. R. 6300, the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that he may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file the conference report on the deficiency bill for printing under the rule. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I presume the gentleman desires to have it incorporated in to-morrow's RECORD also?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What became of the $53,000,000 additional that the Senate placed on the bill?

Mr. GOOD. There will not be much of that remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 158. An act for the relief of certain estates;

S. 1574. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange with foreign nations desiring the same samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States;

S. 1360. An act authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition;

S. 257. An act providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana;

S. 1183. An act to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended;

S. 258. An act concerning actions on account of death or personal injury within places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States;

S. J. Res. 43. Joint resolution to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.;

S. J. Res. 25. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War;

S. 997. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 657. An act to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the issue of a warrant for the arrest and removal of persons under indictment for offenses against the United States; and

S. J. Res. 5. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to take part in an exposition at Portland, Oreg., in 1925.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 89) for the public sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street in the city of Bethlehem, Pa.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 257. An act providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 258. An act concerning actions on account of death or personal injury within places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 657. An act to amend section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to authorize the issue of a warrant for the arrest and removal of persons under indictment for offenses against the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 997. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1183. An act to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1574. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange with foreign nations desiring the same samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 5. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to take part in an exposition at Portland, Oreg., in 1925; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. J. Res. 25. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the dead of the First Division, American Expeditionary Forces, in the World War; to the Committee on the Library.

S. 158. An act for the relief of certain estates; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 43. Joint resolution to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

S. 1360. An act authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the Sweet bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the pending bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 8, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

157. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an urgent request that the House pass House bill 5756, which provides for the increase of the limit of the indebtedness of the Philippine Government from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TOWNER, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6557) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and rebuild customs buildings in Porto Rico, and to pay for same out of duties collected in Porto Rico, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 147), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 8, 1921.

(Legislative day of Monday, June 6, 1921.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS IN COLORADO.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 148) for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 148) for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries was read twice by its title.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, inasmuch as this joint resolution is identical with the one passed by the Senate on yesterday, I ask unanimous consent that it may be put on its passage.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to take such temporary sanitary measures as he may deem necessary and to furnish subsistence and quartermaster supplies belonging to the Military Establishment and available, and issue the same to such destitute persons in Colorado as have been rendered homeless or are in needy circumstances as a result of the recent flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries, and in executing this joint resolution the Secretary of War is directed so far as possible to cooperate with the authorities of the State of Colorado and the mayors of such cities on the Arkansas River or its tributaries as may have sustained damages.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question? This is substantially the same joint resolution that we passed yesterday afternoon?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is identical in language with the joint resolution passed by the Senate yesterday afternoon.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, considered the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Broussard	Harris	Nelson	Underwood
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Wadsworth
Capper	Kenyon	Phipps	Warren
Culberson	King	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Cummins	Knox	Shortridge	Weller

Dial	La Follette	Smith	Willis
Dillingham	Lenroot	Smoot	Wolcott
Fletcher	Lodge	Spencer
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Swanson
Hale	McLean	Trammell

Mr. CAPPER. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are in attendance at a meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on account of a death in his family.

I wish also to announce that my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] is absent on public business, and that both the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. BURSUM, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. ODDIE, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. STANFIELD, Mr. STANLEY, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WALSH of Montana answered to their names when called.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. BALL, Mr. GERRY, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. KEYES, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. NORBECK, Mr. GOODING, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. BORAH, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. KELLOGG entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions, letters, and a telegram in the nature of petitions of the pastor and congregation of the Linden Avenue Baptist Church, of Dayton; Rev. Orville L. Kiplinger, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Mansfield; the pastor and congregation of the United Congregational Church of Oberlin; the pastor and congregation of the First Friends Church of Van Wert; Rev. Paul J. Gilbert, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Bowling Green; Rev. J. L. Langhorne, pastor of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and sundry citizens of Martins Ferry; the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Leipsic; the pastor and congregation of the Poland Presbyterian Church, of Poland; the pastor and congregation of Grace Lutheran Church, of East Palestine; and the pastor and congregation of the Church of Our Saviour, of Akron, all in the State of Ohio; and the pastor and congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of College Corner, Ind., favoring the calling of an international conference for the purpose of considering the question of a reduction of armaments and of world disarmament; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented a resolution of the Boston Branch of the American and British Federation, of Boston, Mass., protesting against the recognition of the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented three petitions of sundry citizens of Howard, Beloit, Asherville, Danville, Harper, Argonia, Sawyer, Duquoin, Runnymede, and Norwich, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 843) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 98) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Martha F. Acton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2006) granting a pension to Jennie M. Hichborn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2007) to amend section 304 of the revenue act of 1918; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2008) for the relief of George Simpson and R. C. Dunbar; and

A bill (S. 2009) for the relief of C. M. Perkins; to the Committee on Claims.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 88), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, directed during the Sixty-seventh Congress to investigate and ascertain the quantity of war materials, equipment, and supplies of any and every kind now in the possession of the War Department; the pay of all civilian employees engaged in the care of such materials, equipment, and supplies, together with all costs incident to the care of said property, and to report to the Senate how much, if any, of said care is unnecessary; to investigate and report as to all real estate now owned and held for the use of the Army, and whether any of such real estate should be sold; and to investigate and report as to the necessity of maintaining the present number of Army camps, cantonments, and posts.

Said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigations; and to employ such clerical assistants as may be necessary.

All of the expenses incurred in furtherance of the purposes of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

NAVAL CONFIRMATIONS EN BLOC.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call this to the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. A few days ago, when we had the naval appropriation bill before the Senate for consideration, I introduced an amendment in the discussion of which I stated that we have been confirming men here en bloc when all the nominations were irregular. I illustrated one case, but the Senator from Washington made a point of order and cut me out. However, I find that to-day more nominations are presented which are not in order and that are not regular. I have a letter with reference to the matter which I should like to put in the RECORD to show that we have been confirming men en bloc when the nominations were not regular. I call it to the attention of the Senator from Washington. I should like to have the letter read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1921.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: I notice that you recently, on the floor of the Senate, asked for an investigation relative to the confirmation en bloc of certain nominations from the Navy Department.

Along the latter part of April or the first of May the Senate confirmed a large number of officers in the Marine Corps. These officers had been selected for permanent commissions in the Marine Corps by a selection board created by the Secretary of the Navy, and it appears that in so doing 190 permanent marine officers have been deprived of rights to promotion guaranteed by sections 7 and 10 of the act of May 22, 1917. These two sections are set out on pages 2 and 3 of a memorandum on promotions in the Marine Corps and the laws relating thereto, which I am herewith sending you.

I have requested the Secretary of the Navy to reconvene the selection board for revision of its proceedings, and in the meantime call on the Attorney General for an opinion construing this promotion law for the guidance of the board, and if you can see your way clear to use your best efforts to cause this to be done I would greatly appreciate it, and so will the officers concerned.

Very truly, yours, W. W. SCOTT.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is nothing in the statement contained in the letter which has just been read which indicates that any of the nominations which were sent to the Senate by the Secretary of the Navy were in any way irregular. The statement merely claims that certain other classes of officers—not those who were nominated, but other officers—were entitled to promotion under an old law. The Secretary of the Navy was of the opinion that they were not entitled to promotion. The letter relates to officers whose names have not been sent to the Senate and not to those whose names were sent to the Senate. But, however that may be, I am very glad, indeed, to have the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] call attention to the matter. I also have received a letter from Mr. Scott, the writer of the letter which has been read. He is an attorney in this city, who, I suppose, is retained by the officers who were not promoted, and who claim the right to promotion. I shall be very glad, indeed, to take the matter up with the Navy Department and have it investigated and a report thereon made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall be very glad if the Senator from Washington will do that. As to the case I had in mind the other day, the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled just as I contended, that the officer who received the promotion is not entitled to it. It was that matter which I desired the Senator from Washington to allow to go to conference to be investigated. I repeat that since that time the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that the officer to whom I have referred is not entitled to the pay he received.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from North Carolina give me the name of that officer?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not like to name him, but I will give the Senator from Washington a copy of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury to which I have referred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like the Senator to furnish me with the name of the officer, and I will join with him in investigating the matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will furnish the Senator from Washington with the name of the officer.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 54, line 7, before the words "student officers," to insert "not to exceed 50"; and in line 8, after the word "institutions," to insert: "in addition to the 2 per cent of commissioned officers authorized to attend technical, professional, and other educational institutions as provided for in section 127a of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920," so as to read:

ENGINEER SCHOOL.

Equipment and maintenance of the Engineer School, including purchase and repair of instruments, machinery, implements, models, boats, and materials for the use of the school and to provide means for the theoretical and practical instruction of Engineer officers and troops in their special duties as sappers and miners; for land mining, pontoniering, and signaling; for purchase and binding of scientific and professional works, papers, and periodicals treating on military engineering and scientific subjects, textbooks and books of reference for the library of the United States Engineer School; for incidental expenses of the school, including chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, and boats; for pay of civilian clerks, draftsmen, electricians, mechanics, and laborers; compensation of civilian lecturers and payment of tuition fees of not to exceed 50 student officers at civil technical institutions in addition to the 2 per cent of commissioned officers authorized to attend technical, professional, and other educational institutions as provided for in section 127a of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York the effect of the amendments reported by the committee which have just been stated? I should be glad to have the Senator state the purposes of each of those amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, under existing law the War Department may send officers to technical institutions, to colleges and universities to take special courses. There is a limitation, expressed in percentages, on the number which may be so sent. A peculiar situation exists in the Engineer Corps. A large number of graduates from West Point have not had the full training which is ordinarily given in the West Point course, they having been graduated with their classes ahead of schedule during the recent war and just at the close of the war, and a number of them have been commissioned in the Engineer Corps. Those young officers have not really completed their engineering instruction or training. They have been sent to Camp Humphreys to take the best course which can be prescribed at that place, but the Engineer Corps, through the Chief of Engineers, and with the approval of the Secretary of War, is exceedingly anxious to send some of those young officers to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and to the Troy Polytechnic Institute to take an additional special course, so that they will catch up in the quickest and most effective manner with the standards which they would have attained had they remained at West Point for four years. These two amendments, taken together, permit that to be done, the number of officers being sent to those institutions not to exceed 50.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, at this point I desire to propose three amendments to the items which are found on pages 54 and 55. The three amendments will not result in any increase of expenditure.

The best information which I have received—and that quite recently—is that the engineer school at Camp Humphreys, for the support of which $35,000 is appropriated, on line 21, page 54, of the pending bill, can scarcely get along with that amount, owing to the additional number of young officers who have been sent there and must be maintained there while they are undergoing special instruction. The department asks that that amount be increased to $45,000, that it be increased by $10,000, and that the appropriation for $150,000 for "engineer equipment of troops," which is found on line 5 of the next page of the bill, be decreased by $5,000, and also that the appropriation for "engineering operations in the field," which is found on line 20, of page 55, be decreased by $5,000; in other words, to decrease two of the appropriations by $5,000 each and add the $10,000 to the first appropriation mentioned.

Mr. KING. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New York, if those changes are made and that accretion is given, will it not be a precedent so that next time $45,000 will be asked for the school?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Utah that there has not been a precedent followed in this bill. The amounts appropriated by the bill are so far below what were asked by all of the bureaus and branches of the Army which are concerned that I challenge the Senator to find a precedent in the whole bill. There will not be any precedent for next year. The Army is still in a state of flux.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 54, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "$35,000" and to insert "$25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Also on page 55, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$150,000" and to insert "$145,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Also on page 55, line 20, after the words "Maps, War Department," it is proposed to strike out "$225,000" and to insert "$220,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 26, on page 59.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what steps are being taken, if any, to reduce the activities of the arsenals of the United States? I find an appropriation in the bill of $375,000 for automatic machine rifles. The presumption was that when the war was over we had a surplus of all kinds of munitions of war—rifles, cannon, and so on. In view of the fact we have such a tremendous supply, does the committee deem it necessary to make this appropriation for automatic machine rifles?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the arsenals and manufacturing activities of the Ordnance Department are running on a very severely reduced basis. Perhaps I can indicate what steps are being taken in reducing those activities by stating what the department asked for in two or three of these instances and what this bill gives. On page 59, for the manufacture of arms the revised estimate was $500,000; that was the last and lowest figure presented by the department.

The appropriation is $400,000, and with that appropriation the Springfield Arsenal is maintained at a rate which will turn out about 75 rifles per day, which is not enough to provide for the wastage in the Springfield rifles.

Mr. KING. The Senator is aware, of course, of the fact that the fortifications bill, as I recall, deals in part, if not wholly, with arsenals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not; it merely deals with the arsenals that make artillery and artillery ammunition. This bill deals with the small-arms manufacture and small-arms ammunition. As a matter of fact, this bill ought to carry the fortifications bill, and, if I have anything to say about it next year, it will.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator on that point. As I remember, the fortifications appropriation bill has considerable to do with arsenals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has.

Mr. OVERMAN. Appropriations have been made for them in separate measures, but I think they all ought to be combined and be considered by one committee and not by two.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. As has been suggested, there are appropriations for arsenals in the fortifications bill. Whether that bill covers the item now under discussion in the pending bill I do not know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The item under discussion relates to the Springfield Arsenal, and is for its maintenance and operation. If appropriations for the arsenal were to be reduced below the amount carried, it might just as well be closed entirely.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that Admiral Sims, in testimony which he recently gave before the Senate committee, animadverted upon our fortifications program. I ask the Senator to consider that testimony, because Admiral Sims declares that we need but little, if anything, for fortifications, in view of the development of submarines and aircraft, and that the money spent for our fortification is largely wasted. That is the legitimate deduction to be drawn from his testimony.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The allocation of appropriation bills to various committees, which took place some years ago, resulted in a certain division of military subjects, the reason for which does not appear at first blush; but nevertheless it has a bearing in considering the whole line of expenditures. For instance, while there has been more or less confusion in these matters as between the regular Appropriations Committee and other committees during the war, the plan was, when the various bills were allotted to different committees for consideration, that the sundry civil bill should carry all new additions in the way of land and military posts for the Army, but that the regular supplies for the Army should be provided for in the Army appropriation bill. It was also the idea that fortifications, which are as much naval as army in character—necessitating the buying of land here and there and the erection of fortifications—which called for direct appropriations one year and perhaps nothing the next year but aggregating several hundred thousand dollars, perhaps, in some one or more years, should be provided for in a separate appropriation bill, the idea being that the Army appropriation and the naval appropriation bills should cover provision for the regular annual supplies and ordinary annual expenses of the Military and Naval Establishments, which run along in about the same amount each year, and that appropriations for all extraordinary expenses should go to the other committee.

The Springfield Arsenal is about the oldest one which we have in the United States for the manufacture of arms, and provision for the carrying on of that arsenal, of course, is made in the regular Army appropriation bill, which provides for the maintenance of the Army, the pay of the men, and so forth, in a regular annual way. It might be a good plan and it might not to combine the two bills. Whatever is done, when the time comes there probably will be no objection on the part of the Appropriations Committee to that which is considered proper, but to pass it over as if one committee had infringed upon the other is entirely erroneous.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I had risen to answer the question of the Senator from Utah. The only other arsenal covered in this bill is the Edgewood Arsenal, operated by the Chemical Warfare Service. It is easy to see what we are doing in reducing the operations of that arsenal when I remind the Senator that this year they had an appropriation of something over $5,000,000. They asked for $4,392,000 for next year, and we give them $1,350,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 23 on page 62, the last paragraph read being, under the heading of "National Guard," the following:

For expenses, sergeant-instructors, $60,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Again, I desire to propose two amendments, which, if adopted, will make a change in two items on page 62, but will not result in any increase in the total appropriations. I do this at the earnest request of the Chief of the Bureau of Militia Affairs, who called upon me after the bill had been reported to the Senate. He emphasized the fact that the appropriation on line 23 for expenses of sergeant-instructors assigned to National Guard units for the purpose of assisting those units in training would not pay the number of sergeant-instructors that are now on duty. When I say that it would not pay them, I do not mean for their salaries; I mean for their expenses. Of course, their salaries are paid out of the Regular Army pay items. The number of guard units is increasing day by day, as new companies and new batteries are being federalized, and he earnestly requested that the $60,000 appropriation be increased to $150,000 and stated that there is no question whatsoever but that at least that amount of money will be necessary to pay the expenses of these men. He also requested that the amount of money appropriated for pay and allowances of officers of the National Guard detailed with the Army be reduced to $60,000, it now being fixed at $150,000, the Chief of the Bureau of Militia Affairs stating to me—which is undoubtedly the fact—that there are very, very few National Guard officers on duty with the Regular Army, and it is very unlikely that there will be any during the next fiscal year.

So, Mr. President, on line 12, page 62, I move to strike out "$150,000" and to substitute "$60,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 62, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "$150,000," and in lieu thereof to substitute "$60,000," so as to read:

For pay and allowances, officers, National Guard, detailed with Army, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On line 23, I move to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$150,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 23, it is proposed to strike out "$60,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$150,000," so as to read:

For expenses, sergeant-instructors, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 67, after line 13, to insert:

For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, in accordance with Potomac project "E," described in the report submitted by Maj. M. C. Tyler, Corps of Engineers, $200,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That 60 per cent of this sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated. While I prepared it without reference to the pending amendment, I desire to offer it as an amendment to the committee amendment, and simply add to the committee amendment the language I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after line 24, the following:

For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for the development of hydroelectric power at Great Falls, in accordance with the report of Maj. M. C. Tyler in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, $200,000; and the development of such power is hereby authorized at an expense not exceeding the amount of cost estimated in said report and within such limit of cost the Federal Water Power Commission is hereby authorized to make any modifications or changes in the plans of said improvement as may be considered advisable by said commission.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator, before he proceeds, so that he may answer the inquiry I was about to propound to the Senator from New York, whether the District Committee has passed upon this, or any other committee of the House or the Senate; and have they determined the cost of this project, whether it is $1,000,000 or $20,000,000, and all of the features that are pertinent to the question? It seems to me that if we appropriate this $200,000 we are entering upon a project which will commit the Government and the District to a very large appropriation. Whether it is wise or unwise, I express no opinion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this amendment, if enacted into law, will have the effect of developing the water power at Great Falls in the Potomac River near this city. It is the proposition that in various forms has been before Congress for the last 15 or 16 years.

It will be remembered that in the last Congress, a little over a year ago, I offered an amendment to the Water Power Commission bill that was agreed to, and was put into the bill, having this same effect. There were, however, Senators who thought that the investigations that had been made had been made so many years before that it would not be advisable to go into the project until it had been reinvestigated. The matter went to conference, and as a compromise the conferees agreed on a provision appropriating $25,000—I think that was the amount—for a resurvey of the proposition. That was put into the law, the amount was expended in the resurvey, practically the same investigation was made that had been made several times, and another report was made by the engineers recommending that it be done. The amendment of the committee to which I have asked that this be added as an amendment is likewise carrying out the recommendations made in the same report by the same engineers for the development of an increased water supply for the District of Columbia.

I do not care to take the time of the Senate to go into the Great Falls water-power dvelopment. I have debated it a great many times, and other Senators have, on the floor of the Senate; but it seems to me it is sufficient to say that this amendment carries out the recommendation of the board that was provided for in the Water Power Commission bill. They recommend that this be done, the same as they recommend that the committee amendment to which it is added shall be put in the law, providing for an increased water supply for the District.

In its report the Federal Power Commission says:

The plan for the development of hydroelectric power from the Potomac has these great advantages: (1) It contemplates a serial development of which the several elements can be separately and consecutively undertaken, with the result that the power resources of the District will be augmented from time to time as the capacity of the District for the absorption of the power developed increases; (2) the suggested conservation of use of existing steam installations for the production of power makes it highly improbable that any substantial loss will accrue to those who have invested in steam power plants; and (3) the serial development of water power will render unnecessary extensive and costly additional steam power-plant installations which would be necessary unless existing power-producing facilities are supplemented as here suggested by the early development of a large body of primary power from a dam erected near Chain Bridge.

The Federal Power Commission recommends to the Congress that it authorize an immediate start in the development of power in accordance with the Tyler report. Our study of the situation satisfies us that all the power so developed will find a ready market in the District of Columbia and the circumjacent territory to which it can be transmitted without disproportionate line loss or transmission system cost.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us whose words those are?

Mr. NORRIS. This is the language of the Federal Power Commission.

The complete development of the Potomac, with dams located at Chain Bridge and Great Falls and with the great water reservoirs for storage, will constitute a national asset of incalculable value. It will save coal, labor, and transportation. It will free the National Capital from dependence upon steam-power production, which is increasingly costly and is subject to much greater likelihood of interruption at critical times, due to shortage of coal. It will produce an immense body of primary and secondary power of increasing value, and may well aid materially in the development of a power district about the great commercial and industrial cities from Philadelphia to Richmond, in which a steady and uniform supply will stabilize and encourage further industrial development. The project when completed will stand as an illustration to the country generally of the immense value of water-power development in the conservation of our national resources. For these reasons the Federal Power Commission concurs in the reports herewith transmitted.

I will now read from the report of Maj. Tyler:

To sum up the water-power situation, the Potomac at Great Falls can be made to yield annually hundreds of millions of kilowatt hours of energy, all of which may progressively be put to advantageous use, first as intermittent power, supplemented by steam power at times of low water at a maximum rate equal to that of the water power, and eventually as constant power, the equivalent of the energy in a steady, regulated flow of 6,000 cubic feet per second, supplemented only at times of peak demand by steam power, whose maximum rate of output will then be, perhaps, half that of the constant water power.

The report of Maj. Tyler further says:

A comprehensive development of the Potomac River for power purposes by means of power dams in the main river and storage reservoirs on certain of the larger tributaries is economically feasible, and continuous power thereby can be generated at a cost per kilowatt hour approximately 50 per cent less than that for power generated by steam, if the entire output of the hydroelectric plants can be marketed.

Further he says:

The complete development for power purposes of the Potomac River between Brunswick, Md., and tidewater will be best accomplished by two power dams, one at the District of Columbia line with pool at elevation 115 feet above mean sea level and the other immediately above Great Falls with pool at about 215 feet above mean sea level.

The power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, modified along the general lines indicated herein, is a unit of the larger development.

* * * * * * *

With coal costing $7 per ton f. o. b. car at steam stations in the District of Columbia, the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session—

That was the other investigation, made by Col. Langfitt, in which he recommended that this power be developed—modified along the general lines indicated herein, if operated in conjunction with the central steam stations and distribution systems of the public utilities of the District of Columbia, will deliver power at substations 2 mills per kilowatt hour cheaper than the production cost at steam-station switchboard, will earn interest at 6 per cent on capital investment, pay depreciation, maintenance, and operation charges, return the capital invested in 30 years, and conserve annually approximately 240,000 tons of coal.

So under this report, Mr. President, he says, figuring coal at $7 a ton, the cost of electricity will be cut in two, 240,000 tons of coal will be saved annually, and a sufficient charge be made for the electric energy so that, after paying all maintenance charges and all depreciation charges and 6 per cent on the invested capital, it will return all of the money in 30 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator, as I am disposed to raise a point of order against this amendment——

Mr. NORRIS. It is not subject to a point of order, unless the point of order is made against the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I am speaking of the committee amendment, the entire amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska on what ground he offers his amendment as an amendment to the committee amendment? It simply calls for an additional appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For a different purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. It all comes from the same proposition, based on the same report, based on the same state of facts. If the Senator will follow the committee amendment, he will find that it is based on the report of Maj. Tyler, and Maj. Tyler's report contains in it two propositions—increase of water supply and the development of Great Falls hydroelectric power. It is all in one report. They ought to be together. They ought to go simultaneously together in their development. It ought to be all one amendment, as a matter of fact.

Let me say further, Mr. President, that I have offered this amendment several times. It passed the Senate once, after an extended debate, on a roll call. It has been fully debated. We might put in the balance of the d[illegible] debating it, but I assumed that when we finally put it on a bill and passed it through the Senate, inasmuch as the only objection that was made to it was that Senators thought we ought to have another investigation, that would be sufficient. I contested that proposition. I contended on the floor of the Senate that the investigation already made, in which $20,000 was spent to investigate the whole thing, was sufficient, and I prevailed, in the judgment of the Senate, after that debate took place, and we put it on the bill on a roll call.

The House conferees objected to it and the conferees on the part of the Senate finally compromised and put into the bill what was originally offered as a substitute in the Senate and voted down, to wit, that another investigation should be made, and that became the law.

That investigation has been made and the other report completely and fully vindicated it, and we have here another recommendation. While it is fresh I want the Senate to act on it. We presented the other proposition over and over, year after year, when nobody even claimed that it was not a proper proposition, when everybody admitted that the falls ought to be developed, when there was no contention over that proposition, and then finally, when we did act, the argument was made that the investigation was too old and that we should have a new one. The new one was made, a complete investigation again made, at the expense of $25,000, and again the report comes back to Congress that this can be done, that it will reduce the cost of electricity 50 per cent, that it will pay 6 per cent on the invested capital, will pay depreciation and maintenance charges, and return the principal in 30 years, even with that reduction.

Mr. President, inasmuch as Congress once put this into the law, and the only objection made to it was that we should have a fresh investigation, it seems to me now that there ought to be no objection and that there can be no objection to this development.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator knows that I am sympathetic with the proposition to acquire Great Falls, and to establish a hydroelectric plant there, not only for the benefits the District would derive therefrom, but because I think it would enable the city to obtain an adequate water supply without being subject to claims for damages by the riparian owners of the falls. But the point I want to suggest to the Senator is this: A report, I understand, has just been submitted by some officials of the War Department who have made an investigation. Has the report been submitted to the District Committee? Has any committee of the House or Senate had the report before it and approved of the same with its demands for perhaps twenty-five to fifty millions of dollars?

Mr. NORRIS. No, I will say to the Senator; it has not been submitted to any committee, and let me take that thought up.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest——

Mr. NORRIS. Just let me answer that, and then I will yield to the Senator again.

I want to offer a few observations on that proposition. That is the kind of an objection that was made from year to year to this thing. I proposed this amendment once to a river and harbor bill, and they said, "It can not go on a river and harbor bill, because it is not proper there." I offered it to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and they did not think it was proper there. I offered it to the Army bill, because the Army has to do the work, and after trying it twice and going into it fully it was finally agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator from New York has anything to say about it in the future, the Army will not do this work, and this appropriation will not be carried charged to the Army.

Mr. NORRIS. There is some reason in that. I agree with the Senator. But the Army engineers do all this work, and the Senator himself has offered an amendment to the bill to which this amendment is attached by which the Army is going to increase the water supply of the District of Columbia and the city of Washington. This fits right on that provision.

Mr. President, it was referred once to the Committee on the District of Columbia, when we had the other report before us, and that committee referred it to the Commissioners of the District. They promptly recommended the enactment of a law that would carry it out; but there was never anything done about it.

This report is a new report, and I have a copy in my desk, although I had marked what I have read, and some other things, in the advance sheets. I was anxious to do this now so that nobody would come here and say, "Let us get a new report."

Mr. President, the question arises, Are we going to delay this matter again? Suppose this work had been done before the war; what a great advantage it would have been to us. It is going to take 10 years to complete the work. This will only start it. I think it will be done at a good deal less cost than the document says it can be done for. According to the document it will cost over $40,000,000.

But I think that was based on prices of labor and materials some time last year; anyway, when labor and materials were very high. But, taking it at that highest peak, when it was higher than it ever was, or ever will be again, even on those figures we can do it all along the lines I have outlined; and inasmuch as the argument was made before, "All we want to do is see what some Army engineers will say about it; all we want to do is to get another technical opinion on it, and if that agrees with it then it will go through," it seems to me that there ought to be no objection to it now.

I would like to say, Mr. President, that I am compelled to leave the Senate because the Committee on Agriculture is engaged in a very important investigation; and I will ask the Senator from New York to let it go over unless Senators are ready to vote on it now. I would like to be here when it is passed on, but I will not be able to stay in the Senate now.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator one question before he leaves. As I suggested a moment ago, I am in sympathy with the project to acquire the falls, to build a dam, and to establish a hydroelectric plant. But the Senator has already indicated that this project will cost $40,000,000. If the engineers have said $40,000,000, it will be $50,000,000 or more before it is completed.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me correct the Senator. I think the Senator did not hear what I said. These estimates are based on the peak of war prices. I thank the Senator for making that suggestion, because it is important. I would like to say to the Senator that this complete development consists in the building of two or three different dams, and, as they say in their report, as the Senate would see if I had time to read it to the Senate, it will be done by degrees. They will develop one first—probably the one at Chain Bridge first—and they will use that; they will even use the power from that in developing the others. I have forgotten whether they estimate that it will take 5 years or 10, but I think it would depend a good deal on the amount we appropriated; so that it is going to be put up piecemeal, and as fast as one project is completed it can be utilized while they are working on the others.

Mr. KING. The point I desired to make, if the Senator will pardon me, is that we are now asked to commit the Government to a project which the commission reports will cost $44,421,000. Does the Senator think that the Senate or the Government is now ready, upon this, I will say, ex parte report, to embark upon a project that will involve the expenditure of such a tremendous sum? Ought not some committee, say the District Committee, because the District is to be charged with a part of the cost, investigate the report, analyze it, and then make their report to Congress? And if their report is favorable a bill could quickly be offered and the necessary amount appropriated.

Mr. NORRIS. Before I go to the committee meeting let me answer the questions of the Senator from Utah. First, to his question whether the Senate is ready, my answer is that in my judgment it is, or at least it ought to be. This is not a new project. It is not something that has sprung out of the air. Sixteen or seventeen years ago Congress passed an appropriation act providing for the expenditure of $20,000 to investigate the proposition. That was not the only one. It has been investigated by various governmental engineers. They expended that $20,000. They secured one of the greatest hydroelectric engineers in the world, who went over the situation and superintended the investigation. They went completely through it. They made a minute and detailed report, which has never yet been successfully assailed. Nobody has opposed it except the street railway companies and similar institutions which do not want cheap electricity and which are already charging the people of this city and the Government of the United States exorbitant prices for electricity. No one else stands in the way of this development.

Every time the same argument has been made—let somebody else investigate. It has been investigated for 16 years. No Member of the Senate, unless he is an engineer, is competent to know anything about it. I do not profess to know anything about it. I have to rely upon the experts, and for 16 to 20 years the Government experts have been recommending this. It has been recommended oftener than any other proposition that ever came before the Congress, and we are confronted now with the same old proposition—to investigate some more, look into it a little more. There is not a committee of the Senate or of the House that is competent to make an investigation as thorough, as complete, and as comprehensive as the one that is before us now and which has just been printed.

The amendment, if agreed to, ties the Government to the proposition and commits the Government to the development of that power. It does not confine us even to the particular method that is here provided. It is provided that they can modify or change the plans, and they are given the widest latitude.

It does seem to me that if we are going to develop this proposition we ought to do it now. Everyone realizes the difficulty we had during the war in the city of Washington with reference to coal. Everyone knows what we are liable to have next winter. The development of the project will save us 240,000 tons of coal every winter in the city of Washington. When it is fully developed it will give to every citizen in Washington who uses electricity in his house the current at one-half what he is paying now. The Government itself is the largest customer in the District of Columbia for electric power. The project will furnish current that will operate and run all the street cars of the city. It is a sin—a moral sin—that within the shadow of the dome of the Capitol one of the greatest water-power possibilities in the world is going to waste every day while we investigate further and further and further.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say to the Senator from Nebraska, I do not know how long he is going to be absent, but some of us have every hope of passing the bill to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I agreed to meet with the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at 1 o'clock. If the Senator will put this amendment over and go on with the bill and notify me later when it is taken up, I shall be glad to adjourn operations over there and come back to the floor of the Senate immediately upon notification.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. SMITH. May I say to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. NORRIS] that there are other members of that committee who are vitally interested in the bill now under investigation before the committee, and who are also interested in the passage of the Army appropriation bill now under consideration on the floor of the Senate? I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if it is not possible for him to suspend the very interesting and vital testimony that is being given before his committee now so that those of us who desire to do our part in both the committee and the Senate may have an opportunity to do so?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senator from South Carolina that I appreciate that difficulty just as well as he does, and were I not the chairman of the committee I would stay right here and let this bill go on to a finish. I would have been here to-day anyway, but the Senator realizes that we are having hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on a very important bill, and people are here from all over the United States to be heard by the committee.

Mr. SMITH. That is the bill to which I am referring.

Mr. NORRIS. If the chairman of the committee absents himself we all know what happens. So I feel morally bound to be with the committee.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has missed the point of what I asked him. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the hearings being conducted there are very important. I desire very much to be present at those hearings, and I desire to be present during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill here. I was asking the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry if he could not suspend the hearings for the day at least on the very important bill pending before the committee now in order that members of the committee can be on the floor of the Senate during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator's request, but the Senator will understand that when the Army appropriation bill is out of the way there will be pending another bill just as important. I suppose when this bill is finished the so-called packer bill will be brought before the Senate, and it will not be possible for members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry then to have hearings on the bill which they are now considering, unless they have them before 12 o'clock noon. The result will be, if we adjourn those hearings for this week, or even for to-day, probably we will adjourn to a time when members of the Agricultural Committee will necessarily have to be on the floor of the Senate, except in the forenoon.

Mr. SMITH. While I am on my feet I wish to state that there ought to be some arrangement with reference to hearings on bills in committee rooms that would not cause them to conflict with the duties of members of the body on the floor during the consideration and passage of vitally important bills. We can not be in both places at once. I wished to make that statement so that I at least may put myself on record as stating that I am going to be on the floor of the Senate whenever a bill of importance is taken up for consideration and passage, and I shall devote the morning hours and such other time as I possibly can to attending committee meetings.

Mr. KING. I think I can state to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that there is no reason why the bill under discussion should not be passed this afternoon. Speaking for myself, I have no desire to delay it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very thankful for that assurance from the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words in reply to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I regret very much that he is compelled to leave the Chamber to attend the meeting of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Great Falls project is not new to me. May I ask the pardon of the Senate for a personal reference? When I was a Member of the House a few years ago I was charged with the duty of making an investigation of the Great Falls project.

After a rather exhaustive investigation, I reached the conclusion that the Government ought to acquire the riparian rights upon either side of the falls in order that it might ultimately build a hydroelectric plant from which power could be obtained for the city of Washington. Moreover, the District at that time had an inadequate supply of water. It had diverted a portion of the Potomac River above the falls and conveyed it through the conduit to Washington. In so doing, it had diminished the flow of the stream and thus damaged the riparian proprietors. Suit had been brought in the Court of Claims and award made in favor of the owners of the land abutting upon the falls. A proposition was made, by the terms of which the judgment against the Government was to be satisfied and the riparian owners were to waive claims growing out of the action of the Government in taking an additional quantity of water from the river for which compensation had not been awarded in the first suit, and the Government was to obtain all riparian rights. The sum to be paid to the riparian owners was very reasonable.

Unfortunately, the bill reported to the House for the purpose of acquiring these rights was defeated. Ever since that investigation I have believed that the Government should acquire the falls, and by that I mean all lands abutting upon the river necessary for the construction of dams, the building of electrical plants, and so forth.

But the question now before us is somewhat broader. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has stated that various investigations have been made. Undoubtedly that is true, but it is manifest that Congress has not been satisfied with investigations, nor has it been willing to make the necessary appropriation to buy the falls and to build dams and electric plants.

As I understand, an engineer has recently submitted a report favoring the building of an electrical plant. This report none of the Senators have had an opportunity to read, so far as I am advised. Indeed, I did not learn of its existence until the Senator from Nebraska took the floor. He has just handed me a voluminous report containing a great many pages of printed matter. I find it here stated that the project will cost more than $44,000,000. That is the engineer's report. Senators do not know the details of the report or the plans suggested. No committee of the Senate or House has had an opportunity to examine the report, nor has any committee reported in favor of its adoption or the expenditure of the large sum which it declares necessary in order to build a hydroelectric plant. The duty rests upon Congress to determine whether this huge appropriation shall be made. While it is true that all Members of the House and the Senate can not examine the details of the report or familiarize themselves with all of its provisions, nevertheless, when we are called upon to embark upon an enterprise that calls for more than $40,000,000 and perhaps $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, opportunity should be given for a full examination of the report and some responsible committee of the House or the Senate should make such an examination so that they can recommend to Congress what course should be pursued in the matter.

As stated, I believe that the Great Falls project should be developed. I should like to see a modern electric plant established and the District obtain the benefits that would accrue therefrom. That the project will be expensive none can deny. The report indicates that fact. To construct the various dams which the report suggests are necessary, and to build a modern electric plant and to install the necessary machinery, will cost, in my opinion, more than the report fixes as the probable cost. However, I am not opposing the building of a plant nor the embarking by the Government upon the enterprise. I am only insisting that before Congress commits itself to this project opportunity should be given to the House and the Senate to determine whether it is ready to adopt this report or some other suitable one, and that some responsible committee of the House or the Senate shall, upon proper investigation, put the seal of their approval upon this or some other plan. Under our legislative system committees are charged with responsible duties. Bills are referred to them, and it is their duty to examine the measures referred to them and to furnish to the House and the Senate all information obtainable and submit an expression of their considered judgment in relation thereto. When we are talking so much of economy it would seem that a project that on its face calls for more than $44,000,000, and will probably cost fifty or sixty millions of dollars, should be the subject of serious consideration by a proper committee of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I quite agree that it is for Congress to judge whether we ought to spend this amount of money now or engage in this project now, but as to improving the situation by adding the ignorance of Congress to the knowledge of the engineers, there seems to me to be absolutely nothing to it. Engineers are dispassionate persons. They make a report, and hardly any Senators will read it. Those who do will be just as wise when they come to consider the question again as they are now.

Why is it not just as well for us to get through with this business of investigating and talking about investigations which a committee is not fit to make and ought not to make, and let us decide, which is our province, whether this is the wise time to make the appropriation or not. I am not arguing for either side of the question, but can we not facilitate progress more by deciding the things we are here to decide and that we know enough about to decide?

Mr. KING. The argument which has just been made by the Senator from Massachusetts is, of course, an argument in favor of the appropriation, though the Senator may disclaim it.

Mr. LODGE. By saying that Congress is ignorant?

Mr. KING. By stating that we should decide now whether to embark upon enterprises, because if we adopt the amendment we commit the Government to the policy which is set forth in the report.

Mr. LODGE. I did not urge voting for the amendment.

Mr. KING. No. The Senator speaks about the "ignorance of Congress." I confess to being ignorant upon many matters, and my knowledge of hydraulics and hydroelectric plants, and so forth, is unimportant, but I am not willing to vote now to commit the Government to an enterprise that will cost $44,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 without a committee of Congress investigating the report or having an opportunity to satisfy my own judgment, imperfect as it may be, as to the merits of the report and the feasibility of the plan proposed.

If the matter of entering upon this great enterprise had been referred to a committee of the Senate and it had examined the matter together with the report just referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, I would be inclined to vote in favor of the committee's recommendation. However, when so large a sum is called for, I want to satisfy my own mind that the project is proper and the appropriation should be made.

If the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will assure me that his committee has examined this matter; that they approve of it; that the plan proposed by the engineers is the best to be adopted; and that the enterprise should now be entered upon, I shall probably support the proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the Senate Military Affairs Committee has never examined the matter. Furthermore, it has no jurisdiction over it. It would never come to that committee.

Mr. KING. But there is an amendment concerning the water supply of the District reported to the bill by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The Water Power Commission have examined the matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that the amendment beginning in line 14, on page 67 of the bill, having to do with the water supply of the District, was put on by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate because the proposition had passed both Houses of Congress at the last session as an amendment which had been offered to the Army appropriation bill from the floor by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. It was accepted by the House. So it has once before passed both Houses, and as the Army appropriation bill was the only vehicle by which this proposed survey could be made, looking toward an increase in the water supply of the District, the committee made up its mind that it would yield its technical objection to the matter being carried in the Army appropriation bill and let it once more come before the Senate. The committee, however, has never considered the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from New York whether he, as chairman of a great committee, and his committee are willing to sponsor this proposition and to recommend to the Senate that we should embark upon this project, which commits the Government to an expenditure of at least $44,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Utah asks me a question the answer to which is obvious. I am completely ignorant about the matter.

Mr. KING. Then can the Senator from New York complain if other Senators, ignorant of the report and its recommendations, are unwilling to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, which is a commitment to the project and to the appropriation of many millions of dollars?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am a little surprised to hear Senators stand in their places upon the floor of the Senate and profess ignorance of this plan, either officially or otherwise. The matter has been debated at great length during the brief period of my service in the Senate, I am sure, three different times. On two occasions the whole subject was gone into at great length, when there was an attendance in the Senate very much larger than is customarily present when matters of very great moment are under consideration.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me in my time?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. KING. A report containing several hundred pages, and which has just been printed, has been handed to me within the past five minutes. It is upon this report that we are expected to act. Is the Senator from Montana willing upon this report now to vote for a project which will cost $44,000,000?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If this were the first time I had ever heard of such a thing, as the Senator from Utah professes——

Mr. KING. No; I did not so profess.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should be entirely unwilling to do so; but a report was made upon this matter eight years ago. It was then very carefully considered by the Senate. Action upon it was postponed, but subsequently it was taken up and further consideration was had of the matter. A year ago the Senator from Nebraska, very commendably, urged action on the matter by the Senate.

I opposed action at that time, insisting that the report was too ancient, that many conditions had interposed since the time that the prior report upon the subject had been submitted, and that because a project might be feasible and practicable if constructed in the year 1912 was no justification for entering upon the project in the year 1920. I, therefore, insisted that action should be taken to get more recent and more up-to-date information concerning it. Accordingly the Water Power Commission was instructed to inquire into the subject. They secured the necessary experts and embarked upon an inquiry. They now make a report to us to the effect that the project is a feasible one, that it is a practicable one, and that Congress ought to enter upon it.

I am not now arguing that we ought to enter upon it; but I am contending, Mr. President, that there is no very great basis for anybody who has followed the course of legislation in this body to urge that he is wholly ignorant on the subject, or if he is, that that affords any particular reason why the Senate, after the matter, to my knowledge, has had elaborate consideration three separate times, should not proceed to act.

I urged a year ago that we ought to get an up-to-date report upon the project. As I said at that time, it had my entire sympathy, but I could not enter upon it as a business proposition without more recent information. We now have that information; we have it secured by the best talent that can be procured. We have the recommendation of the commission that was created for the express purpose of inquiring into matters of this character. Their report is before us. I do not know when the report was printed, but it was made public through the newspapers at least three months ago. Accordingly every opportunity has been afforded to anyone who is interested in the matter, either for or against, to fully acquaint himself with the important and salient points in the pages of the report.

I very sincerely hope, after the consideration that has been given to this subject by the Senate, that it will not again be postponed, but that action will be taken upon it now. I am prepared to vote on the question.

I have always regarded it as a singularly remarkable thing that this great water power, which is in the immediate vicinity of the National Capital, has remained undeveloped, while out on the frontier, in the State of Montana, there can not be found an available power site of similar character that has not already been developed. The Government of the United States and the city of Washington are consuming an enormous amount of electrical energy for their own purposes, not to speak about the lighting of the city and the transportation of cars over the street car lines, and here is an available source of power at our very doors. Why should it not be appropriated by the Government of the United States? If upon the advice of our experts it is a profitable proposition, why should we not take hold of it and develop it?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I heartily concur in what the Senator from Montana has just said. We should, by all means, develop the water powers of the United States. The Senator from Montana has referred to the fact that in his section of the country water powers have been developed on an extensive scale; indeed, I have heard of some places in that region where a pound of coal is not burned in a town, but the power for lighting, heating, and everything else is furnished by electricity. Throughout the South we are developing our water powers. They are reasonably profitable, and we thereby save great quantities of coal.

Last year the matter now under discussion was pending before the Senate for a considerable time. Since then the price of building material has appreciably declined; cement and various commodities which enter into construction have gone down; labor is plentiful now; and I am satisfied that the War Department has on hand considerable machinery, such as trucks, hoisting engines, crushers, and various other machines, which could be well used in aiding construction work of the character proposed.

In the vicinity of Washington there is a demand for a great amount of power, and if the water power at Great Falls could be developed it would save coal and decrease the cost of electricity to consumers in the city. The great advantage, however, that I see growing out of such development would be the example it would set to the people of the United States generally. Visitors come here almost daily from every section of the country. If the plant at Great Falls were constructed, many of them undoubtedly would go there and inspect the development; and when they saw the magnificent results there obtained they would go home and decide to develop the water powers which are found all over the country. I well remember the effect that the first dam I ever saw had upon me. After seeing it, I concluded that I knew of a power site that ought to be developed. We gathered inspiration and we did develop it. There are running now throughout the South hundreds upon hundreds of cotton mills by the use of power generated from water-power sites, and electricity is being used for many purposes. Even in the small town in which I live, a town of 5,000 people, the people are cooking by electricity and are securing from it the most perfect heat that can be obtained.

I repeat that the cost of materials which would be necessary in connection with the development of such a project has declined greatly in the last year and no doubt will continue to decline. Copper is at about as low a price as it ever has been, and so with other necessary articles. I hope the development will be carried forward.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment which has been tendered that it has not been estimated for by a standing committee or any committee, and that it increases the appropriation contained in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Presiding Officer will not rule on that point of order in the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who said he would like to be present when it was finally considered. I do not think it is fair and just to decide the point in his absence.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Senator from Utah to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the point has been made, the Chair does not think it can be withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Sterling
Ball	Hale	McLean	Sutherland
Borah	Harris	Nicholson	Swanson
Broussard	Harrison	Norris	Townsend
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Trammell
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Underwood
Cameron	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Capper	Kenyon	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Keyes	Pomerene	Warren
Dial	King	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	Ladd	Shortridge	Willis
Fernald	La Follette	Simmons	Wolcott
Fletcher	Lenroot	Smith
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Smoot
Gerry	McCormick	Stanley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I understand that a point of order has been raised against the pending amendment. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The point of order is that it has not been reported by a standing committee and is not estimated for.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, one rule of parliamentary law that is as old as any system of parliamentary jurisprudence, and to which there is no exception, as far as I have ever heard, is that a point of order will not lie against an amendment to a provision that has the same limitations attached to it that apply to the amendment that is offered. In other words, if a point of order—even assuming it to be good—is made against an amendment to a provision which in itself is likewise subject to a point of order, the Chair must overrule the point of order. As the Chair has stated to me the grounds upon which this point of order is made, the same objections and the same rules will apply to the provision of the bill which I seek to amend by the amendment that I have offered.

The Chair will appreciate, I think, the universal rule—which, while it does not apply directly, illustrates the point—that when a demurrer is filed in court against a pleading, if the pleading against which the demurrer is filed, although subject to the demurrer, is answering another pleading that would be subject to the same difficulty——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit the Chair, the Chair would suggest that the amendment to which the Senator has proposed his amendment is reported by a standing committee of the Senate, and therefore comes under the rule that makes in order such provisions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if that be true, then an amendment to that committee amendment that is germane is not subject to the point of order. The appropriation is for the same thing. If you will read the language of these two amendments, you will see that to a great extent they are identical. I was careful, in drawing the amendment, to make it identical with the committee amendment just as far as I could. I copied the language of it. They both refer to the same document; they both refer to the same thing; and if one is subject to the point of order, the other one is. The fact that a committee is behind one and an individual Senator is behind the other does not give the one any prestige over the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit the Chair, paragraph 2 of Rule XX says that the Presiding Officer may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate; and the Presiding Officer is going to submit this proposition to the Senate to decide whether or not it wants this amendment to go in the bill, notwithstanding the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the general statement about the point of order, I only want to say this before we pass away from it: I do not think the doctrine can possibly be sustained that because a clause in a bill or an amendment in a bill is in order you can therefore attach to it any kind of other amendment that is not in order. Assuming that this amendment of the committee is in order, that does not make in order anything you choose to attach to it, because that would enable you to attach everything that is out of order to any clause of any bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me say that of course my point of order relates merely to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. It does not relate to the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, and I am arguing the matter on that theory.

Mr. President, if the Senate holds that the amendment I have offered is out of order, then the logical result of such holding is that a committee can propose any amendment, although if the same amendment were proposed by a Senator it would be subject to a point of order; that when the committee proposes it, it avoids that difficulty.

Mr. LODGE. The rules say so.

Mr. NORRIS. But a committee of the Senate can bring in here an amendment that is subject to a point of order. There is not any question about it. If this amendment changes existing law, the committee amendment does the same thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The point of order is not raised on that ground.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that it is not. I am glad that it is not, because I am in favor of the committee amendment. I believe in it. It ought to be agreed to. I am not opposed to the committee amendment; but, Mr. President, here is an amendment on all fours with it, just like it, coming from absolutely the same source. Their origin is just exactly the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will admit that the legislative channels through which they travel are somewhat different.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; they are a little different, and that makes me think of the lawyer who was trying a replevin suit before a justice of the peace. The lawyer, on a point of law, cited a replevin suit that seemed, as he thought, to be absolutely on all fours with the one on trial, and to decide the question at issue. The justice, when he came to decide it, said: "This replevin suit is with regard to hogs, and you are trying to fool the court by citing a replevin suit that involves cattle."

It seems to me that that illustration answers this. They are the same, although they do different things. They originate in the same way. The infirmity of one is the infirmity of the other. They are identical, except that one increases the water supply and the other increases the supply of electricity.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What I meant by a difference in channel, if the Senator will allow me, was that one is reported by a standing committee and the other is not.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether his amendment appropriates $200,000 additional to that already contained in the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. It seems to me it is very important that this rule should not be destroyed. There can not be the slightest doubt but that this amendment is out of order under the rule. It does add a new item of appropriation. It is immaterial whether it is in the form of an amendment to an amendment or in the form of an amendment to the bill. It is upon a different subject, adds a new item of $200,000, and is squarely in conflict with the rule, so clearly that there can be no question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate hold the point of order made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] well taken? [Putting the question.] The noes have it. The amendment is held in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for a division. There was scarcely an opportunity for the Senate to know what the question was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks for a division.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, will the Chair state the question? Scarcely a Senator understood it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Senate quite understood the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said, "Will the Senate hold the point of order well taken?" The Chair heard several "noes," that it would not hold it well taken; but the Senator from New York asks for a division.

On a division, the Senate refused to sustain the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that here is $400,000 which is not chargeable to the Army of the United States.

Mr. KING. Let me say that there will be, perhaps, forty or fifty millions of dollars involved, and we will not charge that to the Army, either.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 67, after line 24, to insert:

The War Department is hereby directed to cancel and abandon the claim in the sum of $18,583.44 for United States property issued to the National Guard of Texas and lost, damaged, and destroyed during and immediately after the storm and flood at Corpus Christi, Tex., and surrounding country in September, 1919, the property having been furnished for relief of the civilian population.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, at the earnest request of the Secretary of War, I offer the following amendment, to follow line 5, on page 68.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 68, after line 5, insert the following after the amendment last agreed to:

That the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to pay to Emil Hugli, an attorney of Berne, Switzerland, the sum of $50, compensation for services rendered the United States at the request of an officer of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As part of my remarks I desire to present a letter addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs by the Secretary of War, which describes the incident in which this obligation was incurred.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 9, 1921.

The honorable the CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS, UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith papers relative to the claim of Emil Hugli, an attorney of Berne, Switzerland, who was employed by Capt. John H. Kiplinger, Field Artillery, judge advocate, on February 5, 1920, in an emergency to assist him in protecting the interests of the United States. The claimant in this case rendered necessary and valuable service to the United States. He acted in good faith and accepted employment on behalf of the United States from an officer of the United States without question as to that officer's authority to bind this Government or whether the officer had or had not complied with our own regulations. The bill as rendered is considered most reasonable for the service, and I regret that there is not at present some way that this case can be paid by administrative officers. The claim as presented is for Swiss francs 255.80, which at the current fluctuations of exchange is between $45 and $50 of American money. Had the officer at Berne cabled the War Department for authority to make this employment, it would have been granted undoubtedly, but the expense of cabling alone would have equaled the cost of the employment.

I therefore submit the papers to you, with a request that there be included in the next appropriation act an item authorizing the Secretary of War to pay to Mr. Emil Hugli, an attorney of Berne, Switzerland, the sum of $50 as compensation for his services rendered the United States at the request of an officer of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on the last page of the bill will be found, in lines 12 to 17, inclusive, subject matter adopted by the House and not changed by the Senate, but the like of which has not appeared in Army appropriation bills before. It reads as follows:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government an hourly wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality.

It turns out that that paragraph has caused a good deal of confusion in the minds of men who work in the Government arsenals under the Army. There is no law at present erecting machinery for the fixing of wages in the Army arsenals. There is for the Navy. The statute governing the Navy's procedure provides for a wage board in the Navy Department, and that board finally fixes the wages after holding hearings and making investigations.

Mr. LODGE. I think they have those wage boards in all the navy yards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in all the navy yards. The Army, although not commanded to do so by statute, follows a practice very similar to that of the Navy, but does it unofficially. But the practice varies, as I understand it, in different arsenals, and the men employed in the Army arsenals are somewhat at a loss to know just what the effect of this language on page 89 will be in the matter of fixing wages. So I purpose offering an amendment, so that section 2 will read as follows:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government, other than those whose pay is adjustable from time to time through wage boards or similar authority, an hourly wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality.

If that amendment is adopted, the matter can be taken up in conference, and if there is any other complication due to this proposal of the House, it can be better understood and resolved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think there will be any complication arising through the amendment. The object of the amendment is to relieve the employees of the Army arsenals from receiving pay, as they have in the past, according to the customary amount paid by private individuals or corporations adjacent to the arsenals.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is only for an hourly wage, and that very thing is done now in the arsenals by authority similar to the Navy wage boards. It is to maintain the present situation that this amendment is proposed, not to change it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think more than likely it would maintain the present scale of wages paid, and that is what the employees are after. They were satisfied when wages in private yards were mounting very rapidly on account of the war, and their wages were ascending in the same way. Now that the wages paid by private concerns and corporations outside are decreasing, the employees do not want to follow down. They were perfectly willing to accept the increases, but they do not want to follow the decreases.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I know something about the wage boards in the navy yards, and I know they have made large reductions in the rates of wages, but the arsenals I do not know about. I know that in the navy yards they have brought the wages down. I think it is only proper that those wage boards should exist. I think they work well. But I do not see why a man should be subjected to two systems.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if the wages have been decreased——

Mr. LODGE. They have in the Navy. I am not speaking about the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. If the wages have been brought down in the Navy, then the reports that were made to us at the time we had the appropriation bill up for consideration, in which the claims for increases in salary, the Senator will remember, were brought before the Senate, were not correct. The Senate disagreed to the amendment which the representative of the employees of the navy yards asked for, and after that was disagreed to——

Mr. LODGE. That was a different proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Alifas came to my office and said, "Nothing can be done to cover the provisions of the amendment. The wage board will not meet until October,"—or November; I forget which he said—"and therefore they can not pass upon the wages." I said to Mr. Alifas, "Do you want the wage board called together before the 1st of October, or the 1st of November, to pass upon this question?" He said, "No." He did not want it, because he knew that when the wage board met they would reduce the wages.

Mr. LODGE. They have reduced them. That was a proposition to take them out from under the wage board, and the amendment of the Senator from New York is a proposition to put them under the wage board.

Mr. SMOOT. They are under the wage board now.

Mr. LODGE. No; they are not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Unofficially in the Army; there is no statute on it.

Mr. LODGE. That is just it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They operate very much the same as the Navy wage boards, but they are not commanded to do so by statute, as they are in the Navy. I will state the situation in the Army as I understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me see the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Senator to listen for just a moment. The House language provides that the wages shall be the same as those paid by private enterprises in the same locality. It so happens that there are one or two Army establishments situated out in the open country employing skilled mechanics, where there are no such wages existing in the same locality; there is no locality about there where skilled mechanics' wages are paid, and if the House language goes in the wages of all the skilled machinists and mechanics in an Army institution which is not situated next to a city where there are similar private undertakings will be reduced, they fear, very, very heavily in order to meet the prevailing wage scale of the locality for the employment nearest approaching that of a skilled machinist.

My amendment provides that the Army authorities may continue to do, with the sanction of law, as it were, what they do to-day. They fix by authority the wages of skilled machinists in Army institutions to conform as near as possible with the wages of machinists employed at the nearest point where similar employees are paid. In other words, there will have to be little adjustments of that kind and little compromises, because sometimes you find an Army institution established in a place where there are no skilled machinists; and yet the House language says that they must be the same as in that locality. That is the point.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the Senator's attention to the House provision, and read it, and then the proposed amendment and the words inserted into that amendment making the change. The House provision reads:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government an hourly wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality.

That is the way the House provision reads. The Senator's proposed amendment would insert these words:

Other than those whose pay is adjustable from time to time through wage boards or similar authority.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is just it. That is what they are doing now unofficially, and if that amendment is not adopted the House language will stop that. You take the Picatinny Arsenal, in New Jersey. I do not see either of the Senators from New Jersey here, but I think it fair to say that it is up in the back hills of New Jersey. That locality does not employ anything like the character of skilled workingmen that this arsenal employs. Under the House language they will have to be reduced to the level of the wages of the village tinsmith.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, we know that never would be allowed in the Army or the Navy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be under that language; it is mandatory.

Mr. LODGE. It would be under that language.

Mr. SMOOT. It never has been done in the past.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That language compels it.

Mr. SMOOT. Whenever there is an amendment of this kind proposed in the Senate affecting the Army or the Navy it seems to me there is always something back of it, that there is going to be an increase rather than a decrease. This may be all right, Mr. President, and I will not object to its going into the bill, but I want to look it up between now and the time the bill goes to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The READING CLERK. On page 89 strike out section 2 as it appears in the House print and insert the following:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying any civilian employee of the United States Government, other than those whose pay is adjustable from time to time through wage boards or similar authority, an hourly wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, to be added at the end of the bill, and to avoid difficulty in reading it, I will read it myself:

The restriction in section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by the act approved May 27, 1910, prohibiting the sale or exchange of Territorial lands in excess of 40 acres in area and $5,000 in value is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That this restriction shall not apply to the exchange of lands between the Territory and the United States of America or conveyance by the Territory to the United States of land for military or naval purposes."

In explanation of the amendment, I will say that under the act of May 27, 1910, amending the act for the government of the Territory of Hawaii, the following language was contained:

No sale of land for other than homestead purposes, except as herein provided, and no exchange by which the Territory shall convey lands exceeding either 40 acres in area or $5,000 in value shall be made.

In the Navy appropriation act of June 4, 1920, there was the following provision:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to exchange certain land now a part of the naval-station property at Honolulu, Hawaii, necessary for the extension of Punchbowl Street, city of Honolulu, through the naval station, for certain land now owned or to be acquired by the Territory of Hawaii, lying to the northeast of the naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and containing 132 acres, more or less, required for naval purposes.

It would seem to me that the act which I have just read, being a specific act, authorizing the exchange of certain lands, would invalidate it, notwithstanding the general limitation in the earlier act, which I have previously read. But it was held by the attorney general of Hawaii that the provisions of the naval act to which I have just referred for the conveyance to the United States of 132 acres of land could not be carried out because of the limitation to 40 acres of land, not exceeding $5,000 in value, in the act of 1910.

The amendment which I have offered applies equally to the Army and the Navy, both of them having establishments in the Hawaiian Islands, and it is submitted at the request of the Secretary of the Navy in order to meet the difficulty which I have just stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, with reference to which I should like to have a statement from the chairman of the committee. I was asked by the Postmaster General to submit it. On page 34, in line 17, after the word "Army," I move to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to dispose of, by transfer to the Post Office Department for use in the Postal Service, such number, not exceeding 2,000, of three-quarter-ton motor trucks as in the judgment of the Secretary are not necessary for the use of the Army.

I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee give me information in reference to the matter. It seems to be a reasonable request, if the motors are there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that brings up the whole question of further distribution of motor vehicles by the Army to other departments of the Government free of charge. I can state to the Senate the figures furnished by the Secretary of War within the last three weeks to the Committee on Military Affairs, showing what the Army has on hand, and I will read a portion of the statement furnished to the committee:

On October 30, 1920, instructions were issued directing that the number of motor vehicles of all types, including trailers, to be retained for the Army should aggregate 30,000.

Let me interpolate that motor vehicles of all types include motor trucks of all sizes, heavy and light, passenger-carrying automobiles, motor cycles, and side cars.

This figure will enable the War Department to actually equip the organizations of the Army; to provide for the upkeep of camps, posts, and other stations; and to establish a small reserve for the equipment of certain corps and Army troops in the event that tactical units higher than divisions should be organized.

I may again interpolate that there should be included a statement to the effect that the National Guard must also be equipped as the units of the guard are accepted and federalized. Continuing:

This reserve, however, will not be maintained for the above purpose only, but out of it all replacement will be met. The distribution of 30,000 vehicles to be retained—which includes motor cycles and chassis—is as follows: Equipment of tactical units, 10,088; posts, camps, etc., 12,838; replacement and maintenance, 7,074; total, 30,000.

That was the number ordered by the Secretary of War to be set aside on last October 30 of every conceivable kind of motor vehicle, plus trailers. Continuing:

Referring particularly to the two types covered by the provisions under consideration—

That is, trucks and passenger cars—

the total retention included 19,652 trucks and 4,245 passenger cars. Of these two types there were on hand December 31, 1920, 24,997 trucks and 3,974 passenger cars. A large part of this equipment, however, was unserviceable or nonstandard. Such of it as fell in either class was declared surplus and is now being disposed of, with the result that there is actually now a deficit of 1,505 trucks and 487 passenger cars.

That is the situation of the War Department to-day with respect to motor trucks and passenger cars.

Mr. OVERMAN. What do they mean by a deficit?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are short that number.

Mr. OVERMAN. Short of what?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of the requirements for an army of 175,000 men.

Mr. DIAL. If they are short that many, I should like to have the Senator explain this situation to me: I went down to Camp Holabird last Saturday. There they have a great number of trucks. I do not know how many there were, but if strung out in a row it would be a mile or more in length. I was told that they were brought there before the armistice and had been there ever since—new trucks that had never been used.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have been to Camp Holabird myself. I have seen the park of trucks, or at least a great park of trucks there, and I was informed at the time of my visit that those trucks belong to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I am going a little further into this matter. I may be utterly alone in my opinion, but this debauch of the free distribution of Government property has gone far enough. I can well understand the appetite that is aroused in a State highway commissioner when he understands that the War Department owns a lot of trucks and that there is a law upon the statute books passed by Congress authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over those trucks to the Department of Agriculture free of charge to be given to the States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

UMI

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have before me the chart prepared by the Department of War showing the number of trucks on October 31, 1920, referred to by the Senator from New York. I also have a compilation made by the Department of Agriculture from that chart, from which it appears that there were on hand October 31, 1920, 41,529 motor vehicles; that there were then estimated by the department to be necessary for an Army of 250,000 men, including the National Guard and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, 26,544.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twenty-six thousand five hundred and forty-four what?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Vehicles of all kinds.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What was the date of the estimate?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. October 31, 1920.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is wrong, because the date of my statement is October 30, 1920, and the total number of motor vehicles of all kinds was then authorized at 30,000.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Forty-one thousand five hundred and twenty-nine this table shows.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From where does the Senator derive that table?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I got this from the Department of Agriculture——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Wait a moment. The compiler asserts that the facts and figures are taken from chart No. 188, compiled by the War Department, showing the motor vehicles of all kinds then under the control of the War Department. I have the chart before me. If that is the case, there would seem to be widely differing information.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Agricultural Department attempts to inform the Senate what the War Department ordered on October 30, 1920, in the matter of the retention of trucks——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Agricultural Department——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. The Secretary of War and Chief of Staff present this statement showing exactly what they did order on that day, and they are the officials who put out the order, and it shows that they ordered retained 11,000 fewer trucks than somebody in the Department of Agriculture says they ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has just stated that according to an official in the Department of Agriculture the War Department ordered retained 41,000 motor vehicles.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; the Senator has misunderstood my statement. I said the schedule shows that the total number of vehicles of all kinds on hand in the War Department was 41,525——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the War Department estimates that there were requisites for an Army of 230,000 men 26,544 vehicles of all kinds, leaving——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That last does not agree with the figures of the War Department itself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have the War Department figures here.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Montana is quoting the War Department figures.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think he is not quoting from the War Department on that last phase of it.

Mr. BORAH. That is what the Senator said. I do not know.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to continue with my statement. I was about to state what has been going on——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I give the Senator further information with respect to this matter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should say that distribution has been made between October 31, 1920, and the 1st day of February, 1921, so that the 41,529 cars were reduced 34,463. On February 1, 1921, the War Department declared they had on hand, over and above the amount estimated as necessary for an Army of 250,000 men, a surplus of 7,066. Accordingly, if we are going to reduce the Army to 170,000 or 150,000, the acceptance of the pending amendment for the distribution of 10,000 more cars would seem to be quite reasonable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had hoped to make this a continuous statement so as to tell the story properly, but it seems impossible. I am perfectly good-natured about it, because I know it is the habit of all of us in the Senate to interrupt in that way.

The bill provides for the disposal of 10,000 trucks and 2,000 automobiles by sale. Something over 6,000 of them have already been sold. I will say that the bill provides for the sale of 10,000 dating from last January 1, and that the 10,000 shall be sold in the first six months of the year.

There are nearly 4,000 left to be sold under the provisions of the bill. They are junk. They are not serviceable. They are worn out. The representatives of the Department of the Interior have attended some of the sales and have been unable, so one of the representatives of the department himself told me, to find a car that was worth buying, repairing, and putting into use. The Department of Agriculture representative has told me the same thing. They have been going about and watching some of the sales. The cars which the War Department have left and which this bill commands them to get rid of are not worth anything for active service unless a considerable amount of money is spent in putting them into repair again. But we do not find the Department of Agriculture or the Postmaster General or the Department of the Interior or the Public Health Service offering to buy a third-rate car and spend money on it and put it in repair. They want to take a car out of the stock of the War Department, a brand new car assigned for the use of the War Department, and get it for nothing and make the War Department keep the old cars.

That has been going on here for the last two or three months, and the drive in its influences has ramifications all over the country. All they have to do is to "press the button" and people interested in the building of good roads wire to Representatives and to Senators urging that the Secretary of War be directed—not authorized, but directed—to turn over more trucks from the War Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Where do they get this information? I have had two or three letters and have written back that there are no motor vehicles available, and yet they write me that their information is that they are here and are not being used; that there are good trucks and good automobiles which may be had. They get the information somewhere, but it is misinformation.

Mr. LODGE. It is misinformation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the easiest kind of alleged information to distribute.

Mr. LODGE. They get it from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I want to know. I want to write back and tell my correspondents the facts.

Mr. BORAH. I am not interested in the Department of Agriculture; but is there a department here which is engaged in sending out absolutely false information?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I am inquiring about.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do not send it out officially.

Mr. BORAH. They are just as crooked if they send it out unofficially as information from the department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For example, I heard yesterday from the officer of the War Department who has supplied the figures to Representative MACGREGOR, who has made a study of this thing and who stands aghast at the waste of public money which has been going on by this free distribution, that the Post Office Department to-day has 800 trucks stored at Relay, Md., and yet it is asking for 2,000 more. Perhaps the Postmaster General does not know that.

Mr. BORAH. I can understand the appetite of the department, because I have been here for 14 years, and I know their appetites are all alike.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The whole thing is a question of appetite.

Mr. BORAH. But I do not understand how a department of the Government would send out false information. I am somewhat interested in it, because this information has come back to me as it has to others, and I am simply waiting for developments here to see where we are. But if people in the various States are being informed by a department of the Government here that certain facts are so when they are not so, that is a thing which I should like to know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not state that a department of the Government is doing that or that any high responsible officer is doing it, but the rumor was started by some one, "You can get more trucks if you can get the Senate to direct the Secretary of War to give them to you," and that "the trucks are in such and such a place near your home city or the capital of your State." That is what is going on. Now, I am going to read to the Senate a newspaper dispatch from Texas.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that I am not going to press the amendment which I have suggested. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This dispatch is from Austin, Tex., and is headed:

WAR EQUIPMENT WILL BE SOLD AT CAMP MABRY—OF MANY AND VARIED KINDS, BUT STATE DOUBTS IF SALE PAYS FREIGHT RATES.

AUSTIN, TEX., April 22.

An unusual sale is to occur at Camp Mabry, May 3, when the State board of control—sells a large amount of war equipment which was given the State highway commission by the Federal Government. It is estimated that the freight will amount to more than the equipment will bring at sale. "The State was required to pay the freight, which amounted to $21,000," said A. R. Johnson, of the board of control, who will have charge of the sale.

That is, of Texas—

Now, listen!

Thirty-five motor trucks, representing 11 different makes and ranging from 1 to 3 tons capacity, are to be sold; also 15,000 rolls of barbed wire, which were to have been used for entanglements at the front. Among other things to be sold are two 36-gauge steam locomotives and tenders, two 24-gauge gas locomotives, 12,000 fence posts, 600 escort wagons and parts, 300 folding lanterns, 3 mine-sinking pumps, two flat cars, three 15-ton trailers, sixteen 36-gauge trucks, three 15-ton Holt tractors, three concrete mixers, 950 "pieces elephant shelters."

Mr. BORAH. What are those?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not advise the Senator. The article continues:

Eleven water carts; 5 boxes hoisting-engine parts; 2 locomotive cabs; 32 flat cars, 36 gauge; 2 steam locomotive tenders; and 4 trailer tops.

All of this material, according to the statement, delivered through the channel of the Department of Agriculture from the stores of the War Department free of charge, is to be sold by the State for road-building purposes.

Mr. President, I think we had better call a halt on the free distribution of any more material. I sympathize with the House of Representatives in the provision which they have put into this bill that whatever surplus trucks there are now—and we fix a minimum which shall be sold—shall be sold for cash and the money turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Now, I want to state how many trucks have been distributed to the States, so that we may ascertain if it is conceivable that any of the States actually need new trucks. By the way, the State of New Jersey sold eight Pierce-Arrow trucks the other day for $390 apiece.

Mr. BORAH. That sounds like a battleship sale.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The paper from which I am about to read is a "Statement of all motor vehicles transferred from War Department surplus to the Department of Agriculture, showing allocation by States as nearly as can be determined from records available":

	Passenger.	Light delivery trucks, class AA.	Ambulances.	1 to 2 ton trucks, class A.	3 to 5½ ton trucks, class B.	Motor cycles.	Bicycles.	Total.

It is conceded that the State of Arkansas has wasted that property outrageously——

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly inform us the date of the statement from which he is reading?

Mr. WADSWORTH. June 4, 1921.

Mr. PHIPPS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The statement comes from the officer of the War Department who has charge of the matter of turning over these motor vehicles to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should like to make a continuous statement of this matter, if Senators will please refrain from interrupting me until I conclude.

Mr. STERLING. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. These figures may vary a little from the actual accurate figures.

Mr. STERLING. They vary considerably from a statement here which purports to be the statement of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there will be found quite a number of variances; but the Bureau of Public Roads, may I indicate to the Senator, when this movement was first started not only announced to the States that these motor vehicles were going to be at their disposal but even canned food. That bureau will start anything. I continue the list showing the number of motor vehicles which have been distributed to the various States:

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator state whether he is reading now the number allotted to each State or the number actually delivered?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The number turned over to the Department of Agriculture for allotment, according to these figures, in the aggregate the several States, being the best figures that the War Department can produce from the last available operations.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have they actually been delivered to the States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The overwhelming majority have; there are still some in the course of delivery, but the ones enumerated have been turned over; and, mind you, the War Department knows where they are shipped; it knows the allocation, because they have been taken out of the War Department stores.

Mr. FLETCHER. On what basis is the allocation made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The allocation has been made many times during the last 18 months.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that; but what is the basis of the apportionment? Is there any basis for it at all, or are the motor vehicles granted on request?

Mr. WADSWORTH. On request from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STERLING. Are they not allocated upon the basis of the road mileage in the several States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is true; but the request is made of the War Department by the Department of Agriculture, and that is all the War Department knows about it; they have no control over the distribution.

To resume the figures where I left off, as to the number of vehicles distributed to the various States:

Mr. President, in this connection I ask to have printed in the RECORD a table showing motor vehicle spare parts turned over to the Agricultural and other departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Chart showing each class of motor vehicle spare parts turned over to the Department of Agriculture and other departments, including the value and approximate period for which the spare parts will provide maintenance for stated number of vehicles.

Name and type of vehicle.	Approximate period for which spare parts were supplied.	Value of spare parts.

Heavy aviation 3-ton	1 year's maintenance for 2,000 vehicles.	790,000

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there have been 9,000 motor vehicles turned over to the Post Office Department, and yet they want more. To state the figures proves that they can not need more, if, indeed, they have taken any care of the trucks that have been turned over. This old Santa Claus of a War Department, against which everybody is making a drive on account of its extravagance, has turned over to other departments without charging them one cent, and without getting a particle of credit for the transfer, over $130,000,000 worth of property, including altogether 37,000 motor vehicles. The Postmaster General blithely asks for 2,000 more, and there is a scheme on foot to get a thousand or two thousand more tractors. The Senate, over my protest, as will be recalled, attached an amendment to the fortifications bill during the last session directing that 1,250 brand new tractors be turned over to the States. I have information which is not official and I can not vouch for its accuracy, but it is to the effect that at least one of the States is renting the tractors and pocketing the money.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Unfortunately, I have not been here to listen to all that has been said, and I do not care to have the Senator go over it again; but I should like to ask him whether there has been a survey of the trucks and automobiles owned by the War Department for the purpose of determining how many we have?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department have given out their official figures as to exactly how many they have on hand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The reason why I ask that question is because not a great while ago a representative from Camp Bragg, an employee of the War Department, who had been there for some years, informed me that in that camp alone there were literally acres of automobiles standing out in the fields unprotected. I sent him to the Secretary of War after making an appointment with the Secretary, and he conveyed that information to him. I have been led to believe that the War Department does not know how much of this material we have on hand, scattered over this country in various camps to-day; and I am more interested in knowing what we have on hand right now than anything else in order that we can act intelligently upon its distribution. I think we all agree that none of this material that could be used ought to be left out exposed to the elements to be destroyed. If it can be used on highways, in the Post Office Department, or elsewhere, it should be used.

As I say, I confess that I have not been able to follow the debate. I am interested in what the Senator has stated as to the allocation of certain automobiles and trucks; but I am still wondering if the War Department knows what number of trucks and automobiles that this Government has paid for are now scattered somewhere throughout the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Military Affairs Committees of the House and of the Senate have been discussing and examining this thing for over a year. At every set of hearings we have had on appropriation bills, and sometimes on other bills, we have questioned the authorities of the War Department most closely and severely as to the actual facts; and I have laid before the Senate this morning the last figures concerning motor trucks and motor vehicles now in the hands of the War Department, owned by it.

I desire, for the purpose of the RECORD, to put in some more figures.

A moment ago I understated the number of motor vehicles of all types turned over by the War Department to other departments. I think I said it was 37,000. The figures furnished me, which I had not looked at closely enough, tell me that it is 48,019. Here is the way they run:

Department of Agriculture, 26,985.

Post Office Department, 8,259. I was a little in error when I said "9,000" a moment ago; it is 8,259.

Public Health Service, 1,559.

Thirty-nine were sold to the War Camp Community. Eight were sold to the Food Administration. What the Food Administration has done with them, or what the War Camp Community has done with them, we do not know.

The superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Building got two. They were sold to him.

One was sold to the Department of Labor, 3 to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and 10 to the Department of Commerce.

Then for river and harbor work the department turned over, free of charge, 299 trucks or motor vehicles.

To the House of Representatives and the Senate, and so forth, 20.

To the Commissioners of the District of Columbia three were sold.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, are these trucks or automobiles?

Mr. WADSWORTH. These are motor vehicles.

One hundred and thirty-seven were turned over, free of charge, to the Interior Department; 6 to the Treasury Department; 13 were sold to the Housing Corporation, 1,263 were turned over to the Navy and Marine Corps, of which 539 were paid for by the Navy, the rest being given.

I submit that the War Department has supported these people long enough; and if there are to be any more transfers—and I can not conceive that there should be, in view of the fact that they are already 1,500 trucks short—let the money pass, and let these departments show what they are getting in the way of Government property. Although it may not be a popular attitude to take, I, for one, am opposed to any further free distribution to the States. They have had 26,000 motor vehicles in 18 months' time. If there are any more that are serviceable—and I can not believe it—let them be sold, and let the money go into the Treasury. That is what the bill proposes.

I have an understanding with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] that he is to offer an amendment which will give the Secretary of War the alternative of selling these 10,000 trucks or of turning over not more than one-half of them to the Department of Agriculture in accordance with the provisions of existing law. That amendment was part of the conference report on the Army appropriation bill passed at the last session of Congress and adopted by both Houses. It was a compromise between the Senate and the House, the House conferees fighting almost to the bitter end against any further transfers free of charge to the Department of Agriculture or any other department. The more I have studied this thing, the more I am inclined to side with the House in their contention.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, why does the Senator yield to the proposed amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will tell the Senator why. I will be perfectly frank about it. None of these trucks will be turned over to the States, because they are junk. The States will not accept them; but they will not believe it, and the only way to teach them is to let them go and see them.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following paragraph:

That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall appoint a committee, to consist of not less than three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, and that such committee shall inspect once during each fiscal year not less than two of the general and special service schools of the Army.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have only this to say: Every year a committee of Congress is sent to the Military Academy and the Naval Academy. Not more than half the Army officers are graduates of the Military Academy. The Army service schools are attended by all the officers, those who are not graduates as well as those who are graduates of the Military Academy; and no committees of Congress ever inspect those service schools. This amendment is to require that every year at least two of these schools shall be inspected by committees of Congress.

I know, Mr. President, that it is a great inconvenience for Senators to leave their official business here and visit these institutions, but the work they are doing at these service schools for the Army is very important, and committees from Congress should make inspection of their work and report their findings.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of having Members of the Congress visit the Army service schools and the cantonments and camps and arsenals, and under ordinary circumstances I should lend every bit of encouragement I could to it. I gather, however, that if this amendment becomes a law the committees visiting these schools will have all their expenses paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. This is the day of economy, and I think I had better raise a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state his point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is legislation upon an appropriation bill and is not reported from a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment not having been reported from a committee, it is not in order. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 34, line 19, after the word "sell," it is proposed to insert the following:

or to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws for its own use and the use of the several States in road work and maintenance of roads.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I merely want to say that in following the statement of figures which has been read into the RECORD by the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, and comparing it with information which has reached me, I find quite a variance, which illustrates the fact that there is a wide difference of opinion as between the War Department and the Agricultural Department regarding the surplus trucks, automobiles, and other vehicles remaining on hand. I am rather inclined to think that an accurate inventory should be ordered at the end of the present fiscal year to determine definitely just what stocks of supplies the War Department has on hand, including not only trucks and automobiles but other supplies of every kind and nature. We are told that there are great quantities of machinery that would be used for finishing automobiles, and other machinery that is of value that is not stored properly; that is, out of doors, being destroyed by weather conditions; and I beg to suggest that the Committee on Military Affairs should take cognizance of that situation.

I feel that if the War Department has these automobiles which the Bureau of Roads of the Agricultural Department claims it has available for distribution it would be better to turn them over to the various States, and fill the requisitions and requests that they have already made than to allow those automobiles to remain out in the weather. They are not being used, and they are not being properly protected. For that reason I urge the adoption of this amendment to the clause as framed by the House.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said a while ago that his information was that the trucks at Camp Holabird had been turned over to the Agricultural Department to be turned over to the States to be used in building good roads. Since that time I have telephoned to the Bureau of Roads, and they tell me that they have no trucks whatever at Camp Holabird, and they have but very few assigned to them anywhere, possibly a dozen; that they have distributed them to the States, and they are now being used in the construction of good roads. They further tell me that they can use all the trucks that they can get.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. DIAL. To listen to the Senator from New York, it would seem that there is a different pocketbook to pay for trucks assigned to the Army and those assigned to the other departments of our Government. I can see no good reason for the Army keeping these trucks and letting them rust out in the weather. As I stated a while ago, last Saturday I saw hundreds of trucks, perhaps, at Camp Holabird—I did not count them—out there in the weather, and my information was that they were put there before the armistice. They are absolutely new and have never been used. I can not see any difference between the War Department of this Government, the Post Office Department, the Good Roads Bureau, or any other department. The property is bought from the money collected in taxes from the people and is paid for out of the same pocketbook.

I do not want to be unfriendly to the War Department, but I do not want it to arrogate to itself the belief that it can take this property and keep it there and let it rust out. We all know that property will rust out about as quickly as it will wear out. I can see no better use these trucks can be put to than for building good roads all over the country. If the Post Office Department needs some, let the Post Office Department have them. There should be no antagonism whatever between the War Department and any other department of this Government. But to my mind the War Department does not need those trucks; otherwise they would have used them long before this, at least two years and a half ago. The fact that they have not proves positively to me that they do not need them, and they ought to be disposed of in some way.

I did not catch the full meaning of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, but I understand it purposes to turn over the trucks, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to be used in building good roads.

Mr. PHIPPS. I will say to the Senator that the purpose of the amendment which I have offered is to permit the turning over of these trucks to the Bureau of Good Roads, Department of Agriculture, to distribute a certain proportion of the trucks to the States, instead of providing that the entire surplus shall be sold. The provision in the House text of the bill calls for the sale of 10,000 trucks and 2,000 passenger-carrying automobiles during the first nine months of the current calendar year.

Mr. DIAL. And the Senator's amendment would turn them over to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. PHIPPS. It would turn over to the Department of Agriculture one-half of that quantity for distribution to the States for use in building good roads.

Mr. DIAL. What does the Senator suggest shall be done with the other half?

Mr. PHIPPS. I think the Government ought to sell them. If the States want more than are allotted to them, let the States pay for them. I am inclined to agree to a large extent with the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, that it is only proper that the War Department should have some credit for the property which it turns over, and if this property is to be sold, and the War Department is willing to take a second-hand price, or almost a scrap price, for material that can be utilized, it seems to me the States should be willing to pay a reasonable figure for that machinery. Already great numbers of these automobiles have been turned over to them, and I think they could very well use a portion of their money for road-building purposes in the purchase of the necessary tools with which to build the roads, including trucks and automobiles.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I think it would be very well to let half of them go, but if we sell the other half we will get very little for them; we will throw them away. I do not see any particular objection to the War Department getting reasonable credit. After all, it is a question of bookkeeping. But that is not the point. The point I am trying to bring to the attention of the Senate is that the property of the United States ought to be put to use; it ought not to be allowed to rust out.

Mr. PHIPPS. I would like to say further to the Senator that had it not been for the very definite attitude displayed by Members of the House who had to do with this bill, and which was displayed in the consideration of the bill in the last Congress, and particularly in the conference over the disposition of the bill, I would have had the amendment provide that they should all be turned over to the States. But knowing the attitude of Members of the House as displayed in the past, and particularly as displayed in the preparation of this bill, in conference with the Senator from New York, it was felt that we could not get the assent of the House to the full allowance.

Mr. DIAL. No doubt the Senator from Colorado and I are working to the same end. We are on the same committee and we want to do everything we can to build up the roads in this country.

Mr. President, I have no ill will against the War Department. I have a great many friends in that department. But the people of this country are a little bit impatient over their extravagance. Down in my part of the country last year and year before last that department allowed linters to stay out in the weather and absolutely rot. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of bales of linters of some value simply decayed and went to waste and were hauled out and thrown in the gutters and around in the fields. Several hundred bales in my own town were hauled out and disposed of in that way. I am trying to get that department to realize that the people of this country are tired of paying taxes and not having a dollar bring a hundred cents return. We want to stop appropriating money it is not necessary to appropriate. I want the War Department to have all that is necessary to keep it up in proper shape, but the people of this country will not stand for any such reckless extravagance and any such indolence and willful waste any longer. We bought bonds and paid for them; they have gone down below par, and at the same time we look out of every window and see property going to waste every day. We want that stopped.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 52, at the end of line 3, add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the following proviso, relating to medical and hospital services in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, to wit: "Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the payment of commutation of quarters, subsistence, and laundry, or quarters, heat and light, and longevity to any employee, other than the commissioned medical officers provided for by statute," contained in the act approved March 4, 1921, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just this word of explanation. My attention had been called to this matter through correspondence with two women who are in the reconstruction aid service, one at Boston, Mass., and the other at Chicago, Ill. On hearing from these aids in this service I submitted the matter to the Surgeon General, and I have a communication from him, and I ask that a part of that communication be read by the Secretary.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator to take the position that commutation of quarters should be extended to all engaged in any of these activities?

Mr. STERLING. Not all engaged in any of these activities, but in this particular activity, I will say to the Senator from Utah, the reconstruction aid service, Army service, and under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Army. It is estimated, I may say, that a great number of these aids will be obliged, if they can not have this commutation, to leave the service, and the service will be greatly impaired. I think it is a most important and valuable service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will just withhold that until an extract is read from the letter from the Acting Surgeon General.

Mr. KING. I do not want to be estopped. I will withhold the point of order for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

A large number of aides, dietitians, nurses, and administrative assistants are needed by the service in order to furnish proper hospital care to disabled ex-service men and women, and provisions were made for uniform grades and compensation in each of these groups of employees. The regulations contain provision for compensation of these groups on the basis of salary plus bonus, with quarters, subsistence, and laundry, or allowances in lieu thereof, the latter to be given only when it is not practicable for the service to furnish quarters, subsistence, and laundry in kind. The giving of such allowances as a part of compensation is an old, established method in the service for the purpose of meeting varied conditions in the different hospitals and to simplify the procedure in making necessary transfers. Legal advice was solicited before adopting this plan, and the opinion was submitted that there was no legal objection, which was confirmed by a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury under date of February 21, 1921.

Approximately 50 per cent of the reconstruction aides are now receiving allowance in lieu of quarters, subsistence, and laundry, only because quarters in kind can not be furnished, as space for that purpose is not available. It is estimated that a large number of the young women will resign if this allowance is cut off and that others will eventually resign because of overwork caused by the undermanning of the hospitals. In this connection it is brought to your attention that the matter of losing the services of this personnel is one of extreme seriousness to the service, since upon the resignation of the young women in question it will be impossible to replace them, as qualified personnel is not available.

Mr. STERLING. One of these workers, the one from Chicago, says in the letter I received from her:

About 50 per cent of all reconstruction aides are now receiving allowance in lieu of quarters, subsistence, and laundry. Many of these girls live at home and are obliged to contribute to the family budget. If this provision becomes operative, no matter how much they like their present work, it will be necessary for them to seek more lucrative employment, since it is a physical impossibility to live on $80 per month.

Mr. President, this does not ask for one cent by way of appropriation. It simply authorizes an allotment out of a $33,000,000 appropriation to the War Risk Insurance Bureau in the last sundry civil act, and because of the great need of this service, its importance to the Government, and its importance to the soldier who is seeking rehabilitation and training in occupational service I think this provision of the sundry civil act should be repealed, and that is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am surprised at the Surgeon General asking for the repeal of this provision. That was put in the last sundry civil act, Mr. President, to cure a wicked practice which had been going on in the Public Health Service for some time. Senators, men doing clerical work in the Public Health Service are drawing commutation, drawing longevity pay, and drawing laundry pay. Men taken from the Treasury Department and put into the Public Health Service, who had worked in the Treasury Department for over 15 years and never received a salary over $1,600 during that whole length of time, are transferred to the Public Health Service, and draw longevity pay, commutation of quarters, and the $240 bonus, and their salaries raised from $1,600 to approximately $2,780.

Mr. President, the law provided that these privileges should be extended only to commissioned officers, and the Public Health Service, to get around it, made the employees administrative assistants, and they drew commutation of quarters, $65 a month, and longevity pay, and pay for laundry, running the salaries of many clerks up to $3,400 and more.

As to these nurses, Dr. Long, the representative of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, was in my office day before yesterday, and we went over the whole situation as to the nurses. What this amendment means is that nurses will be paid and administrative assistants and clerks in the Public Health Service will be paid the same as the men and the women doing similar work in all the other departments of the Government and in addition receive these other privileges. Why, there has already been introduced in this body a bill to place some of them on the retired list.

No Senator would vote for the repeal of that provision if he knew what it meant. Make a point of order against it? Of course, we will make a point of order against it. I wish to say that the provision will not be changed in this body until all the Senators know what it means. I think even the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service has acknowledged that the present practice is wrong and never ought to be allowed in the future. I tell him now that it is not going to be changed. We are going to clean up that department; if possible, we are not going to have clerks drawing officers' pay, and I do not believe the Senate of the United States is going to put clerks on the retired list as yet or pay them longevity pay, laundry allowance, and commutation of quarters.

No wounded soldiers are going to suffer if this amendment is disagreed to. We have had separations from the service of nurses, and I do not know of a discharge that has been made but what the discharged nurse has asked to be put back in the service again. Head nurses drawing over $3,400 a year! Is it any wonder the American people are taxed to death? I am perfectly willing to pay nurses, to pay administrative assistants, to pay clerks for the work they do, and I want the Government of the United States to be the best paymaster in all the world, but I am not going to stand here and allow the Government of the United States to be robbed if I can help it.

My colleague suggested that he would make a point of order against this, and if he does not I shall do so.

Mr. KING. I would be glad if the senior Senator from Utah would do so, but having called the attention of the Chair to the fact, I now make a point of order against the proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. KING. Under Rule XVI, it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, involves expenditures not estimated for, and not reported by any committee.

Mr. STERLING. Before the ruling is made on the point of order I should like to ask the Senators from Utah, or either of them, if they would object to an amendment which would exempt those in reconstruction-aid service, and those alone, from the provisions of the proviso in the sundry civil act?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that Dr. Long has agreed upon a base pay for these nurses, and it will be put into operation under a regulation of the department, and there will be an amendment of rule 53 of that department, as I remember the number. Those nurses are going to be taken care of just the same as they are taken care of in the Army and the Navy, but to no greater extent.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and that the amendment is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, at the end of line 6, insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, upon request of the Secretary of the Treasury, to transfer all building equipment and ground at Fort Meade, S. Dak., to the Treasury Department for the purpose of providing hospital facilities for sick and disabled veterans of the World War.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if there has been any request made by the Treasury Department for that transfer?

Mr. STERLING. No; not that I know of.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I should like to have the Senator explain why the transfer is to be made.

Mr. STERLING. The transfer is most desirable, I will say to the senior Senator from Utah, for the simple reason that here is property the building and construction of which cost more than a million dollars, and which is located in one of the healthiest places in all the United States. It was an Army post, as the Senator knows, I think. It is unused and would be an ideal place for the quartering of soldiers who are sick and disabled. The object of the amendment is simply to authorize the transfer to the Treasury Department, on the recommendation of the Secretary, and nothing else. I suppose the Secretary of the Treasury will be guided in his recommendation by the suggestions or advice of the Secretary of War as to the needs of Fort Meade for an Army post or as to the lack of any such need.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not a fact that legislation passed at the last session of Congress specifically authorizes the President to take any property from one department and give it to the Public Health Service or use it for hospital purposes? In other words, has not the President power now under the law to make the transfer?

Mr. STERLING. I think it is not so understood by the Secretary of War himself, I will say to the Senator from New York. I, in company with my colleague and the Congressman from that district, had a conference with the Secretary of War, and later, and after that conference, he gave us to understand that he did not see how under the existing law he would be authorized to make the transfer.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the property is practically abandoned by the War Department and not used now.

Mr. STERLING. It is not used now unless it is used by a few enlisted men who are merely caretakers.

Mr. FLETCHER. It merely authorizes a transfer to the Public Health Service for use in taking care of injured and disabled soldiers?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see any objection to it at all, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add at the proper place in the bill the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to grant to the association known as the United States Training Corps for Women the free use of such Government land as he may consider advisable for use by said association in the conduct of recreational camps for women, and to loan to said association such camp equipment as shall in his judgment be necessary to completely and properly equip such recreational camps as said association shall from time to time establish and operate, the use of said land and equipment to be granted upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War shall consider advisable for the protection of the Government. And the Secretary of War is further authorized to detail not to exceed 10 officers of the Army to duty at said recreational camps for such periods as he shall deem advisable.

Mr. KING. I make a point of order against the proposed amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw it.

Mr. KING. No; I shall not.

Mr. OVERMAN. The women of the country are interested in this amendment. We all know something about the great work that Miss Susanna Cocroft has done for the women. There were recreational camps for women last year which did a great deal of good. They had at the camps something more than a thousand women at their own expense.

The proposed amendment does not contemplate the expenditure of a cent of money. It merely authorizes the Secretary of War in his discretion to do certain things. The women propose to establish five or six training camps in the United States; and if they do so, it is proposed to let them have the use of the tents at their own expense. They will maintain the training camps themselves.

I do not see why the Senator from Utah should object to it. There is no expenditure of money involved, and merely discretion is granted rather than any direction to the Secretary of War whatever. If these good women of the United States want to have the training camps that did so much good during the last war and want to keep them up in this way, why should anyone object to allowing the Secretary of War to furnish them tents?

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina what is the nature of the training they get there?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows something about it. During the war they were given outdoor exercises and trained for hospital work. They were given all kinds of training for war purposes.

Mr. SMITH. I thought perhaps it was military training.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator ought to know all about this training. If he does not, he did not keep up with what the women were doing throughout the whole war in these training camps.

I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his point of order. It is in behalf of the good women who desire to carry on these training camps.

Mr. KING. It is a very difficult thing to resist the appeals of my friend from North Carolina. I know he is a great champion of the ladies and a champion of their rights. However, this is merely a pretext—of course, the Senator does not offer it for that purpose—for getting something out of the Government. It will cost the Government not only a few dollars but a great deal. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. In what way will it cost the Government a great deal of money?

Mr. KING. In the first place, it authorizes a detail of officers for training and the furnishing of tents and various other things.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; not various other things. The Government has a great many officers who are on retired pay now doing nothing, retired Army officers, and they could be sent to these training camps. The War Department has the tents stored away in warehouses. I do not see how it will cost the Government a cent.

Mr. KING. Let the matter go to the Committee on Military Affairs and let them pass upon it and make an investigation and see what the costs are. It is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and I make the point of order under Rule XVI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order that the amendment is general legislation is well taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. On page 46 of the bill I move to strike out the proviso, beginning in line 8, and reading as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for salaries of civilian instructors other than in technical branches—

And also the next proviso, reading as follows:

And provided further, That not more than $100,000 shall be expended for salaries and no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum.

I think these are very grave restrictions that it will be advisable not to put in the bill. The employment of civilian instructors in carrying on this work is not merely for the technical branches but for others as well, and it may be that a very desirable man could be obtained for something more than $3,000, whereas this absolutely limits the employment of any person to a sum within $3,000.

I am not going to take any time to argue it, but I hope the chairman of the committee will not resist the proposition, because if we accept the amendment the matter will go into conference, and we can determine then whether or not I am correct in my position regarding it.

I have received this morning a very strong letter from Congressman J. J. MCSWAIN on the subject, which I would like to insert in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 6, 1921.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Please pardon the special zeal which impels me to write you asking that you consider the facts stated in this letter in connection with the amendment on page 46 of the bill to make appropriations for the Army for the year ending June 30, 1922 (H. R. 5010).

When the bill was before the House I offered certain amendments, but at that time I was not in possession of all the facts that have since come to me in connection with the work of education in the Army. Since that time I have visited Camp Jackson, S. C., and spent two days in the schools and talked not only with Gen. Hines and Capt. Burkett, both of whom are enthusiastic for the work, but talked with the enlisted men and civilian teachers and citizens of Columbia who have visited the schools, and they are all enthusiastic about the schools and all say that it would be a serious misfortune to cripple the schools now by eliminating the civilian teachers; and the bill as it now stands, on page 46, certainly has the effect of eliminating civilian teachers.

Please let me submit the following reasons why the bill should be amended on the floor of the Senate:

1. As the bill now stands, $1,400,000 will be employed in buying material, equipment, and machinery in connection with the schools, and from my observation and reports received at the War Department, the same is not necessary if the civilian instructors are to be eliminated. In fact, I was told as the schools have already been equipped with appliances, machinery, tools, etc., it is felt that the schools can be conducted successfully if 10 per cent of the appropriation be restricted to the purchase of equipment and 90 per cent be left for the employment of civilian instructors.

2. The restriction that the civilian instructors be employed only to instruct in teaching technical subjects should be eliminated, because civilians are necessary in the work of general education, and especially in helping to wipe out illiteracy. It is a remarkable fact that during the last year, at Camp Jackson, 1,733 enlisted men were taught to read and write, and one of them, Arthur Young, of Youngs Creek, Tenn., passed from complete illiteracy to the eighth grade in 10 months. I am assured that such results would have been impossible without civilian teachers, many of whom are ladies specially trained in primary methods of instruction. These boys who have been redeemed from illiteracy told me with earnest faces and well-nigh moist eyes that the works of the civilian teachers have been a blessing to them, the value of which they can never sufficiently appraise.

3. The $3,000 limit should be removed so as to provide that a limited number of civilians, say, 15 or 20, may receive more than $3,000, because it is necessary that there should be organizers, supervisors, leaders, and men of executive ability and vision to inspire, to lead, and to guide the work conducted by the teachers at the various Army posts.

I gather from the report of the hearings before the House committee that such leaders in the Army as Gen. Bullard, Gen. Liggett, Gen. Summerall, Gen. Harbord, and many others strongly approve the work of the civilians in the Army. Gen. John L. Hines, a soldier of wide experience, told me that he regarded the work as well-nigh indispensable from the point of military efficiency.

Men who are illiterate or who have not trained their minds to concentration and study can not now become efficient soldiers because of the highly technical and scientific weapons and agencies now employed in combat. Furthermore, orders that men are bound to obey under penalty of punishment, camp directions, road guides, written messages, and multitudes of matters necessary for a soldier to know, are all based on the assumption of ability to read and write.

I find also, from personal observation, that this educational program does not materially interfere with the soldier's training. In fact, it is necessary to the best soldiers' training. Now, in time of peace we are not compelled to train men to become efficient fighting soldiers in a few weeks, and can now afford to take time to lay the foundation. Even during the war emergency, when we were all hurried, men who were illiterate at the time of their enlistment were given an opportunity to learn to read and write.

As an ex-service man, I think I can see the question from their point of view, and I therefore unhesitatingly say that the ex-service men of the country would almost unanimously approve of the continuation of the present educational program in the Army and would condemn any direct or indirect steps to discontinue the work, which means so much for thousands and thousands of men who either did not have the chance in boyhood or did not take it to learn to read and write.

I am informed that the Secretary of War, Hon. John W. Weeks, has come out in a strong letter advocating the same amendments that I hereby advocate by eliminating the restrictions as to the manner of the use of the $1,500,000.

Please pardon the suggestion that if any restrictions must be placed by legislative action, not less than $1,000,000 should be made available for the employment of civilian teachers whose services shall not be restricted to teaching technical subjects but may be also used in general educational work.

I have not heard of any person connected with the Army who has come out in writing over his own signature to disapprove of the present educational program in the Army. If there have been any such statements published they have escaped my attention. I am, therefore, necessarily at a loss to understand the source of the opposition to the wonderful work now being done for the enlisted men in the Army. If generals of high commands and of wide experience approve it, and if the enlisted men strongly approve of it and beg for it, and if the civilian population cordially indorse it, then I respectfully ask why should the restriction not be eliminated and why should not the present educational program be allowed to continue?

You will observe that the suggestions herein made do not involve the expenditure of any more money. We do not ask that the sum total be increased, but only ask that the amount of $1,500,000 be made available by the removal of the restrictions, as suggested in the letter of the Secretary of War.

I believe that this question is so plain and simple that if the people of the country could only understand it I am sure we would all hear from the people in a very few hours demanding that we give these boys in the Army a chance to develop their minds and to have access to the information contained in books, magazines, and newspapers, and to have the ability to communicate with their loved ones by letter.

I feel it my duty to add that I believe after another year the appropriation for this purpose may be still further reduced, because there are being trained now in the vocational schools many noncommissioned officers who can ultimately become instructors in the trade schools and technical subjects connected with the work of vocational training; also to a very limited extent noncommissioned personnel may be used to instruct in general educational subjects. But to cut off now, without warning, as it were, the civilian instructors, would catch the Army unprepared in this respect and would therefore almost fatally cripple the work. I found at Camp Jackson that a hasty course of instruction for enlisted men to become teachers in the event that the civilian teachers are cut off is now being given by these very civilian teachers. But Gen. Hines and Capt. Burkett and the enlisted men themselves all agree in saying that the work of general education can not be carried on by the noncommissioned personnel and the enlisted personnel with anything like the efficiency and success now meeting the efforts of the civilian instructors.

You will pardon this long letter and attribute it to my enthusiasm and to a sincere belief that the cause of education, and thereby of civilization, is to a degree involved in this measure.

Yours, very respectfully,

J. J. MCSWAIN.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I also have received communications with reference to this amendment. I have not had time to study the matter sufficiently, but from the information I have derived from those who have studied it I believe that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida should be accepted by the chairman of the committee and by the Senate in order that a matter of such importance as this, touching the teaching of those who would come under the jurisdiction of these camps, may be taken up in conference and thoroughly digested and such an agreement reached as will meet the real requirements of the case.

In the communication to which the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has referred there is an instance cited where an adult within 10 months was elevated from illiteracy to a point of education equivalent to that of the eighth grade. Everyone knows that the employment of civilian teachers would give us a wider field from which to get the proper instructors. All of us who are familiar with educational processes know that we have millions and millions of lesson hearers but precious few teachers. There is all the difference in the world between the two. We can employ a lesson hearer for a nominal sum but we have to pay for teachers. I think in a case like this we should have teachers. I therefore hope the Senator from New York will agree to allow the amendment to go into the bill.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I also hope the Senator from New York will agree to the amendment. I had prepared an amendment on yesterday touching the same point. I hope the Senator will allow the employment of these teachers to be continued. They have done a wonderful work as we understand; certainly that is true at Camp Jackson, in the State of South Carolina.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the department asked for $5,000,000 for vocational training; that was their last revised estimate. The bill which was passed at the last session of Congress carried $1,500,000. The House of Representatives at this session put the amount at $1,200,000, and the Senate committee, as has been noted, seeks to restore it to $1,500,000. Of course, that is a little less than one-third of what the department asked for vocational training in the Army, and is less than one-half what has been spent during the present fiscal year. The conferees at the last session agreed upon the language which is now found on page 46, between lines 8 and 13, inclusive, limiting the number of civilian instructors to those employed only in the technical branches, and limiting the amount which could be paid to civilians as teachers to $100,000; that $100,000, of course, to come from the $1,500,000.

This is an example of the severity of the Military Committees in cutting down this bill. There is no doubt about it that this is an exceedingly severe reduction. It is, however, only one of two or three dozen reductions equally severe all along the line. Some one has got to suffer. The committee insist that the expenses be kept down. Of course, the amendment which the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] offers does not increase the appropriation, but merely has to do with lifting the limitation placed upon what may be paid to civilians. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and many others, have complained of the number of civilians who are employed in connection with the Army.

I shall not object to the amendment. It does not raise the appropriation, and we can take the matter up in conference; but I desire to say that the other House will be found almost adamant on the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to have the amendment again stated. I was called from the Chamber when it was formerly stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 46, beginning in line 8, after the word "instructors," it is proposed to strike out the two provisos, which read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for salaries of civilian instructors other than in technical branches: And provided further, That not more than $100,000 shall be expended for salaries and no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the chairman of the committee has stated that he had no objection to the amendment, for if the amendment be adopted and becomes a part of the law, unless the appropriation is increased, the amendment is going to injure rather than help vocational education. The very small appropriation is not going to permit the employment of $6,000 men nor any very large number of teachers. If this amendment is to be adopted, as I said a moment ago, there is going to be less vocational education for the enlisted man under this limited appropriation than if the language shall remain as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Or else there must be a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. Or else there must be a deficiency appropriation. That will be the situation if the chairman of the committee is going to accept the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not accept the amendment on behalf of the committee, of course.

Mr. LENROOT. But if the chairman of the committee accepts the amendment individually, it seems to me it necessarily follows that he seems to be willing to agree to increase the appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I am not.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator is not willing to increase the appropriation, then I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted, for if we are going to cut to the bone the cutting should be made where the least injury will occur to the soldier who is to receive the benefit of the training. With this small appropriation, if we are going to keep high-salaried teachers, there will be just that fewer number of teachers who can be employed to give the soldiers the elementary education which it does not require a high-salaried man to give.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not see that the amendment will limit vocational training in any respect; on the contrary, the effect would be, in my judgment, to make it more efficient. A limitation of $3,000 seems to me to be rather drastic in these days. If we are going to get high-class, well-trained, well-prepared, well-equipped educators, we can not expect to get them if we are going to limit their pay to $3,000. I do not mean that there shall be any enormous number of them at all, but I can see in a great work like this, where perhaps five or six or more such men and women as that would be most desirable in order to promote the best and highest interests of the whole work. That is the reason why I think the matter of salary ought to be left open. I do not see that the restriction ought to be imposed upon this work. It is a limitation which is without any real justification.

It does not follow if the provisos are stricken out that we are going to waste any money on other teachers. I do not see that that would necessarily follow at all. I am quite sure that it is not wise to limit the employment of civilian persons to technical branches. There may be other work, unquestionably there is other work, in connection with vocational training which is not purely technical work. Why should civilians be excluded from that kind of work? I do not see the reason for doing so.

I do not see that it would help the cause of vocational training at all to retain these provisos in the bill. I think, on the contrary, it would be most helpful to the whole work if these two provisos were stricken from the bill and we should leave those who are responsible for conducting and carrying on the work without the limitation which would be imposed by either one or both of the provisos. At any rate, it can do no harm if we strike out the provisos; the matter will be in conference, and if on more mature reflection it is insisted upon by the other House that the original provision shall remain undisturbed, the Senate could yield and leave the matter as it is. However, I think it a matter of such importance that it ought at least to go into conference.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the Senator followed my statement. The fact is that unless we are going to have some limitation of this kind, in view of the small appropriation, the amount appropriated will be used for high-priced men, laying out courses of study and systems of education with no one to teach and no one taught. That is why the limitation is necessary, if we are going to keep this appropriation down to the point where it is now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment was rejected.

CONFIRMATION OF HON. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the President has named Hon. George E. Chamberlain as a member of the Shipping Board. Mr. Chamberlain has just retired from this body, after 12 years of highly honorable service, with the esteem and best wishes of every Member of the Senate. I think it is not only in accordance with custom but it would be highly proper to have his nomination confirmed without reference to the committee. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, as in open executive session, confirm the nomination of Mr. Chamberlain.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am very glad to join the Senator from Washington in the request which he has made. I think the selection of Mr. Chamberlain is a most admirable one; no man in the country, in my judgment, is better qualified to discharge the responsible duties of the position of member of the Shipping Board than our able and distinguished former colleague from Oregon, Mr. Chamberlain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the nomination of George E. Chamberlain to be a member of the Shipping Board. The question is, Shall the Senate advise and consent to the nomination? [Putting the question.] The Senate unanimously advises and consents to the nomination.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the President be notified of the confirmation when we notify him of the confirmation of the other members of the Shipping Board, which I think will occur in a short while.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be followed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 89. An act for the public sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa.; and

H. J. Res. 148. Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following:

Hereafter the act approved December 17, 1919, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relatives of any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct," shall be executed and administered as though it had been passed and approved October 6, 1917.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the amendment relates to a matter concerning which a colloquy took place between the chairman of the committee and myself on yesterday, at which time I took occasion to explain the situation which the amendment is designed to relieve. An act was passed in 1908 under which six months' pay was granted to the widow or dependents of officers or enlisted men in the Regular Army on the death of the officer or enlisted man. That act continued in force until the enactment of the war risk insurance act in the month of October, 1917, when, by an inadvertence, it apparently was repealed. The attention of the War Department was very speedily called to that, and they asked immediately for appropriate action by the Congress to correct the error. A bill was introduced by the present chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to correct it, and that bill received the approval of the Senate, so that the matter has already had the approbation of this body; but when it went over to the House it was amended so as to take effect only as of the date when it was approved, instead of taking effect as the bill provided, at the date when the act of 1908 was repealed. The consequence is that from 1908 until 1917 this allowance was made, and from December, 1919, on it has been made, but unfortunately there is a period from October, 1917, until December, 1919, during which the widows and dependents of officers who died do not participate in this benefit, which is a manifest and most invidious discrimination against these people. The purpose of the amendment is, in effect, to continue in force from October, 1917, the act of 1908.

The bill to which I refer, which accomplished the same end, was Senate bill 2497, and it had the approbation of the Senate during the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress. The Committee on Military Affairs at that time submitted a report approving the bill, making a part of it a communication from the then Secretary of War under date of January 12, 1918, calling attention to the inadvertent repeal of this statute; so that almost immediately upon the enactment of the war risk insurance act attention had been called to the fact that it operated to repeal the act of 1908, and acting upon the recommendation of the then Secretary, the Senate Committee on Military Affairs reported and the Senate passed a bill to restore that act; but, as I say, when it went to the House a provision therein which made it operative from October, 1917, was eliminated, so that it became operative only from the time that the act was passed and approved, leaving this hiatus of about two years. During that period many men to whom we are especially indebted were called away, and their widows and dependents are thus discriminated against.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not quite sure, but, if I remember correctly, the House took that action because of certain legislation that was passed that in reality placed the officers and soldiers in the same position, if they had taken advantage of the law, as if the law dated back to October, 1917. I remember that some question arose at the time, but it has escaped my mind, and I really do not recall it now; but there was some reason for that action on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not been able to discover any reason at all for it. I have before me the record of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, which discloses nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but it came up in the House, as I remember, and in the Housse it was changed so as to take effect in 1919 instead of 1917. If the Senator will look it up—or I will, this evening—I am quite sure it will be found that a reason was given in the House for changing it to the date of the passage of the act rather than the date of the declaration of war.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, I appeal to the Senator to let the amendment go upon the bill and let it go to conference; and if there was any sound reason for the change in the House, doubtless they will insist upon it, and we shall be apprised of it. I have not been able to understand why this discrimination was made. I think the Senator ought to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he remembers what reason was given by the House for having the bill take effect upon its passage rather than from the date of the passage of the relief bill, in October, 1917, as I remember the month when the bill was passed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no recollection of that. May I ask the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Montana whether the House amended the Senate bill so as to have that effect?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the Senate concurred in the House amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. And they concurred, and I thought perhaps the Senator would remember the reasons given. I am quite sure that a reason was given on the floor of the Senate, and they insisted upon its taking effect in 1919, at the date of the passage of the act, rather than going back to the date of the passage of the original relief bill, in 1917.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I regret to say that I have no recollection of the incident, except the passage of the bill, in which I was deeply interested; and I have every sympathy with the contention of the Senator from Montana. I do not see how we can ever explain why we leave a gap of 18 months there, during which period that benefit shall not accrue.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will find out that that was covered in the legislation, although I am not positive of that; but I do remember that a reason was given for the change.

I shall not object to this, Mr. President; but when the bill goes to conference I should like the chairman of the committee, who will be one of the conferees, to have the House members look up the reason for the change of the date.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We will look it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment go in after line 7, on page 23, at the end of the pay item of the bill, rather than where the Senator has proposed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the change will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any amendment pending on page 46, under the heading "Quartermaster supplies and services for rifle ranges for civilian instruction."

The reason why I am asking the question is that I am in receipt of a telegram from the adjutant and inspector general of my State claiming that the amount allowed herein is not sufficient for the rifle ranges and the practice both indoors and on the range, and from a reading of the telegram I am led to believe that some one either has proposed or will propose an amendment to that paragraph. Is any such amendment pending?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know of no such amendment pending. May I say to the Senator that the amount appropriated by the bill will not support this activity on anything like the scale on which it has been supported before. It was not the intention of the committee that it should be. We have got to cut down, and these people have got to take their medicine.

This is really not a departmental matter. Persons from the outside, the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, appear before the committee every year on this item and on one other. They beg us for $400,000. We give them $100,000. I think last year they had $200,000.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if this is a part of the training of our National Guard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not.

Mr. SMITH. It is no adjunct of that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It reads:

To establish and maintain indoor and outdoor rifle ranges for the use of all able-bodied males capable of bearing arms, under reasonable regulations to be prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator why any appropriation at all is made if this is not in some way either an adjunct to the National Guard or a part of our military preparedness?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not in conjunction with the National Guard or any part of the Regular Army. It is for the encouragement of rifle shooting among civilians.

Mr. SMITH. To what end? For what purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To make them better shots, so that if they should be inducted into the service they would be better soldiers.

Mr. BORAH. What are the ages of the men who take this practice at Government expense?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not recollect what the age limits are. Of course, the finest rifle shots in the world take part in the matches, but civilian rifle teams compete at these matches. I think the national matches at Camp Perry attract attention all over the world, but we simply could not give them the money. We have not the money to give them.

Mr. BORAH. We would not have any right to give it to them if we had, if that is the purpose in which they are engaged.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; there is some statute of Congress authorizing this thing, or it has stood in this appropriation bill for many, many years.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is another thing which should not be charged to the Army.

Mr. BORAH. And it should not be charged to anybody.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, the Senator from Idaho does not believe that the Federal Government should encourage rifle shooting amongst the citizens.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is a matter which the citizens can take up themselves. They can organize their voluntary associations, and if they want to practice in shooting with rifles at clay birds and targets and that sort of thing they can do it. It is perfectly absurd that the Government of the United States should be appropriating large sums of money to encourage rifle shooting on the part of men who are in no wise connected with the Army, and may never be.

Mr. SMITH. I am rather inclined at first blush to agree with the Senator from Idaho, and I am not at all satisfied with the explanation given me by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for the appropriation of the $100,000; but, judging from the telegram that I have, it seems as if serious consideration has been given this matter by the War Department, for it refers to "Bulletin 4 of the War Department."

Now, I will acknowledge that this telegram came too late for me to prepare myself by getting this bulletin and seeing what importance the War Department attached to this matter. There certainly must be some importance attached to it, or we would not appropriate $100,000 for the purpose.

Mr. BORAH. That is no argument at all.

Mr. SMITH. Why should we appropriate $100,000 if it is of no benefit?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has uncovered here a matter which ought to be eliminated from the bill entirely.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly. I am not standing here pleading for it. I am simply asking for enlightenment.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator object to making a motion to strike it out?

Mr. SMITH. If we get no further information than we have now, I would not object at all.

Mr. BORAH. What page is it on?

Mr. SMITH. It is on page 46. I am not advocating it. I am simply asking for information. If it is for no purpose in the world but to encourage men to shoot rifles, I will admit that I do not see any use in having the appropriation here at all; but if there is a bulletin out from the War Department there must be some importance attached to it, or else they would not have seriously considered the matter.

The Senator from Idaho said that that was no argument at all. I was not making any argument. I was simply asking for information. The Senator from Idaho took the position that there was no reason at all for having it here. The Military Affairs Committee took the position that it had a value of $100,000, and I had not informed myself as to what Bulletin No. 4 specified. Therefore I rose to find out whether this was a matter of sufficient importance for an amendment to be added to increase it, or whether it was of such little importance that it should go out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is no mystery about this thing. The National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice are an official body, authorized by statute, headed by Gen. Philipps. That board, through Gen. Philipps or their other members, come before the committees of the Congress every year to state the requests which they have to make with respect to the civilian rifle teams in their national matches. If the Senator will read this item, he will see that while the total is $100,000 there is a proviso—

That out of the said sum of $100,000 there may be expended for the payment of transportation, for supplying meals, or furnishing commutation of subsistence of civilian rifle teams authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in the national matches not to exceed $80,000.

This appropriation is nearly all consumed at the national matches; and at the national matches there are teams from the Infantry and the Cavalry and other branches of the Regular Army, teams representing the Regular Army as an entirety, teams from the Navy, the Marine Corps, the National Guard of the several States, and civilian teams. This appropriation is to cover the expenses of that. There is no mystery about it. I have given the Senator all the information. They wanted $400,000.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not yet; just a moment. They wanted $400,000, with a much larger amount than $80,000 for traveling and restaurant expenses of these teams. We gave them only $100,000.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this information is very valuable. At first blush one would have thought that this appropriation of $100,000 was made for the purpose of having an annual rifle practice by civilians. The information now is that you have rifle practice for the Army, Navy, and National Guard, which is essential and necessary to get them skilled in the use of the rifle——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mistaken about that. This appropriation does not take care of the rifle practice of the Regular Army or the National Guard.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator had just waited a minute, I would have made myself clear.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator just said that. I will wait.

Mr. SMITH. This $80,000 is to enable civilians to take advantage of this practice of the Army and Navy——

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. SMITH. I yield for an explanation. I would like to get just what the Senator means by saying that, in addition to the practice of the Army and the Navy and the National Guard, this proviso of $80,000 is to be for the use of civilians in rifle practice. Is that correct?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not entirely. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Regulars, the National Guard, the Navy, and the Marines get all their rifle practice out of their own appropriations, and upon their own reservations at Army posts, Army rifle ranges, and Navy shore stations where there are rifle ranges, such as the one at Guantanamo. This national match is not a part of the regulated rifle practice of the services. It is a national match, open to teams of any kind who conform with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War and the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice. The Army and the several branches in it send their teams, and the Navy sends its teams, and the Marine Corps sends its teams, its best shots, to compete against men from Switzerland, teams from Europe, and various other places, teams of the National Guard, teams of civilian rifle clubs.

This is to pay the expenses of the national match, which is not an Army matter at all, is far beyond the Army, and the expenses of the civilian teams who travel and go to these matches, for their subsistence and travel expenses, which are paid out of this. The soldiers who are ordered to go there of course get their travel expenses out of the appropriation for mileage of the Army, and other appropriations. They get their rations out of the appropriation for subsistence of the Army, and other appropriations.

Mr. SMITH. This is an appropriation to enable civilians to go to these meets and to participate in them, outside of the appropriations for the regular pay of the Navy and the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and to keep the range and the targets in order, and to operate the targets while the matches are going on. Certain civilians are employed to stand in the target pits and mark the shots and telephone the records back to the scorers.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it was exactly my understanding that this was to encourage rifle practice, and as provision had already been made to take care of those in the regular service, I said this was an additional appropriation to enable civilians to participate.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 7, after the amendment agreed to at that place, insert the following:

Provided further, That no part of the money appropriated herein shall be used to pay our soldiers now in Germany, France, or Belgium 90 days after the approval of this act.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I offer that amendment in the hope that we will bring our soldiers home. I have no defense to make of Germany and no kind words to say in her behalf for the way she conducted the war. My great regret is, and will always be, that our soldiers did not go on to Berlin.

But, Mr. President, the war has been over about two years and a half, and I feel that it is time we were bringing our soldiers home. It is claimed that by some agreement Germany is to pay their expenses, which I understand will be about $72,000 a day. We have not collected much, I believe, from Germany, and possibly we will be a long time collecting the balance. Anyway, I feel that it is time that Germany should go to work and get on her feet and make the wherewithal with which to pay us what she owes us, and it will be to our interest to get her back on her feet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hope very much that the amendment will not be agreed to. It would be a most unwarranted interference, in my judgment, with the foreign policy of the United States. For the Senate at this time to take action, without any consideration at all, without any knowledge of the situation as it exists in Europe, or as estimated by the administration itself, to compel, through the withholding of pay, the withdrawal of the troops, to my mind is something we should not consider seriously for a moment; and may I say to the Senator from South Carolina that his amendment would not only do that, but it would prevent the paying of any soldier who has been in Germany, even after he gets home?

Mr. DIAL. Of course, Mr. President, I had no such intention in offering the amendment. I merely desire to have the men brought home as soon as possible.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the debate I called attention to the large sums provided in the pending measure for overhead expenses. While amounts carried by the bill for the pay of officers and enlisted men, and for their maintenance and for purely military operations are very large, an examination of the bill will show that the various items of appropriation for civilian employees, clerical help, and those engaged in noncombative employment, reach enormous proportions. As Senators know, this bill carries nearly $350,000,000. I placed figures in the RECORD yesterday showing the amounts appropriated for a number of years for the maintenance of the Army. It is only quite recently that the hundred million mark has been reached.

It seems to me that we have not yet learned how to secure adequate results from appropriations made by the Government. In every department of our National Government the amounts annually expended are disproportionate to the benefits derived therefrom. No matter which party is in power or what individuals are in charge of the departments, bureaus, or executive agencies, the results are not very different. We have entirely too much machinery in the Government, and, unfortunately, there is a disposition to increase the machinery and multiply executive agencies.

Every reported or alleged evil existing calls for another bureau or commission or for an army of new employees, and with the augmentation of these forces no benefits are obtained. It is impossible, without making an exhaustive examination—and that requires weeks, if not months—to get an adequate idea of the stupendous amount of machinery existing in the executive departments of our Government. It is manifest that with the increase in executive agencies the expenses of the Government are increased. The constant demands for increased Federal organizations is, in my opinion, an unwholesome manifestation. One would suppose that the financial crisis through which we are passing and the enormous burdens which the people are compelled to bear would arouse an irrisistible sentiment in favor of governmental economies and the most drastic reductions in governmental appropriations. I regret to say that there seems to be an increase from all of our land in the demands for Federal bounties and largesses and appropriations. The local financial difficulties seem to whet the appetites of many for Federal aid.

During this debate it has been frequently said that the people will not submit to these heavy burdens of taxation. I have made similar statements. It is scarcely conceivable that the accuracy of such statements is subject to challenge, and yet I find myself doubting the truthfulness of those statements. Generally speaking, I think it may be said that the people want an economical administration. They are opposed to waste and extravagance and desire to see honest and efficient administration in all governmental affairs. Undoubtedly the American people are politically honest and sincere in their expressions in favor of an economical administration of our National Government. But many of those who entertain this view do not hesitate to support appeals for Federal aid and for enormous appropriations in behalf of enterprises and schemes the wisdom of which is subject to serious question, and the constitutionality of measures enacted to carry them into effect is exceedingly doubtful.

An examination of the various appropriation bills passed by Congress results in a rude awakening to those unfumiliar with the questions involved; they discover that in many instances the major portion of enormous appropriations is devoted to overhead expenses and to the payment of an army of Federal employees. If the appropriation is for the rehabilitation of soldiers, it is discovered that huge sums are consumed in the mechanical appliances of the organization and in meeting the compensation charges of the battalions of civilian employees. So it is in the Army and in the Navy. In the naval appropriation bill recently passed it was shown that hundreds of millions were directly and indirectly chargeable as overhead expenses in the departments. In the bill before us we discover very large appropriations for the machinery of the War Department. By that I mean the civilian organization in contradistinction to the fighting organism.

There must be a drastic change in our governmental machinery. There is too much lost motion, too much circumlocution, too many officials and officeholders. I feel sure that the present Secretary of War is earnestly seeking to bring about economies in the War Department. All who know former Senator Weeks can bear testimony to his great ability and his unquestioned honesty and integrity. But the tremendous machinery existing in the department, and which has been created through more than a century of governmental activity, makes the task of bringing about reforms one of great difficulty.

Notwithstanding the splendid work done by the committee from which this bill came, I think there are many instances in which they could have reduced the items for which appropriations are sought without impairing the efficiency of the Army or working any injury to any branch of our military service, and I believe it was a mistake to provide for an Army of from 170,000 to 225,000.

I have referred to the demands made by the public for appropriations. In fairness I should say that in some parts of our country there are insistent demands that the burdens of taxation shall be lightened and that the appropriations made by Congress shall be not only materially reduced but drastically reduced. When attention is called to the fact that our annual expenses are four or five times greater than they were before the war, many of the American people seriously inquire as to the reason. No adequate reason can be given; and soon, in my opinion, the demands for explanation will become more insistent, and unless the policy of Congress changes, the answer to these inquiries will be deemed inadequate, and the party responsible for the high taxes and enormous appropriations will be rebuked by the electorate of this Republic.

I have had frequent occasion since coming to this body to voice my opposition to appropriation bills passed by Congress. Upon numerous occasions I have criticized appropriation bills and many of the items found therein and have protested against the extravagance and prodigality characterizing Federal administration. The serious financial condition of our country should call for a minimum of appropriation. Every effort should be made to reduce the heavy burdens of taxation.

We are not only not reducing but there is every evidence that the present session of Congress will set an example of extravagance, perhaps never before equaled, in this Republic. The warnings emanating from the Secretary of the Treasury and from Senators, as well as from various other sources, seem to fall upon dull ears. We pass appropriation bills and deficiency bills and measures calling for amounts in the aggregate in excess of our revenues and evince but little concern over the result. A number of Senators have been attempting to eliminate from this bill various items found therein, but all attacks seem futile. I called attention, when the debate on this bill first began, to the large appropriations carried for civilian employees and clerical and administrative help. I directed attention to a number of items, aggregating several millions of dollars, and insisted that the appropriations for purely administrative purposes and for civilian help were ruinous in their immensity. It seems to me inexcusable to appropriate millions of dollars, as this bill does, for clerical help and civilian employees.

I stated that before the debate was concluded I would call attention to other items carried in the bill for civilian employees and for help and assistance and labor connected with the massive machinery which controls the War Department, or, perhaps, properly speaking, which is the War Department. In order that I may sharply challenge attention to some of these items, I move to amend on page 30, line 11, by striking out the numerals "$450,000," so that as amended the provision will read:

That from this appropriation not exceeding $2,000,000 shall be expended for the hire of labor.

The bill carries $2,450,000. My amendment seeks to reduce the appropriation $450,000. If this proposed amendment is adopted, I shall move to amend line 12 by striking out the numerals "$825,000."

The appropriation calls for $2,825,000 for the pay of civilian employees other than laborers, and my amendment would reduce the item $825,000. These items appear under the heading "Incidental expenses." I invite attention to the fact that large appropriations have been made for the civilian employees and for clerical help at various other points in the bill and for every possible purpose and contingency. Yet we find "Incidental expenses" carrying over $5,000,000 for civilian employees. The provision reads, in part, as follows:

INCIDENTAL EXPENSES.

Postage, cost of telegrams for official business—and a number of other items, aggregating $5,500,000. But we find that $2,450,000 may be expended for the hire of labor, and not exceeding $2,825,000 "shall be expended for the pay of civilian employees other than laborers." So that from the item of $5,500,000, under the head of "Incidental expenses," if I interpret this section correctly, we appropriate nearly $5,500,000 for civilian employees. As to the last item, it is mandatory upon the Secretary of War. Two million eight hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars "shall be expended for the pay for civilian employees other than laborers." There seems to be no discretion. The Secretary of War is compelled to make these expenditures. How this item can be defended I do not know.

Thus we have of "incidental expenses" $5,500,000, and ostensibly for a large number of matters—postage, cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active duty, for expenses of express to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, and for the employment of an organist for the United States Disciplinary Barracks, and incidental expenses of recruiting, and incidental expenses for the apprehension, securing, and delivery of deserters, including draft evaders—from that large list of subjects, which it would seem would require a considerable appropriation, and for which apparently a large appropriation is made, we find that the entire amount is absorbed by civilian employees except $250,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire what the present status of those items is? Have we agreed to the committee amendments?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has been adopted and is not now open to amendment without a reconsideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I supposed was the status, but I did not know but what they had been passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I perceive the situation, and to save any question I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the item in line 11, page 30, was changed from $2,500,000 to $2,450,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Now, I renew my motion to strike out the numerals "$2,450,000" and to insert the numerals "$2,000,000."

At this point, as I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in presenting separately the items to which I wish to call attention, I desire to place in the RECORD a number of items for civilian expenses that are carried in this bill. I do this to show what I conceive to be the extravagance of the War Department in the matter of civilian employees, clerical help, and nonconstructive forces.

On page 2, $168,000.

On page 3, $22,000.

On page 4, $300,000.

On page 10, $600,000.

And let me say, in passing, Mr. President, as I recall that item and several others——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but he has made two mistakes already.

Mr. KING. If so, I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For instance, the Senator said on page 3 that there was appropriated $22,000 for civilian employees. If he will read the item, he will see that it includes typewriters, office, toilet, and desk furniture; textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional periodicals, and so forth. The Senator also said $168,000 was appropriated for civilian employees on page 2. That is not correct.

Mr. KING. If the Senator had waited until I concluded the sentence I would have been glad to state what the record shows and explain the manner in which these items are carried. I was about to observe that some of the appropriations carried in the bill comprise civilian compensation, clerical help, administrative assistance, and so forth, as well as items for supplies or other purposes. It is not always possible to determine accurately what part of the appropriation is to be allocated for civilian employees' compensation and what part for other purposes. The item the Senator has just called attention to contains several objects to be affected by the appropriation. Among them are compensation for the chief clerk for superintendence of the General Staff College Building; pay of a chief engineer, assistant engineer, carpenter, four firemen, and elevator conductor; and the aggregate is $22,000. So that in a number of these items it is impossible to determine just what proportion of the aggregate is allotted for the pay of civilian employees or for clerical help, but in many of the items the entire sum carried is for that purpose.

I direct attention to the item of $600,000 on page 10, where $2,835,000 is appropriated for the Signal Corps. I do not complain of that amount, large as it appears to be, but it does seem to me to be absurd and improper to carve out of that amount $600,000 to be expended for salaries and wages of civilian employees.

On page 13 there is carried an appropriation of $19,200,000 for Air Service, and $4,000,000 of that is for the pay and expenses of civilian employees other than those employed in experimental and research work; then not exceeding $270,000 for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium; not exceeding $4,300,000 may be expended for experimental and research work on airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment and pay of necessary civilian employees. It is impossible to determine what part of that item of $4,300,000 may be expended for the pay of civilian employees. There is no limitation; and so a very large part of this huge appropriation is absorbed in overhead and civilian compensation. There is nothing in the bill and nothing in the report to indicate the division which will be made, but $4,300,000 of the $19,200,000 is appropriated outright for that purpose, and millions more may be diverted to the same end.

On page 18 is an appropriation of $147,590 for clerks, messengers, and so forth, for the Chief of Staff. On the following page is an item of $48,100 for clerks and messengers for the Chief of Staff's College. On the same page is $733,000 for Army field clerks. Let me say, in passing, that there is a large number of field clerks, to me it seems too great a number, in view of the reduction promised in the personnel of the Army; but, at any rate, notwithstanding the large number of clerks and civilian employees, we are appropriating in that item $733,000 for Army field clerks. Then follows an additional item of $5,000 for additional pay in foreign service. Then there is an item for commutation of quarters, of heat and light of $198,000. That is a direct charge for civilian employees, or at least employees engaged in clerical work in connection with the Army.

On page 20 there is an appropriation of $2,500 for an accountant, and an item of pay for contract surgeons; on page 22 an item for compensation of clerks and other employees of the finance department, $1,420,000; on page 28 an item of $1,750,000 for clerks in the Quartermaster Department. On page 30 we find the item to which I called attention a moment ago of $5,500,000 for incidental expenses—$2,450,000 for hired labor and $2,825,000 for the pay of civilian employees other than laborers. On page 35 is $250,000 for employees in the Quartermaster Department. On page 36 is an appropriation of $2,000,000, and it is impossible from the appropriation to determine what amount is for civilian employees. I merely give the aggregate. It involves expenditures for a number of matters.

On page 55 is an appropriation of $45,000 for civilian assistants in the Engineers' office, and $75,000 more is found on page 76 for additional employees, and $200,000 on page 77 for engineering and other service.

In addition to all this there are a large number of items, aggregating several million dollars, which call for the expenditure of very large sums for the payment of civilian employees. There is an item for teachers in Cavalry schools, $10,000; Field Artillery schools, civilian employees, $35,000; Infantry school, $35,000; Field Artillery teachers, $5,000; Fort Monroe, for employees at that school, $12,000; contract surgeons, $36,000; civilian employees, nurses, and so forth, in certain hospitals, $900,000.

On page 20 is an appropriation of $1,875,000, which embraces a number of items, but among the items is an expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps. Notwithstanding the large appropriations carried in other items for the Quartermaster Department we find in this paragraph $1,875,000, and it is impossible to determine what proportion of that is for Army field clerks and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps.

Other appropriations as difficult to understand—that is, to segregate the amount appropriated for civilians—are as follows: On page 43, $900,000; on page 46, $100,000; on page 51, $200,000; on page 53, $220,000; on page 54, $25,000; on page 56, $425,000; on page 61, $1,350,000, and a considerable portion of that appropriation is for civilian employees.

The aggregate of all these appropriations is a colossal sum. I have no doubt that a complete analysis of the figures would show an appropriation of more than $50,000,000 for civilian employees and for those who are engaged in what might be denominated clerical work. I can not understand, with the determination evinced by the chairman of the committee for economy in the administration of the War Department, how he can justify or approve these enormous appropriations for the purposes stated in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee which was reconsidered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the bill is finally acted upon I wish to take about two minutes in a discussion of the bill as a whole.

The bill does not meet with my entire approval. I would liked to have seen it lower in the number of personnel. I am a member of the committee, and the bill is the result of a compromise between a small minority of the committee and the majority of the committee, and I believe a very good compromise upon the whole.

I wish to say for the chairman of the committee that while a minority of the committee disagree with him and his colleagues as to the size of the Army required, aside from that he and the committee itself have cut these appropriations to the very bone, according to the evidence which was produced before the committee.

I wish to put in the RECORD some figures as to the bill. The Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending the last day of the present month carried $394,700,000, and deficiency appropriations were made during the year amounting to $55,056,000, making a total of appropriations for the present fiscal year of $449,956,000. The pending bill carries $335,955,000, or $113,811,000 less than the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year, which is a very substantial saving compared with the appropriations made for the present fiscal year.

I should like to make a little comparison between the Army appropriation bill and the Navy appropriation bill. For the Navy there was appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, $433,400,000. There were two deficiency appropriations made for the Navy during that fiscal year amounting to $71,650,000, or a total of appropriations for that fiscal year of $505,050,000. The bill which passed the Senate a few days ago carried in round numbers $496,000,000 for the Navy for the ensuing fiscal year, or only $9,000,000 less than was expended in the present fiscal year, while the Army appropriation bill now before the Senate is $113,000,000 less than the amount expended for the Army during the present fiscal year.

In addition to that, Mr. President, the personnel in this bill is cut at least 50,000 men, while in the naval bill, which was just passed, there was an increase of 1,000 men, which gives us a very good idea, I think, of the difference, so far as economy is concerned, between the naval bill and the Army appropriation bill.

As I said a moment ago, while I believe the Army can, without injury to the country, be further reduced, and I expect that it will be reduced, below the number appropriated for in this bill, I think that, considering the situation, a very fair compromise has been reached.

I want to say in this connection that while the chairman of the committee thinks that this bill will provide for a minimum Army of 169,000 men, I do not agree with him. I believe that the amount appropriated will provide for a minimum Army of more than 150,000 men, unless the Secretary of War on the 1st day of July next shall arbitrarily discharge a number of thousands of men. He is given the power to do so, of course, in this bill, and he may do so, but the estimate that the chairman has made as to the bill permitting an Army of from 165,000 to 169,000 men was based, as I understood him, upon the assumption that on the 1st of July the Army would consist of 207,000 men, while, as a matter of fact, it will consist, as now estimated, of 215,000 men. That being true, Mr. President, I believe, unless the Secretary of War arbitrarily discharges some 10,000 men on the 1st of July next, that at the end of the next fiscal year, under the existing appropriations, we shall find our Army cut down to 150,000 men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McKinley	Stanley
Borah	Harrison	McNary	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Swanson
Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Trammell
Bursum	Kellogg	Nicholson	Underwood
Cameron	Kendrick	Norris	Wadsworth
Capper	Kenyon	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Keyes	Phipps	Warren
Dial	King	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	Knox	Reed	Watson, Ind.
Elkins	Ladd	Sheppard	Weller
Fletcher	La Follette	Shortridge	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Simmons	Willis
Gerry	Lodge	Smith	Wolcott
Gooding	McCormick	Spencer
Harreld	McCumber	Stanfield

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the two reserved for a separate vote in the Senate. Without objection, the amendments not reserved are concurred in. The Chair hears no objection. The question now is on concurring in the first amendment reserved, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. In the item "Pay of enlisted men," on page 16, line 9, after the word "staff," the committee proposes to strike out "$72,678,659" and in lieu to insert "$83,000,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have only about three sentences to utter; then I shall take my seat and have nothing more to say on the bill. The question now arises as it did yesterday, although perhaps some Senators were absent at the time the matter was then debated, Shall the Army, which to-day contains in the neighborhood of 220,000 men, be reduced, according to the best calculation the committee and the department can make, to the number of approximately 168,000 men and held there for the remainder of the next fiscal year? The department tells us that it will reach that figure through normal shrinkage after the expiration of about six months of the next fiscal year. That is the proposal of the Senate committee, earnestly pleaded for by the Secretary of War.

The House proposal is that the Army shall be reduced from its present figure of 228,000 men to 120,000 men by the end of the next fiscal year. Under the House appropriation 108,000 men, or 50 per cent, approximately, of the entire Army must be discharged. I beg the Senate not to inflict such treatment upon the Army. It is too drastic; it is too severe. We have done our best, Senators, to keep this bill down; as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said, to carve the items in the bill to the bone. We present you a bill $11,000,000 less in the aggregate than the bill both Houses passed at the last session. We ask you not to treat the Army in such a terribly drastic manner, for as I stand here I verily believe that if we compel 108,000 men, in round numbers, to leave the service, in one way or another our Army by the end of the latter portion of the next fiscal year will not be an Army at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a word. The House understands that the bill as passed by it will reduce the Army to 150,000 men. The Senator from New York contends that, owing to the appropriations made in the House bill, the Army will be reduced to less than 120,000. That matter could be easily taken care of, if the Senate so desired, by changing the amount appropriated. The vote, however, at this time will determine the question of whether we will raise the Army to 168,000 or 170,000 men. If the vote should be adverse to that, it will be within the power of the Senate to arrange definitely for 150,000 men, if it desires so to do.

The Senator from New York has spoken—and I am not going to take the time of the Senate—with reference to the effect of this action upon the Army. We are appropriating here $335,000,000 for an Army. That is three times as much as we were appropriating for that purpose prior to the war.

I have no doubt that to some extent the effect which the Senator from New York portrays will follow; but, nevertheless, we are advised by the experts with reference to the revenues of the Government and with reference to taxes that if we do not cut drastically there is no possible chance to reduce the taxes in this country during the next year or two years. There are only two items in connection with which we can successfully reduce taxes, and those are the appropriations for the Army and the Navy. So far we have not been able to make a cut of any moment whatever with reference to the Navy.

I do not believe there is a Senator in the Chamber who does not believe that we will be perfectly secure and perfectly safe with an Army of 150,000 men. Such an Army can be available for no purposes except police purposes; it is not large enough, and neither is an Army of 170,000 men, to guard adequately against foreign attack; and while it is true that it may have the effect of reducing the Army below that which the Secretary of War thinks proper, it is, nevertheless, also true that only in that way can we relieve the burdens which are pressing down upon the American people. I venture the prophecy that unless this Congress cuts these items there will come here a Congress which will cut them far more than we are asking that they be cut now. The Army will not suffer from reduction anything like the people are suffering from these ever-pressing burdens. Let us realize that the situation is serious, very serious, and let us meet it. One of the ways to meet it is to reduce war expenses, and we must not hesitate to do our full duty in that respect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to add my small voice to the potent voice of the Senator from Idaho.

To build a great, big Navy with the idea that we are afraid of somebody, or else with the idea that we want to make somebody afraid of us, is a mild form of insanity. To try to keep up a great, big Army with views like that, or with any other views that I have heard uttered, is not a mild form of insanity; it is mere pure idiocy.

I not only agree with the Senator from Idaho as far as he has gone but I would go further, and I see no reason why the United States should have an Army of over 50,000 men. During our most respectable existence as a Nation our Army amounted to 25,000. Nobody was picking a quarrel with us. We were picking a quarrel with nobody. We have no quarrel to pick now. Nobody has any quarrel to pick with us.

Every dollar devoted to armament on land, even though the same argument may not be made as to armament upon the sea with the same strength and force, is a dollar unjustifiably abstracted from education, from moral progress, from public-road building, from an increase of harbor and open waterway facilities, from something in itself useful to something in itself destructive and idiotic.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am unable to understand the logic of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. He tells us that if this item in the appropriation bill is reduced, or is kept at the point where the House put it, it will force discharges in the Army so that there will be a reduction to 120,000, and that he therefore thinks that will result in a practical disintegration of the Army.

If there are 228,000 men who now want to belong to the Army, I am unable to understand why the discharge of half of that number, or approximately half, would make the others who are allowed to remain want to get out of the Army. It seems to me they would want to stay in the Army all the more, because it would be harder to stay in the Army and there would not be so much opportunity for everybody to get in, and if they once got out the chance to get back in would not be so good; so I am unable to understand that logic.

Mr. President, I have the utmost respect for the chairman of this committee and for the work that he has been endeavoring to do. We have simply come to a point here where there is a difference of opinion, and fundamentally it is the difference between an Army of 175,000 men and an Army of 150,000 men.

In addition to that, as I took occasion to say on yesterday, we have 98,000 men in the militia, and it is admitted that they never were so well trained and so well equipped or anything like so well officered, because substantially all of their officers are veterans of the European war. That, of course, is a broad and general statement, and there are exceptions; but that is the general rule. Moreover, it is admitted that the National Guard is growing rapidly, not only in numbers but in its general efficiency, so that if this country were by any peradventure to be called upon to enter a war or to suppress disturbances at home, we have in addition to the Regular Army this body of men, officered, trained, and equipped, as I have said, and rapidly growing in numbers.

I think, therefore, we can safely cut this appropriation at this point, and that even if the Army should go to 120,000 we would still have all the troops necessary to maintain the "skeletonized army" of which we hear so much talk and which could be recruited in case of war.

As to war, there never was a time in the history of the United States—if we would only bring our soldiers back from Europe, where they are a constant menace, because they might possibly be attacked—when we were in a safer position than at present. What country will attack us at present? It certainly is not Germany. Why, they have taken away all the arms of Germany, and she lies there prostrate. It certainly is not France. Who will claim that it is England? If you speak of Japan, she can not under existing circumstances land a soldier in the United States. Besides, I call attention to one fact that ought never to be forgotten, and that is that the lesson of the last war to the world is that America is not too proud to fight, that she is not too cowardly to fight, that she is not too inefficient to fight, that she has the resources and has the men, and that to-day there are in the United States of America 2,000,000 highly trained soldiers——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Four million.

Mr. REED. I am speaking of those who were abroad; I think the Senator is more nearly right than I am—soldiers who would respond on the instant if the liberties or rights of the United States were menaced. Therefore, pressed as we are with taxation, pressed as we are with burdens that the people can scarcely bear, it seems to me but an act of prudence to cut as far as we can upon this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORAH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, for many years the head of the Army of the United States, a man whose military training is unexcelled, whose military experience is broader than that of any other recognized military authority in the country, I am informed has always held the opinion that the standing Army of this Government ought never to exceed 1,000 men for every million of our population. In my view, Mr. President, it would be no calamity if the standing Army of this Government were reduced at the end of a year to 100,000 men.

When Gen. Miles declared for a standing Army limited to 1,000 men per 1,000,000 of population, it was accepted by Congress and the country, and the Army was for many years maintained below that figure. During that period the National Guard was much below its present strength.

In voting upon the pending amendment Senators should remember that in June, 1916, legislation was enacted which really makes the National Guard of this country a part of the United States Army. It was stated in the course of the debate yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that under existing law, when it shall have been completely executed, the maximum strength of the National Guard of this country will be 425,000 men.

He stated, in response to questions propounded to him yesterday, that by the end of the coming year the National Guard is likely to number at least 150,000 men. The expense of maintaining the National Guard falls upon the American people and adds another great burden to that imposed in maintaining the standing Army.

Mr. President, in 1870 we had a population of 38,000,000, in round numbers. We had at that time a standing Army of 34,000. Ten years later, in 1880, we had a population of 50,000,000 and a standing Army of 24,000. Ten years later, in 1900, we had a population of 75,000,000 and a standing Army of 65,000. In 1910 our population was 91,000,000 and our standing Army 72,000. Gen. Miles had been for years the head of the Army of the United States, and I take it from these figures that his ideas prevailed and were reflected in the legislation that built up that Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, in quoting Gen. Miles, is right about the 1,000 men to 1,000,000 inhabitants being the minimum. That is what he desired in the very years of which the Senator is speaking. He desired to have at least 1,000 men in the Army for every 1,000,000 people. That was the minimum. But he really wanted a somewhat greater number.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad to be confirmed in my recollection; and it is my recollection that it was his positive and often-declared opinion that the Army should never exceed that proportion to our population, Mr. President.

Coming down to 1915, our population, I suppose, was then, in round numbers, probably 100,000,000. That was the mid-census period. I have not the exact figures of our population at that time; but our standing Army at that time was 100,000 men, or 101,000, to be more specific.

Now, Mr. President, we come down to 1920. We have a population of 105,000,000 people in this country. We have a world that is on crutches outside of the United States, a world from which we can not possibly be attacked. No man throughout the long debate on the naval appropriation bill and throughout this debate has had the hardihood to suggest that war can be made upon the United States by any Government on earth.

What excuse have we in these times, with the pressing burdens that have been imposed upon the American people by the war through which we have just passed, for building up an Army nearly twice the size of the Army as fixed by its relation to our population in this country ever since the Civil War?

Mr. President, it is to be borne in mind all the while that there is being built up another great military organization. I did not carry the figures of the National Guard along during these census years with the figures of the increase of the standing Army, but the National Guard has been growing larger. That must be considered, I think, in deciding this question. Senators who vote for this increase will have to answer to the tax-burdened people of this country. They will demand to know why their representatives stand for an increase in the standing Army of nearly 100 per cent over the peace-time period preceding this war. Senators favoring this great standing Army will also have to assume the responsibility and be able to answer for the enormous increase which by national legislation and State legislation is imposed upon the people of this country in building the National Guard.

I say to you, Mr. President and Senators, that those who want the big navies and big standing armies have seized upon the conditions that follow upon every war to build up a great Naval Establishment, far beyond the power of the people of this country to maintain; and to build up a great Army which will ultimately, under legislation now on the statute books, be composed of the National Guard, numbering nearly half a million men, and a standing Army of 175,000 men.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will not do as I did, forget to mention the fact that we have 27,000 marines at the same time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, Mr. President; and besides that a reserve of 70,000 officers. I think I am right in saying that they are outside of this Army of 175,000, am I not? I do not wish to overstate anything.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are; but they are not paid.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that they are not paid. But, Mr. President, they are ready; they are being kept ready for any military needs of this country at any time. Seventy thousand officers, even though they be not on the pay rolls, are being kept in military training, ready to officer any regiments which might be raised out of those men who were so splendidly trained for military service during the years of the late war.

Mr. REED. They are 70,000 minute men, ready to be called at a minute's notice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Seventy thousand men ready to be called on a minute's notice, Mr. President. I venture to say when we go back to the people who have to pay these bills and talk it out with them they will not be satisfied with the argument that it is mighty hard on the Army to reduce it to 150,000 or 120,000 men. Their answer will be that it is mighty hard on the people to carry the burden of this great Military Establishment in a time of profound peace.

Mr. President, this proposed amendment reducing the personnel to 150,000 ought to pass. It ought to pass overwhelmingly. It will effect a large saving to the taxpayers. The Army ought to be reduced to 120,000, the number carried by the bill as it came from the House. I do not know just what rights have been carried over into the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, but I trust the right to vote for an Army of 120,000, as the House proposes, and no larger by a single man, will be given to us in the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope the committee amendment, which is the question now before the Senate, will receive the support of the Senate. So far as the money is concerned, a very large part of it will come back in the channels of trade in this country and be distributed among the poor as well as the rich. I would not ask support of a provision for an Army of this size if I did not think it necessary at this time, an Army which may hereafter be reduced or increased, as circumstances may occur. From what I know of the situation, and from what I know of the Army, with which I have been somewhat conversant for a number of years, I believe by all means the committee should be sustained in this amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I listened with very much interest to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], as I always listen with interest to all that he says when I am in the Chamber. I was much interested in his remarks to the effect that there is no nation on the face of the earth to-day with which we are in any danger of engaging in warfare.

I heard very much of that kind of talk before April, 1917, preceding our entrance into the World War, and at that time I was one of those who believed it. It had its influence with me, and I believed at that time that there was no danger of the United States becoming engaged in war with any nation on the face of the earth. I did not see how we could be drawn into any war.

Yet when President Wilson toured the country, just before our entrance into the war, and advocated large increases of the Army and Navy, he raised a perfect furor of indignation among the people of this country because the country was not better prepared for the emergency. I think we should learn something from the experience of the last few years.

Woodrow Wilson, late President of the United States, before he went out of office, urged that we have an Army of 300,000 officers and enlisted men. That was his judgment as the result of our experience in the World War and our lack of preparedness for that great calamity. He vetoed a bill which Congress passed because it provided for an Army of only 175,000 men.

Secretary of War Baker urged in the strongest possible terms that this country keep, for the present at any rate, an Army of 300,000 officers and enlisted men.

Gen. Pershing appeared before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and urged and pleaded that our standing Army for the present be not reduced below 175,000 men, at least. He advocated that it be 200,000, but he pleaded with the committee not to make a reduction below 175,000 for the present.

Secretary of War Weeks urges that the Army plans of this country, under the Army reorganization law, which is now in force, demand an Army for the present of 175,000 men and urges that it be granted.

Are we to give no weight or credence whatever to the opinions of those who went through the great World War with us, and were probably in closer touch with it than any other human beings? Are we to give no weight whatever to their judgment as the result of the experience of that terrific conflict?

Prior to our entrance into the World War such arguments as I have heard to-day were winning arguments with me, and I voted against any material increases in our Army and Navy; but the experiences we have had in the last few years have widened my vision, and I believe we should look upon the subject from a more far-reaching standpoint to-day than we did in the days which preceded April, 1917.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just so the country may know the situation, let me state it in a word. We are talking here about an Army of 175,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I correct the Senator? It is 168,000.

Mr. REED. Very well; but we have been talking about 175,000 and 168,000 and 150,000, as though that were the military force to defend this country.

What are the facts? I will put the Army at 150,000, which is what is being contended for. There are 27,000 marines. There are in round numbers 100,000 National Guardsmen, a part of the Regular Army under the law to-day. There are 70,000 reserve officers, sworn in, subject to call at a moment's notice. That is a force immediately, instantly available of 347,000 men. Let us talk about the facts. That is 347,000 men if we reduce the Army to 150,000.

Mr. MYERS. As to the 70,000 officers who may be called at a minute's notice, what good would they do us if there were no trained and disciplined men for them to command?

Mr. REED. I will answer that by the statement that what we need always is officers, and that has always been the claim; and if the Senator wants to know where the trained and disciplined men are, I answer that there are from two to four million of them on the farms, in the workshops, and in other places, ready to be called to the colors.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; and we trained them in 1917 on sudden notice at tremendous and staggering expense.

Mr. REED. But they are trained now, and the Senator certainly will not stand here and dispute with me that a trained officer, ready to be called at a moment's notice, is not a much more valuable man than simply an untrained citizen who can fire a gun. The 70,000 trained officers ought to be the equivalent in value of a standing army of 350,000 men, or more than that number. No one can tell how great the value is. But if at the beginning of the war we had had 70,000 trained officers who could have been called on at a moment's notice they could have whipped the Army into shape in half the time.

So you have 347,000 men, 70,000 of them trained officers, practically every one of whom saw service in the war, and most of them across the sea.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, owing to physical disability I was not able to be present during the time of the consideration of the Navy appropriation bill, and I have not been able to be here very much during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. It is quite probable that I should not undertake to say a word even now, but the situation is one to which I have devoted much thought, although I am not a member either of the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There is one great outstanding fact. The Navy appropriation bill which has passed the Senate appropriated in round numbers half a billion dollars. The Army appropriation bill carries in round numbers $350,000,000 more. This makes a total appropriation for the Army and the Navy in round numbers of approximately $850,000,000.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with the organization of either the Army or the Navy to say where retrenchment might occur. At this time, so soon after the Great War is over, when we have an equipment far beyond anything we have ever had before, it is inconceivable to me that the cost of the Army and the Navy should be kept at such a figure as is proposed by the two bills to which I have referred. I submit that it will be difficult to explain to the people of the country the necessity for an appropriation of practically $850,000,000 for an Army and a Navy at this time. When all the other expenses are considered in connection with it, I presume the total expense will probably reach as much as $900,000,000.

The people of the country are burdened with taxes now. They want a reduction in governmental expenses. I do not know where we can find a place to retrench better than in the Army and the Navy. There is not a single bureau or division of a bureau in the Government that does not desire to augment its importance in governmental affairs. The bureaus themselves will not point out where retrenchment may be made, and in my judgment it is the duty of the Congress to take these matters in hand and bring about retrenchment.

I do not know whether in the Army appropriation bill the retrenchment should occur in the number of enlisted men. It may be that retrenchment could be made in some other parts of the bill. It may be that the pay of the men might be reduced. It may be that the expense of their maintenance might be reduced. But there certainly is an outstanding fact, and that is that the expenses of the Army and the Navy should be reduced and that the country will not uphold a Congress which appropriates almost as much for the Army and the Navy in this time of peace as it appropriated for the entire upkeep of the Government prior to the war.

I am going to vote against concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and if the bill is not thus amended before it is passed I am going to vote against the bill, not because I do not believe we should have an Army but because I believe the bill should go back to the committee so that the committee may study its provisions and find some place where retrenchment may take place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May we have the question stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment of the committee on page 16, line 9, where it is proposed to strike out "$72,678,659" and in lieu to insert "$83,000,000," for pay of enlisted men of the line and staff.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. In his absence I transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKINLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. However, I am at liberty to vote on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY (when the name of Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. If present he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is unavoidably absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. However, I have been very reliably informed that if he were present he would vote as I propose to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BROUSSARD (after having voted in the negative). When I voted I overlooked the fact that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is absent. I have a general pair with that Senator which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]; and

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] is absent on public business. He is paired on this question with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on account of a death in his family.

I also wish to announce that both the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ball	Fernald	Lodge	Shortridge
Brandegee	Fletcher	McCormick	Spencer
Bursum	Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Sterling

So the Senate refused to concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I assume from the observations made by some of the Senators who voted against the committee amendment that it was their intention at least to have the Army reduced to 150,000 men and held there. That was the apparent intention of the other House, or at least of some of the Members of the other House, as I understand, when that body made an appropriation of $72,678,659. As the bill now stands, the Army will be reduced far below 150,000. I know, of course, some Senators want that done; others, however, I am informed, do not want that done, but do want the Army reduced below the figure suggested by the Senate committee. Therefore, Mr. President, I offer an amendment, on line 9, page 16, to strike out "$72,678,659" and to substitute "$81,000,000," instead of the $83,000,000 proposed by the Senate committee.

Let me make this statement in that connection: From the tables furnished the committee by the War Department, and which the committee is compelled to regard as being as accurate as can be compiled, we find that if the Army is reduced to a minimum of 150,000 men and held there the appropriation necessarily would be $82,879,000, but it ought to be stated that the amount of $82,879,000 includes in its calculations the reenlistment bonus provision of existing law, which this bill proposes to repeal. The repeal of the reenlistment bonus provision will save $1,800,000 for the next year. Therefore, if the Senate desires the Army reduced to 150,000 men and held there, it will appropriate actually $81,000,000 and still retain in the bill the repeal of the reenlistment bonus provision. Therefore I move the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 16, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$72,678,659" and in lieu thereof to insert "$81,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. Before that is voted upon, Mr. President, I desire to ask a question. The Senator would concede, would he not, that the number "170,000" should be changed on line 2, page 17?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; naturally so. The amount appropriated governs that, although that provision does not govern the appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. With the understanding that the change on page 17 is to be made, and that the number "170,000" is to be reduced to "150,000," which would be consistent with the amendment which the Senator from New York now offers, I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. So far as I may do so, I accept the other amendment suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry. I suppose I must have caught it wrong, but as I caught it the amendment increases the amount appropriated in the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it increases the amount appropriated by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not catch the Senator's statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My amendment now offered would increase the House appropriation to $81,000,000 in order to retain the Army at a strength of 150,000 men when such strength shall have been reached.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon and the pardon of the Senate. I forgot that the bill is a House bill. Then, the Senator's amendment is only an increase of the amount proposed to be appropriated in the bill as it comes from the other House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KING and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say to the Senator from Mississippi that there are reductions made by the bill as reported from the Senate committee from the amounts carried in the bill as it came from the other House which do not carry the full increase as indicated by the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether the reduction in size of the Army will not involve a reduction in some of the other figures carried in the bill for maintenance, clothing, subsistence, and so forth, because, as I understand, the bill as reported provided for an Army the minimum of which was to be 168,000. If we reduce the Army to 150,000 and hold it there, that reduction will be effectuated within six months, and obviously there must be corresponding reductions in the other items of appropriations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The only other item that amounts to anything at all is the subsistence item. It happens that the Army equipment other than subsistence is being taken care of out of existing stock, but the subsistence has to be furnished to men out of stocks freshly purchased. That provision is found on page 25. If the Senate decides to compel the reduction of the Army to 150,000 men and hold it there, the appropriation made by the House for subsistence would seem to be sufficient.

Mr. BORAH. That matter will be in conference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will be in conference in any event. That is the only other item in the bill upon which the size of the Army within the figures discussed has any effect.

Mr. KING. Would there be no difference in the items for guns, ammunition, hospitals, and so forth?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. The Army have now all the guns and ammunition left over from the war, and we are not making any appropriations in this bill for new supplies of ordnance, but merely for some experimentation work.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator, then, to mean that reducing the Army from 168,000 to 150,000 and maintaining it at that figure will effectuate the saving of approximately only $11,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of only $3,000,000, including the reduction in subsistence. There has been a complete misunderstanding of this matter from the beginning.

Mr. BORAH. If the amendment of the Senator from New York is adopted, the amounts appropriated will all go to conference, anyway.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. With the understanding that the number "170,000," on page 17, shall be reduced, I have no desire to call for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next reserved amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, line 2, the committee proposes to strike out "150,000," relative to the number of men in the Army, and to insert in lieu "170,000."

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the Senator from New York is willing that the amendment on page 17, in regard to an Army of 170,000 men, shall be disagreed to in order to make it conform to the action of the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It should be disagreed to; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word. I have given notice that I would offer an amendment reducing the Army to 100,000 men; but in view of the vote had a few moments ago and of the statements heretofore made by Senators, I do not care to press that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill was read the third time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks certain tables showing the strength of the armies of other countries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the tables will be printed in the RECORD.

The tables referred to are as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. MCKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am about to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I yield to the Senator from Nebraska to enable him to have taken up the so-called packers bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6320, being the so-called packers bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. REED. What is the bill? To what does it relate?

Mr. LODGE. It is the so-called packers bill.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a House bill which the committee has reported back with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

THE COAL INDUSTRY.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey, if he does not desire to have a bill passed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I simply wish to give notice that after the passage of the packers bill, I intend to call up Senate bill 1806 and Senate bill 1807, known, respectively, as the seasonal coal bill and the coal stabilization bill.

CONDITIONS IN IRELAND.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, without reading, a clipping from the London Daily News of Tuesday, May 24, 1921. The article sets forth the charges made by Brig. Gen. Crozier, lately commander of the Auxiliary Division of the Royal Irish Constabulary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clipping referred to is as follows:

"DUBLIN CASTLE TERRORISTS—GEN. CROZIER'S NEW CHARGES AGAINST IRISH ADMINISTRATION—OFFICIAL EVIDENCE 'ARRANGED'—ACCUSATIONS OF MURDER, LOOTING, AND ARSON WHICH THE GOVERNMENT MUST INVESTIGATE.

"Further grave charges brought by Brig. Gen. Crozier, lately commanding the Auxiliary Division, Royal Irish Constabulary, against the authors and instruments of the present régime in Ireland are made public below.

"Gen. Crozier asserts that murder, arson, looting, and other forms of terrorism were practiced by the Crown forces during the six months he held his Irish command, and that it was in consequence of his determination to enforce discipline and put an end to police crime that his position was deliberately rendered impossible and resignation forced upon him.

"Perhaps his gravest accusation is that certain highly placed personages at Dublin Castle have, to his personal knowledge, been guilty of endeavoring to arrange the evidence bearing upon three murders, viz, the Father Griffin case, the guardroom case, and the Drumcondra case.

"An immediate public inquiry by a select committee of the House, or a joint committee of Lords and Commons, is demanded, and would appear to be inevitable.

"It is interesting to note that the period covered by Gen. Crozier's revelations largely coincides with that covered by the investigations of the Daily News special correspondent, Mr. Hugh Martin, whose story of police methods in Ireland is now dramatically confirmed by this leading police witness.

"CROZIER'S DOSSIER—ALLEGATIONS BACKED UP BY SWORN TESTIMONY AND AFFIDAVITS.

"[By Hugh Martin.]

"Zola's 'J'accuse!', which shook the French State to its foundations, is the obvious parallel to the challenge Gen. Crozier issues to-day to the Government of this country. It is a challenge that no government of a civilized State dare ignore.

"Gen. Crozier is not a journalist, whose evidence must necessarily be incomplete because gathered under difficult conditions and whose conclusions it is easy to sweep aside as being the fruit of ignorance and bias. He is a soldier with a brilliant record, speaking with complete inside knowledge of his subject and testifying, under stress of conscience and a sense of public duty, against the very men whom it was his task to command or to obey.

"The sum total of his testimony is, in certain aspects, a more shocking indictment of the present system of government in Ireland, both as devised and administered by those in supreme control and as executed by those below, than has been drawn up, to my knowledge, by any English journalist or any independent investigator.

"This indictment Gen. Crozier has embodied in a bulky dossier. Each accusation can be supported by sworn evidence, and many affidavits have already been taken. The charges are specific in character and are made in several instances against men occupying positions of high authority whose names are set down in writing. The dossier has been shown to a number of persons, including an ex-Army commander.

"INQUIRY ESSENTIAL.

"It therefore constitutes, if the charges are false, a libel of the most serious character, calculated not only to harm individuals but also to bring public order into contempt. The nation and the citizens are equally entitled to protection against so gross an attack.

"On the other hand, if the charges are true, the nation will demand salutary measures against a system and a personnel that has betrayed its confidence and dragged its honor in the dust.

"There seems to be no way out but the straight way, and that is the way of a public inquiry, either by a select committee of the House or, better still, a joint committee of Lords and Commons. Gen. Crozier should be called upon to produce his evidence and the most thorough measures taken to protect the lives and property of witnesses from Ireland. The latter point is obviously essential.

"Set out below in outline are some of the allegations made by Gen. Crozier upon which he must be directed to give evidence on oath. They begin with an incident at the commencement and end with an incident at the close of his term of office.

"1. AUXILIARIES AS SINN FEINERS.

"Disguised as members of the I. R. A., a company of auxiliaries, Gen. Crozier asserts, held up a post office at Kilkenny last September, gagged and bound the sorters, and opened some 20 mail bags. All the money found—a considerable sum—except £29, which was returned to police headquarters, was stolen and the letters thrown into the river. Telephone wires were cut and the district isolated by the police themselves as a blind.

"Lieut. Col. ———, the company commander, resigned soon after this operation took place. The auxiliary division had only recently been formed, and its development dates from the precedent officially set on this occasion.

"2. TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.

"Capt. ———, M. C., resigned his command after a fortnight on account of what he described as 'the methods in vogue.' Information as to the nature of these methods was subsequently obtained and was found to relate to the treatment of prisoners.

"3. MURDER OF FATHER GRIFFIN.

"Gen. Crozier is prepared to swear that he was informed, after leaving the force, by a certain cadet that he (the cadet) had murdered Father Griffin in County Galway and that a certain officer named stood by and afterwards buried the body in a bog.

"The latter officer is now alleged to occupy a position of great responsibility.

"Gen. Crozier states that a very highly placed official at Dublin Castle and a police officer of standing in the West were directly involved in the suppression of evidence bearing upon the murder. He was himself intrusted with a message between these two persons conclusively proving this.

"4. MURDER OF MR. MICHAEL O'CALLAGHAN.

"Gen. Crozier is in a position to supply important information relative to the murder of Mr. Michael O'Callaghan, ex-mayor of Limerick.

"5. THE KILLALOE SHOOTINGS.

"Gen. Crozier alleges that an ex-member of the Auxiliary Division who threatened an exposure of the circumstances under which three men were killed at Killaloe 'while endeavoring to escape' was 'squared' by the Irish government. The officer who executed this mission is now in London.

"6. 'GUARDROOM' AND DRUMCONDRA SHOOTINGS.

"Gen. Crozier is prepared to swear that in the course of a serious conversation at Dublin Castle on February 17 with an officer in high command the Drumcondra case was mentioned. This is the case in which two men were said to have been taken at night in a car from the castle and murdered at a lonely spot on the outskirts of Dublin.

"Gen. Crozier's charge is that the following words, or words to precisely the same effect, were used to him by the highly placed officer referred to:

"We managed to square the evidence in the Guardroom case, but I'm afraid we can't do it here. However, I did my best to put the wind up ———, and convinced him, I think, that he was an accessory before the fact.

"Gen. Crozier further declares that some of the police evidence in the Drumcondra case was, as a matter of fact, 'arranged,' and that he was himself present at the rehearsal of a portion of the proposed evidence before a prominent intelligence officer. That trial resulted in an acquittal.

"The 'Guardroom case' referred to above is the case in which men were killed 'while endeavoring to escape' from Dublin Castle guardroom.

"7. THE CROKE PARK 'MASSACRE.'

"This is the incident in which a party of police, following the murder of eight officers in Dublin, fired upon a football crowd at Croke Park.

"Gen. Crozier states in his dossier that one of his most trusted officers came straight to him from Croke Park after the shooting and reported:

"It was the most disgraceful show I have ever seen. The Black and Tans fired into the crowd without any provocation whatever.

"He ordered the officer to sit down at once and put his report into writing. This was done. Gen. Crozier sealed the report with his own hand and sent it at once to Dublin Castle.

"Was this officer asked to give evidence at the inquiry, and why has nothing more been heard of his report?

"8. RAIDING CREAMERIES.

"A cadet was discharged by Gen. Crozier for having knocked a civilian down, and left the country. The general had information that he intended to return to Ireland and lead a gang of robbers.

"Urgent representations were made in the highest quarter that the man should not be allowed to reenter the country. They were ignored.

"He came back, borrowed a police car, inveigled his nephew (under the plea, the latter urged, that he was a secret service officer) into joining him in a buccaneering expedition, and was caught raiding a creamery. The man was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment and his nephew to three months.

"9. THE LOOTING AT TRIM.

"In this notorious case, which led to Gen. Crozier's resignation, an affidavit has been sworn by Maj. Wake, who, as court of inquiry officer, was ordered to go to Trim and collect evidence in connection with the charge of looting brought against members of "N" company of the auxiliaries.

"Maj. Wake brought back with him from Trim a number of articles which were said to have been stolen and afterwards returned. These he showed to his superior officers at the castle. The affidavit proceeds:

"'The next day the officer commanding the Auxiliary Division informed me that Maj. Gen. Tudor had ordered him to demand my resignation on the ground that I had been irregularly enlisted into the division by Brig. Gen. Crozier, and without him, Gen. Tudor, having been consulted.

"'With the express assent of the officer I applied to Gen. Tudor for an interview, which he refused. I then requested Gen. Tudor's permission for an interview with Sir Hamar Greenwood, the chief secretary, which was declined, but he stated that I could arrange for such interview myself.

"'I then wrote to Gen. Tudor refusing to resign, as I had been guilty of no misconduct, or to accept dismissal. On the following day I was dismissed from the force.'

"10. THE FIRE BRIGADE 'HOLDUP.'

"As a reprisal for one of the members of the Dublin fire brigade having identified a cadet in connection with an alleged offense on the previous day the brigade station at Ballsbridge was 'held up' by a party of auxiliaries.

"Gen. Crozier went down himself, caught the cadets red-handed, and put the two ringleaders under arrest. He put the men back for a court-martial, against the wish of headquarters, and the men were kept in the guardroom for several weeks awaiting trial.

"Upon Gen. Crozier's resignation the men were released on the ground of 'insufficient evidence.'

"These 10 paragraphs are a mere selection from the mass of detailed evidence got together by Gen. Crozier, tending to show the state of affairs with which he had to deal. Faced with the imperative necessity of restoring discipline and checking crime one of his most valuable weapons was the power of dismissal; of this he was deprived as early as November, and his resignation was the sequel to the still further limitation of his authority.

"A PLOT THAT FAILED.

"A curious sidelight upon the attitude toward official instructions which was apt to be taken by some members of the Auxiliary Division is supplied by an incident personal to myself which Gen. Crozier recalls.

"Following my adventure at Tralee, a special order with reference to my safety was circulated from Dublin Castle among the police. A member of the auxiliaries was prompted by this (having dined well) to set off from Beggar's Bush Barracks in a car with the expressed intention of 'throwing Hugh Martin into the Liffey,' after picking up a friend at the Hibernian Hotel to help in the operation.

"The matter being reported to Gen. Crozier, he telephoned to the Hibernian requesting —— to await an urgent message which would reach him in a few minutes. The message took the form of an escort which brought him back to barracks in custody.

"By a strange trick of fate this officer was himself shot dead not long afterwards in the West.

"More points from Gen. Crozier's dossier will be published in to-morrow's Daily News, together with facts relating to his dismissal that make a public inquiry imperative."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 8, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, enter into a blessed relationship with us. We would learn through Thee. Be our teacher, whispering into our souls the secrets of the best life, thus working in us to do the pleasure of Thy holy will. Correct and improve us, that we may use our powers to the noblest ends. Thus we shall live in a realm where service is joy and the cup of life is sweet. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana made the point of order that there was no quorum present and subsequently withdrew the point.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 435. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain department publications and to provide for crediting the department's printing allotment with the proceeds.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 148) for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 435. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain department publications and to provide for crediting the department's printing allotment with the proceeds; to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 89. An act for the public sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa.; and

H. J. Res. 148. Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers in Colorado from the flood due to the overflow of the Arkansas River and its tributaries.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 6567. An act to amend section 407 of the transportation act of 1920.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill, H. R. 6300.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1921, and for prior years, and for other purposes, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33½, 34, 36, 38, 39, 40, 45, 46, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 72, 73, 74, 78, 91, 93, 98, 102, 103, 104, 109, 110, 111, 112, 115, and 118.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 15, 16, 17, 32, 33, 37, 43, 47, 48, 51, 70, 71, 75, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 116, and 120, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "year" and insert in lieu thereof the word "years"; and in line 3, after the numerals "1921," insert "and June 30, 1922"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"General Land Office: For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Law examiners—4 at $2,000 each, 8 at $1,800 each, 20 at $1,600 each; 8 clerks at $1,400 each; in all, $65,600."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"For continuation of the investigation of structural materials, such as stone, clays, cement, etc., including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000: Provided, That as much of this sum as necessary shall be used to collect and disseminate such scientific, practical, and statistical information as may be procured, showing or tending to show approved methods in building, planning, and construction, standardization, and adaptability of structural units, including farm buildings, building materals, and codes, economy in the manufacture and utilization of building materials and supplies, and such other matters as may tend to encourage, improve, and cheapen construction and housing."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$336,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"For printing and binding for the Smithsonian Institution, including $26,702.70 for the National Museum, $10,000 for the Bureau of American Ethnology, and $5,000 for the annual reports of the American Historical Association, fiscal years 1921 and 1922, $41,702.70."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Sixty per cent of the sums contained in this section for the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 19, 21, 41, 42, 49, 67, 68, 69, 76, 86, 88, 89, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 105, 106, 107, 108, 113, 114, 117, and 119.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 2 and 3: Strike out the language, inserted by the Senate, providing for the transfer of a passenger automobile from the War Department to the Civil Service Commission.

On Nos. 4 and 87, relating to the District of Columbia Rent Commission: Appropriates $15,000, as passed by both Houses, and locates the item in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 5 and 6, relating to the fire department of the District of Columbia: Increases the appropriations for contingent expenses and fuel from $2,500 to $4,000 each, respectively, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 7 to 14, inclusive, and No. 90, relating to the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia: Appropriates for the municipal court in the amounts passed by both Houses and locates the items in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 15 and 16: Appropriates $800 additional for judgments against the District of Columbia to cover a judgment certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On Nos. 17 and 18: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the amounts for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1920 and prior fiscal years shall be paid on the half-and-half basis instead of on the basis of 60 per cent from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 20 and 91, relating to the Federal Power Commission: Authorizes the use of $5,000 for printing and binding during the fiscal year 1922 as passed by both Houses and locates the item in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 22 and 93, relating to the Shipping Board: Appropriates $25,000,000 in the first section of the bill for the completion of construction work, as proposed by the House, and strikes out the appropriation of $75,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, in section 4 of the bill for all purposes of the Shipping Board.

On Nos. 23 to 30, inclusive: Restores to the first section of the bill the appropriations for the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, which were stricken out by the Senate and transferred by it to section 4 of the bill.

On No. 31, providing additional employees in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency: Restores to the first section of the bill the appropriation of $14,800, stricken out by the Senate and transferred by it to section 4 of the bill.

On Nos. 32 and 33: Appropriates $200,000 for the enforcement of the national prohibition act in the language proposed by the Senate instead of a like sum in the language proposed by the House.

On Nos. 33½ and 98: Increases the number of persons who may be employed in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance at $1,800 per annum, as passed by both Houses, and locates the paragraph in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 34: Strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, making the appropriation for hospital facilities for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance available for expenditure for construction work at hospitals of the War and Navy Departments.

On No. 35: Appropriates $550,000, instead of $650,000 as proposed by the Senate and $350,000 as proposed by the House, for operating supplies for public buildings under the Treasury Department.

On Nos. 36 and 104: Directs the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe a schedule of fees to be charged at the national quarantine stations as passed by both Houses and locates the paragraph in the first section of the bill as proposed by the House instead of in section 4 as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 37: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, for a survey of the Government boulevard on Missionary Ridge, in the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

On Nos. 38, 39, and 40, relating to the War Department: Restores the following items which were stricken out by the Senate: Three thousand dollars for Shiloh National Military Park; authority to continue available during the fiscal year 1922 certain appropriations for housing Seacoast Artillery troops in the Philippine Islands; and authority continuing during the fiscal year 1922 an appropriation to make payments for certain searchlights now under contract.

On No. 43: Provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of the Secretary of the Navy, shall be authorized to make payments for rent of quarters furnished to certain officers of the Navy while on submarine duty.

UMI

On Nos. 44 and 110: Appropriates $65,800, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $32,800 as proposed by the House, for additional employees in the General Land Office and inserts the paragraph in the first section of the bill as proposed by the House instead of in section 4 as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 45: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,156, as proposed by the Senate, for the protection of the Oregon & California Railroad lands and the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands.

On Nos. 46 and 110: Appropriates $10,000 for furniture and filing cases for the Patent Office, as passed by both Houses, and locates the item in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 47 and 48, relating to the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture: Provides that the appropriation for payment of indemnities on account of animals condemned as being tubercular shall be available on account of cattle "slaughtered" during the remainder of the current fiscal year, as proposed by the Senate, instead of for cattle "to be slaughtered," as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 50 and 111: Inserts the paragraph passed by both Houses continuing during the fiscal year 1922 the appropriation heretofore made for the Olympic National Forest and locates the item in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 51: Inserts the appropriations of $12,000 and $15,000, respectively, for the purchase of lands for the Department of Agriculture's experimental vineyards near Fresno and Oakville, Calif., as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 52 and 111: Appropriates $5,000, as passed by both Houses for the work of consolidating the labor-saving devices in the Department of Agriculture and locates the item in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 53: Restores the language stricken out by the Senate making the appropriation of $5,000 for the Steamboat-Inspection Service available during the fiscal year 1922.

On Nos. 54 and 112: Appropriates $20,000 for the enforcement of wireless communication laws by the Bureau of Navigation as passed by both Houses, and locates the item in the first section of the bill as proposed by the House instead of in section 4 as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 55 and 56, relating to the Bureau of Fisheries: Appropriates $5,000 and $5,970, respectively, for the steamer Gannet and the steamer Phalarope, as passed by both Houses, and locates the paragraphs in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 57 to 60, inclusive, relating to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Appropriates $12,000 for additional employees and $250,000 for investigations in connection with export industries, and authorizes the recall of four trade commissioners during the fiscal year 1922, as passed by both Houses, and locates the items in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 61 to 65, inclusive, and No. 115, relating to the Bureau of Standards: Provides for a transfer of $250,000 from the Bureau of the Census to the Bureau of Standards for the carrying on of certain investigations, as passed by both Houses, and modifies the appropriation for the investigation of structural materials so as to provide for the collection and dissemination of information useful in connection with housing and construction work, and locates the paragraphs in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 66, relating to the Immigration Service: Appropriates $336,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $488,831.53, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration.

On Nos. 70 and 71, relating to the Senate: Appropriates $500 for maintenance of motor vehicles, $250 for fuel, and $16,245 for the Senate Office Building.

On Nos. 72, 73, 74, and 118, relating to the House of Representatives: Appropriates for the office of the Doorkeeper, for committee employees, and for the office of the Sergeant at Arms, as passed by both Houses, and locates the items in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 75: Inserts the appropriation of $16,383.63, proposed by the Senate, for the payment of holidays in the Government Printing Office.

On Nos. 77 and 78: Appropriates $41,702.70 for printing and binding for the Smithsonian Institution, and $125,000 for printing and binding for the Department of Agriculture, as passed by both Houses, and locates the items in the first section of the bill, as proposed by the House, instead of in section 4, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 79 to 83, inclusive: Appropriates for additional judgments of United States district courts and the Court of Claims certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 84: Appropriates $182,270.48 for the payment of audited claims certified to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 85: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the items for the fiscal year 1922, inserted by the Senate and accepted by the House, shall be carried in a separate section of the bill.

On No. 102: Strikes out the appropriation of $60,000, inserted by the Senate, for the purchase of additional property adjacent to the Federal building at Salt Lake City, Utah.

On No. 103: Strikes out the paragraph, inserted by the Senate, for the acquisition of additional land adjacent to the customhouse and appraiser's store building at Wilmington, N. C.

On No. 109: Strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for expenses of two delegates to the Pan-American Postal Congress at Buenos Aires, Argentina.

On No. 120: Renumbers the last section in the bill.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 1: Appropriating $10,000 for the Bureau of Efficiency.

On No. 19, relating to the Federal Board for Vocational Education: Authorizing payments for support to be made directly to persons dependent upon trainees of the board and establishing a limit of 18 months within which persons must make application for training.

On No. 21: Appropriating $8,800 to Henry Jones Ford for services as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

On No. 41: Appropriating $15,000 to pay the widow of the late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

On No. 42: Appropriating $125,000 for operation and maintenance of the airplane mail service between New York and San Francisco.

On No. 49: Authorizing the payment to Peter G. Ten Eyck for certain rent remaining unpaid by the Department of Agriculture.

On No. 67: Authorizing the compilation of appropriations made at the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

On No. 68: Authorizing the payment by the Public Buildings Commission of $354.51 for the repair and upkeep of an automobile.

On No. 69: Authorizing the payment of an assistant clerk to Hon. Tasker L. Oddie, a Senator from the State of Nevada.

On No. 76: Authorizing the transfer of a passenger automobile from the War Department to the Government Printing Office.

On No. 86: Appropriating $100,000 for expenses of examinations by the Civil Service Commission.

On No. 88: Appropriating $1,544,000 for additional school facilities in the District of Columbia.

On No. 89: Appropriating $10,000 for a site for a branch library in the District of Columbia and authorizing the acceptance from the Carnegie Corporation of not less than $50,000 for the erection of a building on such site.

On No. 92: Appropriating $425,000 for the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board.

On No. 94: Appropriating $57,820 for passport bureaus at New York, San Francisco, Chicago, Seattle, and New Orleans.

On No. 95: Appropriating $10,000 for an undersecretary of the Treasury, $11,380 for the Division of Printing and Stationery, and $4,800 for the Division of Mails and Files of the Treasury Department.

On No. 96, relating to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency: Appropriating $37,880 for additional employees, $1,500 for increases in compensation, and authorizing the comptroller to designate a national-bank examiner to act as chief of the examining division.

On No. 97: Reappropriating certain unexpended balances for the Office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department for the compensation of employees to audit the accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service.

On Nos. 99, 100, and 101: Relating to the appropriation of $500,000 for improvements at the Broadview Hospital, Chicago, Ill., and $750,000 for fireproof construction work at the sanatorium at Dawson Springs, Ky.

On No. 105, relating to the War Department: Appropriating $5,000 additional compensation for the Assistant Secretary of War during the fiscal year 1922, $600,000 for the installation of a pipe line at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, and authorization for the expenditure of $400,000 for the payment of court awards for the acquisition of land at Camp Benning, Ga.

On No. 106: Authorizing the carrying forward until June 30, 1922, of certain unexpended balances for the settlement of contracts entered into by the War Department during the period of the war.

On No. 107: Authorizing the expenditure of $100,000 for the development of a water supply for the Ogden (Utah) Arsenal.

On No. 108: Appropriating $35,000 for the payment of claims for damages incurred in connection with the operation of the Air Mail Service.

On No. 113: Appropriating $2,500 for expenses of an advisory committee for the Bureau of Fisheries.

On No. 114, relating to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Authorizing the expenditure of $25,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia and increasing the allowance for clerical hire for commercial attachés abroad.

On No. 117: Appropriating $2,100 for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

On No. 119: Granting to the head of any department or other Government establishment the authority to discontinue the printing of any annual or special report.

JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, as this bill passed the House it carried approximately $100,890,000. As it passed the Senate it carried $156,500,000. Of that amount the Senate has added $50,000,000 for the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The Senate has receded from its amendments relating to that subject. The House bill carried $36,852,000 for the balance of this year for the completion of the vessels now under contract. My recollection is that there are about 44 of these vessels. They are in various stages of completion, most of them more than 75 per cent completed, some of them as much as 98 per cent completed. Then we carry $25,000,000 for next year to complete the building program. We do not carry anything for operation or anything in the way of cash to pay claims for canceled contracts.

There are pending about $47,500,000 of claims because of contracts for the completing of ships that were canceled. There were several reasons which actuated us in taking this course. In the first place, on the 1st day of May or thereabouts the Emergency Fleet Corporation had a cash balance of $26,000,000 on hand. It also expected to receive during the present fiscal year in cash for sales previously made approximately $18,000,000, giving the Shipping Board $44,000,000 in cash which under the law will continue available for next year for operations and for the payment of claims. At the time we passed the bill and at the time the Senate passed the bill very little was known as to how the Shipping Board would be composed, and even up to this time very little is known about it. The newspapers announce that the President has agreed upon the persons whom he will recommend as the members of this board; but it was perfectly apparent to Congress that with $44,000,000 available to pay losses, when many of those losses could be saved entirely and most of them could be greatly reduced, we should not appropriate $50,000,000 more to pay claims for cancellations and losses and leave a large part of that sum to be paid out at the discretion of men employed by the Shipping Board.

We realized that some of these contracts for vessels should have been canceled two years ago; but if we did not appropriate the money to pay for the delivery of boats as we had agreed to pay, thereby necessitating the closing down of the yards, with a resulting loss, they would have claims for damages against the United States that would amount to millions of dollars. It therefore seemed to us that we should appropriate the money necessary to pay for the completing of the vessels.

At the present time there is something of a strife among the men operating the vessels. It is understood that Admiral Benson reduced the wages 15 per cent and made further reductions, and that some other agencies of the Government at the present time are interceding and asking a modification of that order to the extent that the Shipping Board shall enter into a contract with these men which shall provide that these war-time wages—and they are war-time wages when the reduction is only 15 per cent, and when we take into consideration the enormous increases made during the war—that these war-time wages shall continue for another year. It seems to me it would be better to tie up these vessels than now to permit the Government to sign a contract continuing these war-time wages for another year. [Applause.]

To do that will simply add to our losses, will simply extend the time for rehabilitation. What the Government, it seems to me, acting through the Shipping Board, should do is simply agree to a reasonable reduction now, and as prices go down, as everything these men have to buy with which to live decreases, there should be a corresponding decrease in the wages of the men who are performing this service.

And so for a great many reasons, which would take too much time to explain here, the House conferees absolutely refused to yield to the Senate amendment, which added $50,000,000 to the appropriation, all of which would be available for expenditure even before the Shipping Board is completed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much was carried in the bill for the Shipping Board as it passed the House?

Mr. GOOD. Thirty-six million eight hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars for this year and $25,000,000 for next year, making $61,852,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much is the amount agreed upon in conference?

Mr. GOOD. That is the amount agreed upon in conference.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no increase?

Mr. GOOD. No increase at all.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Shipping Board was about to enter into a contract to allow the wages of these men to remain as they are for another year?

Mr. GOOD. Admiral Benson had served an ultimatum on the employees that the reduction would be 15 per cent and that there would be no contract that would bind the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to pay even that wage for any definite length of time. Now, the situation has developed to a point where I understand the Secretary of Labor has recommended, and that Admiral Benson is inclined to accept, recognizing the 15 per cent reduction in the wage with the provision that that wage shall continue and remain in force for one year.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But it has not been entered into yet?

Mr. GOOD. I understand it has not, and I hope it never will be, for if the Government starts out on a proposition of that kind it is suicidal if we are to get back to anything like normal conditions.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUNBAR. Newspaper reports state that the operations of the Shipping Board are costing the Government a million dollars a day.

Mr. GOOD. I think no one knows what it amounts to. I do not think it will amount to anything approximating that amount. But I do say that there are losses running into the millions of dollars a year that can be saved by a businesslike administration of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and Congress should not appropriate more money until a policy has been announced by the board that will cut off these unnecessary expenses. [Applause.]

Now, deficiencies will come in before you for this purpose, and in refusing this amount I would not have the House believe that it is absolutely certain that the Shipping Board will not need any money. But it seems to me the position of the country and Congress is that the Shipping Board should be able to lay their cards on the table, and that we should be able to know when we appropriate a million dollars what that money is appropriated for. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNBAR. The losses of the Shipping Board are not all made up by appropriations.

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. DUNBAR. I take it that the money to pay these losses is secured by selling the ships.

Mr. GOOD. But they are not getting much money from that source now.

Mr. DUNBAR. Does the gentleman believe that the Shipping Board should go into liquidation; that we should sell all the ships as fast as possible and get out of the business?

Mr. GOOD. I do not want to take up the time of the House to announce what my opinion is on that subject, but to-day you can build cargo ships in England for less than $70 a ton, and the United States has been trying to sell ships to American people, that will fly the American flag, at all the way from $165 to $225 a ton. It is perfectly assinine to attempt to secure capital to go into the shipping business in America that will be compelled to compete with English bottoms that cost but $70 a ton dead-weight when we are trying to sell for $165 a ton.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.
Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe that the recommendation made by the Secretary of Labor and the seeming inclination on the part of Admiral Benson to accept was in any way influenced by the action of the Government employees who are asking war-time wages in peace times by the action at New Orleans in taking charge of the Government vessels, removing them, and putting them under certain physical punishment?
Mr. GOOD. I do not know; I know nothing about the incident the gentleman refers to.
Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. STEVENSON. The difficulty about the Shipping Board is that there is no Shipping Board, and has not been for some months. Admiral Benson is only a locum tenens and has no authority.
Mr. GOOD. He is acting as the agent of the President of the United States.
Mr. STEVENSON. There is no board having a legal status and has not been since December.
Mr. GOOD. No.
Mr. STEVENSON. They can not lay down any policy until there is a board created. Is there any prospect that one will be appointed soon?
Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think so.
Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. LAZARO. Is it true that the Shipping Board is to be instructed to sell the wooden ships by October 1?
Mr. GOOD. That item was a part of the amendment of the Senate increasing the appropriation by $50,000,000. Now, that item went out entirely, because the House would not agree to the Senate amendment.
There was some disposition to fix definitely the sale of these ships, and my own impression is that it is the unanimous judgment of the conferees that the Shipping Board should sell these ships or report to Congress before the 1st day of next December why they have not sold them.
Mr. LAZARO. But the gentleman is not in favor of fixing a date?
Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes. I would sink those ships to-morrow, rather than continue the wasteful practice that we have been engaged in of paying $440,000 a year simply to guard them when you can not get a man to bid on them. It is doubtful if you will ever get a man to bid on them. Are you going to continue as we have been continuing for the past two and a half years to guard these ships that are not worth guarding when you can not sell them to-day for the amount that we have expended in guarding them?
Mr. LAZARO. I would instruct the board to sell them for the best price they can get. I certainly would not fix the date, for no business man would do that in his own business.
Mr. GOOD. If we are building breakwaters anywhere in the United States, it seems to me that it would be a good thing to take those ships and fill them with stones and use them in the construction of those breakwaters.
Mr. LAZARO. But we are not doing that.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries took up this whole question of a policy for the Shipping Board and enacted a law in which the Shipping Board is directed to sell the ships to American citizens at practically the world market price?
Mr. GOOD. Yes; but before that the President had full power to sell the ships, and the very act that appropriated the money to build the ships authorized the President to sell them. He was given a free hand. I will say to the gentleman that the whole policy of selling those ships at the highest price was, in my opinion, a mistake for this reason: We could get at that time $200 a ton, or we thought we could, because at that time there was a demand for ships, but just as soon as that demand ceased, then the men who had entered into contracts to purchase the ships ceased paying on their contracts, and to-day they are not paying at all.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes out of his time?
Mr. GOOD. I expect to yield the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] a little time.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. I would like to have five minutes on that particular thing.
Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. For a question; yes.
Mr. McDUFFIE. I thought I understood the gentleman to say that we did not know what was being done with the money appropriated for the Shipping Board. Does the gentleman mean to tell the Congress that there is no way of ascertaining from the board the manner of expenditure of this money?
Mr. GOOD. I will say this to the gentleman for his information: The board had a claim against the War Department for the movement of troops and personal effects and property during the war. The claim aggregated over $200,000,000. The Emergency Fleet Corporation or the board could not furnish a statement to the War Department so that it would pass the auditor. They could not furnish vouchers required by law, and finally they wanted $5,000,000 to audit the claims. The War Department said that it would cost them $5,000,000 also, so the Shipping Board and the War Department did what I think was a very sensible thing. They did what the Railroad Administration did—simply agreed on a lump sum, as I recall, of $56,000,000. The items are large items. They know how much each vessel costs; they know how much they pay out to each vessel; they know certain of those things. They know that they are paying to favored dock owners $1,500 a month to tie up their ships at certain docks, and they know they are doing some of those things, but when you are dealing with property that cost the Government over $3,000,000,000, when you are dealing with the largest corporation in all the world, I think the gentleman will at once see how futile it is to take each item of expenditure and find out where the money is going.
Mr. McDUFFIE. Did the Shipping Board or its representatives present to the gentleman's committee any data to show that the future might hold out brighter conditions? Is it not a fact that the great loss to-day is due to world conditions?
Mr. GOOD. Oh, the gentleman has as good an opinion about that as the Shipping Board. It is mere speculation to state how soon business is going to revive or the extent to which it will revive, or the extent to which we will engage in foreign trade. I think myself that everyone who has studied the matter thinks that we are at the low-water mark and that conditions will improve. We all hope so.
Mr. McDUFFIE. They will have to have cargoes for these ships. The stagnation of the world's business and the fact that the ships are tied up is one thing that is bringing about this enormous loss.
Mr. GOOD. Yes. We have over 900 ships tied up.
Mr. McDUFFIE. That is including the wooden ships?
Mr. GOOD. To be exact, there were on May 4, 685 steel ships and 275 wooden ships tied up.
Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. KNIGHT. It was stated on the floor of the Senate yesterday that 75 per cent of the money appropriated for employees for the Shipping Board abroad was being paid out to foreigners in our employ who are supposed to get business for America.
Mr. GOOD. I do not think I would be permitted to discuss what occurred on the floor of the Senate.
Mr. KNIGHT. Does the gentleman know whether 75 per cent of the appropriations for the Shipping Board and its employees abroad is being paid to Englishmen and other foreigners for the purpose of attending to American business?
Mr. GOOD. No; I do not know about that. I am not informed about that.
Mr. KNIGHT. Is there anything in this bill which guards against such a condition of affairs.
Mr. GOOD. No; this bill is a money bill.
Mr. KNIGHT. I know it is a deficiency bill.
Mr. GOOD. It only pays the labor and for the material that goes into the completion of the ships. We do not appropriate here a dollar for the operation of anything of the kind to which the gentleman refers.
Mr. KNIGHT. Does not the gentleman think there should be some limitation upon the expenditure of the money to prevent that condition of affairs?
Mr. GOOD. I imagine that would be a question that is largely a matter of administration. It is a question that the Shipping Board can regulate. If they are doing a thing that is unwise, the Shipping Board has ample authority to correct it.
Mr. KNIGHT. Has this House no power over the Shipping Board?
Mr. GOOD. Yes; but that is a legislative matter, and the other committee ought to take charge of it.
Mr. KNIGHT. Then, should we not proceed to legislate upon the matter and stop that condition of affairs?
Mr. GOOD. We can not do it on this bill because we have not a dollar here for operations, not a single penny, which is being spent abroad.
Mr. KNIGHT. What does the gentleman think about legislation of that kind? Is he in favor of it?

UMI

Mr. GOOD. Well, I do not know what the situation is about that. I do not know about the employment; I do not know what international difficulties might arise by such legislation. I will say to the gentleman that I have not studied it; I have not had any hearing on it; and on a matter of that kind we ought to legislate with very great care, so as not to make any mistake and arouse feeling abroad or subject the country to matters that might lead to grave difficulties.

Mr. KNIGHT. Does the gentleman think kicking out 75 per cent of the Englishmen who are drawing money from American taxpayers as employees of this board, who are alleged to be trying to get American business, would greatly complicate the situation?

Mr. GOOD. I was surprised when I saw the statement, but I know nothing about the conditions of employment or the reasons for the employment, and I hesitate to express any views upon the question.

Mr. KNIGHT. I just wanted to get the gentleman's views as to what policy the House should pursue in that regard.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the House bill carried $350,000 for operating supplies, public buildings. These are public building scattered throughout the country. They are post offices, customhouses, and places where we hold court. The item was largely intended to cover the increase in the cost of coal. In reporting the $350,000 we cut the estimate by $300,000 on the assumption that they would not need much coal or any coal for May and June. Unfortunately, May was a very cold month, and it was necessary to purchase a good deal of coal for those buildings. The Senate put in the amount of the estimate, $650,000. The conferees have agreed to $550,000.

The matter of employees for the General Land Office was up before in the House. A short time ago we enacted what is known as the oil leasing act, which threw a great deal of work upon the General Land Office, and which brings into the Federal Treasury something like twelve or thirteen million dollars a year from leases. Now they are swamped with work. We gave them in the House bill half of what they estimated for.

The Senate gave them the full amount of the estimate, but the department informs us that in all likelihood they will not be able to attend to all the work that has been thrown upon that office by that act, and that they will be compelled, even if we grant the full amount, to allow some work to go unperformed, and therefore on that item the conferees agreed to the Senate provision, which carried $65,600 instead of $32,800.

The Department of Agriculture has maintained experimental vineyards of 20 acres each, one at Fresno, Calif., and one at Oakville, Calif. They have maintained those vineyards under lease for more than 15 years, and in those vineyards they have perhaps the greatest variety of grapes in any one collection in all the world, more than 700 varieties. The vineyards are very valuable vineyards; they are experimental stations; the Government does not own the ground. The act of March 2, 1921, authorized and directed the purchase of those vineyards at not to exceed $12,000 for one and $15,000 for the other. The act was passed authorizing the purchase after the appropriation bills were passed, and the Senate bill carried an appropriation of $12,000 for the Fresno vineyard and $15,000 for the Oakville vineyard, and the conferees on the part of the House have agreed to that amendment.

For the Immigration Service there was no estimate before the House, and after the bill passed the House the department made an estimate that they would need $488,000 for the increase in the Immigration Service, largely at Ellis Island. The Senate put that item on the bill. There were no hearings in the Senate in regard to it. The conferees required the department to come before them, and they sent representatives, and after going over the matter with the representatives we found that they will have an actual deficiency, if they bring about certain reductions which they say they can bring about, of $336,000 for this year. We have therefore agreed to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment striking out the $488,000 and inserting $336,000.

There was a holiday declared under order of the President on the date of the funeral of Chief Justice White. That necessitates an appropriation of $16,386.63 just to pay the men who are employed in the Government Printing Office. The regular appropriation for holidays only provided sufficient funds for certain known legal holidays, and this one, of course, was unforeseen.

After the bill passed the House there were judgments of the United States court certified aggregating $475,253.93. The conferees agreed to that amount. Then there were judgments of the Court of Claims of $143,000 certified after the bill passed the House. The audited claims certified after the bill passed the House were $182,270.48.

The Senate receded from the item of $60,000 for the purchase of additional property adjoining the public building at Salt Lake and also receded from an item authorizing the expenditure of an unexpended balance for acquiring additional land adjacent to the customhouse at Wilmington, N. C. The Senate also receded on an appropriation of $5,000 for delegates to the Pan American Postal Congress.

In brief, these are the matters we have agreed to. There are about 30 amendments not agreed to in the conference report. Many of them the conferees would have agreed to if we had had authority. When the conference report is disposed of we shall then call up these individual items for your consideration.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask as to the time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish some time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are some gentlemen here who would like time, and I may want about 15 minutes myself.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman want to use that now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; I will use it now.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the deficiency bill as it passed the House made some provision for additional employees for 1922, which, as the House will remember, were placed in the bill under a special rule. The Senate has increased the appropriation for employees for 1922; and while under the rules of the House the conferees have not undertaken to agree to those provisions of the Senate, I have information to the effect that possibly later on a motion will be made to recede and concur in those amendments, and at that time I may have something further to say with reference to them.

But I do think that it is important at this time that I call the attention of the House to the fact that if this conference report is adopted, and if the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendments is adopted, this deficiency bill, framed for the purpose, on its face, of providing for deficiencies for the present fiscal year, will add to the number of employees for the next fiscal year in an amount that I shall now state. For instance, it is proposed to increase the clerical force in the city of Washington in the number of 155 designated employees or clerks, with an aggregate salary for the fiscal year of $254,923.34. But that is not all the story, for this bill will carry lump-sum appropriations, which are available only and will be used only in the way of providing for additional employees for the next fiscal year, amounting to $645,000, or a total, with the specially designated employees, of $899,923.34. And it should be stated also that as the bill passed the House and as it will become a law it gives to the Secretary of the Treasury the right to use the balance on hand under the expense of loans, amounting to $3,750,000, for the employment and maintenance of the present organization during the fiscal year 1922, and in addition especially authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to employ clerical assistance amounting to one-tenth of 1 per cent of any new issues or new certificates of indebtedness that may be issued during the year 1922. Or, in other words, under this deficiency bill—framed, as I say, on its face, for the purpose of providing for deficiencies for the present year and past fiscal years—Congress has legislated for the next fiscal year, for salaries alone, sums amounting to $4,649,923.34.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GOOD. Now, of course, the gentleman recognizes the fact that no one likes appropriation bills. Will the gentleman now tell the House, in all candor, where we can safely eliminate any of those items?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; there are a number of them, I think, that could be eliminated, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has changed his mind, then, since we wrote the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No, indeed. The gentleman will shortly move to recede and concur, if I am correctly informed, in an amendment creating a new position in the Treasury Department to be known as Undersecretary of the Treasury, that will pay a salary of $10,000 a year, in the face of the fact that Congress is now considering a bill, which will undoubtedly become a law very shortly, that provides for an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury at $10,000 a year.

Mr. GOOD. That bill does not carry an appropriation, but this carries an appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think for one moment if Congress legislates on the subject and provides for the appointment of an assistant secretary, who shall have charge of the veterans' bureau at a salary of $10,000 a year, that Congress will hesitate in making the required appropriation?

As I stated, gentlemen, those are questions I expect to discuss later on when these separate motions are made to recede and concur.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has referred to the action of the conferees with reference to the Shipping Board. As he has stated, the bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of something over $36,000,000 for construction during the pending fiscal year—a pure deficiency. In addition to that, it carried $25,000,000 for construction purposes during the fiscal year 1922. The Senate increased this amount to $75,000,000. I gave my assent to the action of the conferees, as set forth in this report, because the House had acted upon the matter, and as a representative of the House I stood for the House amendment, and the Senators having agreed to recede, we have brought in a report carrying out the will of the House with reference to the appropriation for the Shipping Board, But I think it proper to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that it was seriously stated to the conferees by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce that Admiral Benson, the acting agent for the President, said that unless he received appropriations for operating purposes the ships would necessarily have to be tied up on July 1. The chairman of that committee stated that nothing more important could be done in favor of British shipping and those interests which desire to prevent the United States from developing its merchant marine and from providing its own ships and carrying its own commerce under its own flag to the various markets of the world.

These amendments provide only for construction purposes. There is nothing here for operating purposes. There is nothing here which Admiral Benson states will enable him to operate these ships after July 1.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the chairman of the committee to state that the investigation showed there was some $40,000,000 surplus available for operating expenses. Is that true or not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That statement was made and I do not controvert it, but the information is more or less a matter of speculation. It may be on hand or it may not be. I have stated what Admiral Benson has to say on the subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What does Chairman Benson say about it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He has reported to the conferees as making the emphatic statement that unless the appropriation is made in this bill it will be necessary to tie up all of our ships, or nearly all of them, after July 1, at the beginning of the next fiscal year. I am sure that is a situation which neither the House nor the country wants to bring about.

These ships have been built. They have cost the Government now over $3,000,000,000, which has been expended, and certainly we do not want to be put in a position of tying up these ships without money to operate them. It was stated that possibly some of them might have to be tied up in foreign waters without men to operate them. Our commerce has to be transported. If it is not carried by our ships, it will be carried, of course, by British shipping, and as the chairman of that committee stated, in his judgment no greater favor could be done to the British shipping interests than by the failure on our part to make an appropriation for the operation of these ships.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. With reference to favoring British maritime commerce, did the gentleman notice the statement of a distinguished Senator a few days ago to the effect that 75 per cent of the representatives of this Government, that is, the agents of the Shipping Board of the United States abroad, were British subjects?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know that I saw that particular statement, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If that is the condition, I suggest to the gentleman that there ought to be a radical change. We should not have our business put in the hands of our competitors.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly there ought to be a change. I do not question but that there are many things with respect to the operation of the ships that ought to be changed. It was stated at the other end of the Capitol in a very elaborate speech the other day that salaries had been increased out of all proportion for various employees of the Shipping Board. I think that is undoubtedly true. I do not think there is any defense for many of the salaries that are now being paid by the Shipping Board. But, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to the fact that in my judgment that is more the fault of Congress than of the Shipping Board. I make that statement because of the manner in which we have made the appropriations for this service. I contended two years ago, when this House adopted the policy of making indirect appropriations out of the Treasury by authorizing the Shipping Board to use its receipts from the sales of ships and operations and things of that sort for its running expenses, that it would lead undoubtedly to gross extravagance and waste, because not knowing what they were going to get in, members of the Shipping Board and others in charge, feeling optimistic, and feeling that they were going to have plenty of money on which to run, increased salaries, I have no doubt, to a greater extent than they would have done if Congress had done what it ought to have done in a businesslike way and passed a bill making direct appropriations for the Shipping Board and providing that its receipts should be covered into the Treasury as a part of miscellaneous receipts. I repeat that this Congress is responsible, certainly to the same extent that the Shipping Board is, for these indefensible salaries that are now being paid, and which were dilated upon in the other body at the other end of the Capitol a few days ago when this bill was under consideration.

There is another reason. We have not had a Shipping Board since Congress passed the merchant marine act on June 5, 1920. The former President of the United States, President Wilson, very promptly made his appointments of members of the Shipping Board. They were sent to the Senate, and the Republican majority in the Senate, for some reason best known to itself, declined to confirm those nominations. Those gentlemen served under the appointment of the President without the full authority which they would have had by confirmation.

What has been the result since March 4? We have had no Shipping Board. It is true that Admiral Benson is acting, so to speak, as the President's personal agent, but there has been no head of this great organization and this great business, which has cost the people of this country more than $3,000,000,000.

It was stated by newspapers shortly after March 4 that the President was trying to get a $100,000 man to head this board at the salary that was fixed by law, and that was given as one excuse why there was delay in making these appointments of members of the Shipping Board. It was stated that he first wanted to get his chairman, and then he would very promptly name the other members of the board.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If he gets Mr. Lasker, he will have a $100,000 man.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I understand Mr. Lasker has made a great success with his private business. I do not know Mr. Lasker, but he bears a very high reputation. I noticed in a paper which some one facetiously termed "the court organ" the other day in setting forth his experience and his qualifications for this position the statement was made that he is the president of the Lord & Thomas Advertising Co., out of which he has made a great deal of money; that he was also interested as a stockholder in the Chicago Baseball Club; that he was also interested in Quaker Oats, and I think some other business which I do not now recall. But since the gentleman has raised the question, I have received information from a source which I shall not undertake to give to the gentleman, but which makes me think that possibly one of the peculiar qualifications of the gentleman whom my friend has named is the fact that he is an advertising expert, for I am told he is the author of the posters which we saw during the last campaign.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. I agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Can the gentleman get along with three?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I would like to have five. I think I am entitled to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not now. I understand that the gentleman referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] is the author of the phrase, "Don't wiggle and wobble," and possibly on account of that great service which he rendered in the last campaign, as well as on account of the distinguished success that he has made in his private business, the gentleman may be qualified, although the paper to which I have referred the other day stated expressly that he had no knowledge of ships, but that he proposed to surround himself with a number of ship experts who would give him the knowledge necessary to make a valuable chairman of the Shipping Board. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In just a moment. The gentleman sees I have not much more time, and I can not get more time. If I had the time, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman if it is the purpose of the gentleman and of the other side of the House to complain about everybody that is suggested as a member of the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That seems to be the purpose.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am speaking my own individual sentiments and views. But what I am complaining about is the fact that nobody has been appointed to that position, and we have had on our hands a merchant marine which has cost the people more than $3,000,000,000 without any actual head for more than three months.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then the gentleman does not mean now in advance to indict Mr. Lasker?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; indeed. I hope if he is appointed, as I understand he will be, that he will make a distinguished and shining success. I hope he will live up to all that the gentleman thinks of him.

Mr. KNIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KNIGHT. The gentleman has drawn a very harrowing picture of the losses brought upon the country because the Senate did not confirm the appointments of former President Wilson to the Shipping Board. In view of the losses inflicted upon the country by the members of the Shipping Board appointed by President Wilson, I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that perhaps the failure to confirm those appointments was a blessing to the country instead of a loss.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course, the gentleman has his own opinion about that and I have mine, but I think that some board, consisting at least of intelligent and honest men—and nobody has questioned their reputation or honesty—would be far better than no board at all, which is the situation under which we have been laboring for the last three months. Why, the gentleman will remember that only a short while ago it was stated in the papers that we were going to have as chairman of this great board one of the heads of the Steel Trust. It was stated that in all probability he was going to accept it. Weeks passed while deliberations and negotiations were being had with reference to his acceptance. One of my colleagues [Mr. DAVIS] called attention to the fact one day upon the floor of the House that he was one of the heads of the Steel Trust, which probably sold more of its commodities to the Shipping Board than any other organization or business concern in the country, and he suddenly declined to accept. Then we heard that one of the heads of the Standard Oil Co. was going to be the head of this board, and for two or three weeks we waited in suspense until he could determine whether or not he would accept this position. We were told about a week ago that he had declined to accept it. I hope that Mr. Lasker will take the place, for somebody ought to be appointed, and I hope that he will make a distinguished success, because I am convinced that what we need to-day is less wiggling and wabbling on the part of the administration in the appointment of the members of the Shipping Board and some positive, affirmative action. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire to say only a few words with reference to the subject last discussed, which discussion was provoked, I believe, by my good friend from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], who asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] whether he regarded the prospective chairman of the Shipping Board as a $100,000 man.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That was not the question at all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understood that to be the gentleman's question. The gentleman also asked whether it was the purpose of members on this side of the House to criticize every person suggested for appointment to the Shipping Board. Certainly it is not my intention to do so. When this bill was up in the House for consideration there was much discussion about the Shipping Board. I did not participate in it, but at the same time I had considerable sympathy with the position of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] who was somewhat irritated at the delay in the making of the appointments. The fact is that the Shipping Board is the biggest business that this country has ever known. The Congress has appropriated more than $3,000,000,000 for the Shipping Board to construct ships and plants. Compared with it the Steel Trust and the Standard Oil Co. are small concerns. I would not criticize the President if he went to the Standard Oil Co. or the Steel Corporation or any other great company in America to get a man to manage the Shipping Board. This delay I have regarded as excusable, because I believed the President was going to secure a big man and because I believed the prophecy of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] would be made good when he said that they wanted a $100,000 man—but my criticism is that judging from the press reports now we are not going to get a $100,000 man. The gentleman from Iowa knows that this board needs the greatest executive in the country. I will vote for any appropriation in reason to increase the salary of the chairman so as to make it possible to secure the best brains in America, taken from the Standard Oil Co. or from the Steel Trust or from the shipping interests, but I become pessimistic, indeed, when I read in the press that we are to have as chairman of the board a man who says he knows nothing about ships and whose qualifications as recited by my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] disclose no experience in construction or in any industry that would fit him for the management of the greatest industry in America. Why, how does the management of the Chicago Cubs fit one to direct the affairs of the Shipping Board? How does the management of the business of Quaker Oats or Van Camp's pork and beans or Lord & Thomas's advertising agency qualify him? When the man asked to be relieved because he knew nothing about ships why did not the President release him and select some man from the great shipping industry of this country instead of a man who says he knows nothing about the business?

Why, they say an evidence of his qualification is that he suggested Judge Landis to settle the dispute between the baseball teams of the country. Now, great as that may be to the baseball fans, what qualification does it offer for the management of the greatest business in America? I should liked to have seen Mr. Farrell made chairman of the Shipping Board, because he is a great executive, and the Shipping Board demands the best we have.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But your colleague did not want him.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not speak for anybody except myself any more than the gentleman from Illinois does. I wanted to see Mr. Farrell appointed. But it is a great descent from steel to soup and pork and beans. It is a great descent from brains to beans. [Laughter.] Why, you had another Republican from Chicago, Mr. Charles Piez. He knows the shipping industry. He is a good Republican, because he was chairman of the Republican ways and means committee in Cook County in the last campaign. That ought to make him in favor with the administration. He knows the shipping business, having been general manager of the Fleet Corporation during the war. He was recommended by Charles Schwab for the appointment, according to press reports. Why could not you capitalize his experience and appoint him instead of going to Chicago and selecting an advertising man? You may get publicity for the Shipping Board; he may be able to decide the delicate question of how much pork should be sandwiched in with so much beans in Van Camp's products. He may be able to tell whether a man should play short stop or first base, but I will bet that he does not know the bow from the stern of a ship. I have nothing against the gentleman. He may be qualified for the business in which he is engaged, but that business in no way qualifies him for the chairmanship of this board. Apparently his chief qualification is, as my colleague says, that he wrote the advertisement on wiggling and woggling in the last campaign. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I deplore the fact that these assaults should be made upon men who are being considered by the President for responsible positions. [Applause.] I think it is very unfortunate and unbecoming when in the House the other day an assault was made upon Mr. Farrell, whom the newspapers reported was being considered by the President for the head of this great corporation, and this great Shipping Board. I regret now that allusion should be made to the gentleman whom the President is considering for the presidency of the board, Mr. Lasker, of Chicago. I happen to know Mr. Lasker. I regard him as a man of high ability, of integrity, and of courage, and while, as he says, he may not be informed with regard to the building and operation of ships, yet we propose that the Government get out of the business not only of building and running ships but get into the business of immediately selling these ships to private business that will operate them. [Applause.] We propose, if we can, to avoid these losses, for we will have losses in everything the Government undertakes to run that private enterprise ought to run. [Applause.] That has been our experience in the past, and it will be our experience in the future. I do not know whether Mr. Lasker was the author of the wiggle-woggle advertisement, but I do know that the past administration has done nothing but wabble, so far as this Shipping Board and our shipping problems are concerned, and they have wabbled us into more debts than the people can pay. [Applause.] And if we can just wiggle out the people will be satisfied. If the past administration had had a little wiggle with all of its woggle we would not have these enormous deficiency bills.

The gentleman from Tennessee complains of the great number of clerks we are adding. He is greatly mistaken about that. After this bill is passed we will have reduced the number of clerks in the Treasury Department for the next year over this year by more than 2,000. That is true even after these provisions are adopted. And the present administration intends that the Government shall function in a healthy way, and I am sure the question of additional clerks was an afterthought of the gentleman from Tennessee, because, as I recall—I may be mistaken—he was never opposed to but one item in the bill, and that was the item in regard to an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions carried in this bill were gone over with great care by the committee, and I say to you that there is not a single item in the bill but what it seemed to the committee was justified and absolutely necessary. I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY.

To enable the Bureau of Efficiency to perform the duties imposed upon it by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $10,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the sum of "$10,000" in said amendment, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation or of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1922 for this bureau shall be available for the payment of any salary at a rate of compensation exceeding the rate paid on July 1, 1920, except the chief of the bureau, whose salary shall not be in excess of the rate of $7,500 per annum."

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas five minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, what I rise for is to attempt in a brief and imperfect way to say something in regard to the Shipping Board in answer to the continual ragging that has been going on about this board. I have said so before, but I must reiterate that it seems that there is a set purpose to make a case against the Shipping Board by mere repetition and to continually charge all sorts of deficiencies and defects and shortcomings to the Shipping Board. Gentlemen are very sensitive if anybody makes any charge against or says anything about the prospective Shipping Board, but they are not content with one time stating unsupported charges against the existing Shipping Board but carry it on continually. The board is charged with the heinous offense of not selling their ships. I want to say that if there is a fault the fault of not selling the ships or giving them away lies with Congress. Because Congress was called on by Mr. Payne, chairman of the Shipping Board, to lay down a policy for his guidance in the matter of selling, leasing, or operating these ships, and the committee of which I am a member, the Committee on Merchant Marine, did so in what is called the Jones shipping bill, which became a law June 5, 1920. We instructed the Shipping Board to sell our steel ships only to American citizens and to sell them at the world's market price, and they have been trying to do that ever since. In order that the policy we prescribed may be plain, I read sections 1 and 5 of that law:

[Public, No. 261, Sixty-sixth Congress.]

H. R. 10378. An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained.

SEC. 5. That in order to accomplish the declared purposes of this act, and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof, the board is authorized and directed to sell, as soon as practicable, consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act, at public or private competitive sale after appraisement and due advertisement, to persons who are citizens of the United States, except as provided in section 6 of this act, all of the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwse acquired by the board. Such sale shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, but the completion of the payment of the purchase price and interest shall not be deferred more than 15 years after the making of the contract of sale. The board in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels shall take into consideration the prevailing domestic and foreign market price of, the available supply of, and the demand for vessels, existing freight rates and prospects of their maintenance, the cost of constructing vessels of similar types under prevailing conditions, as well as the cost of the construction or purchase price of the vessels to be sold, and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell. All sales made under the authority of this act shall be subject to the limitations and restrictions of section 9 of the "Shipping act, 1916," as amended.

Section 9 of the shipping act of 1916 provided that ships sold by the Shipping Board should be under the American flag and should not be sold to any person not a citizen of the United States, or put under a foreign flag without the board's approval. We did not instruct the board to sell them at a sacrifice. We did not instruct them to sell them at any less than the world market price. Rather, as you will see, we instructed them not to do so, but Mr. Payne told us that he had had no offers to buy except to a very limited amount at any price. He told us that he was offering them along the lines of policy that we laid down, finding out what ships could be contracted for in England, and finding out what tonnage was being offered for in England, and offering our ships at that price. The truth of the business is that Mr. Payne and Mr. Benson are honorable and capable men, and every man on our committee, when John Barton Payne appeared before it, acknowledged that he was a splendid man for the place, and I think we were all convinced he had done and was doing his best to find purchasers for the ships, and I think it was clear that no man could have done more than he did. And of course the gentleman from Iowa knows that the President could only sell these ships through his proper agent, and that the Shipping Board was the only proper agent. The truth is the chairman of the Shipping Board had a hard duty, because he had $3,000,000,000 worth of ships which he had to try to put on the ocean under our flag, and under our policy to establish certain routes, and build up a great American merchant marine and assist our commerce. Members of our committee talked to him freely, and by our law we told him what should be the policy of the Government, and we told him that if he could not sell the ships he should lease or operate them. He has operated or leased ships until there is no cargo for them. He has done the best he could, and I think it is a poor policy to rap and criticize and attack and find all sorts of fault with a public official because he is of the opposite party to your own. When you get your men in there they are going to do the same thing the Shipping Board has heretofore, unless you tell them to destroy these ships or give them away, and in my judgment you could not give them away to American citizens and have them obligate themselves to run them on the lines our policy said should be established. If they were privately owned they would be tied up as they are to-day. What are you going to do? You must do the best you can, and we must grin and endure it. It may be that some of you wish to give these ships to private persons and then give them a subsidy to run them. I do not.

What about the wooden ships? We told him to sell them to foreigners if he could. It was up to us if we wanted to burn them. What would you do with a lot of junk, or whatever you might call it, which has cost you big money, and which has valuable machinery in it and timber? You have one of two things to do—to take care of them and guard them until you can make some disposition of them or destroy them. We thought they might be sold for something to some foreign country, like South or Central America. Would you burn them? You can not sell them, at least not now.

It is up to Congress to sell them, or, if necessary, to sink them in the waters where they lie. Otherwise you must guard them against depredations. That is all that is being done, and it costs money. If you have ever been in a business that is a losing business, you will understand the situation. You can not get any bid on them and they are bringing in no dividends and there is a loss from year to year, just the same thing some of us farmers are up against at the present time. I have got mules on my farm that I can not afford to give away, and I do not want to give them away, and I have lands and I know that I am going to stand a loss this year for operating them. Mr. Benson is in the same shape. He has something like 20,000,000 tons of shipping on his hands and no frieght to move, and no genius can make a success of that through these distressful and depressing times. Gentlemen know that, and yet they continue to rap the Shipping Board that has done all that is in its power. It is not fair. The members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, know that it is not fair to Mr. Payne nor to Admiral Benson. They know neither of them could sell those ships, and that is why they did not. [Applause.]

[Under leave to extend.]

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa, after I had, I think, successfully defended the Shipping Board, turned his guns upon the President, and said that it was his duty to have sold these ships and that he had authority to do so under the original shipping act, and that the law I referred to was not passed till the close of last Congress. Let me ask whose fault it was that this law was not passed sooner. Let us admit that there was a broad, general authority under the first law for the President to operate or sell the ships. This law was passed when the Government did not own or contemplate owning any considerable number of ships, and carried only $50,000,000 appropriation for construction and operation of ships. After we got into the war we appropriated and spent some $3,000,000,000 for ships, and when the war closed we had this vast ship tonnage on our hands.

Was not the Shipping Board or the President, if you please, more than justified in presenting the matter to Congress for its determination as to what should be done with the ships, and the terms, restrictions, and conditions on which they should be sold, leased, or operated? This is just what was done through Judge Payne not very long after the armistice. Congress met May 19, 1919. If it had any fault to find with the administration of the Shipping Board or with its policy as to the sale of the ships it ought to have said so by passing appropriate legislation. We had our boys in Europe to bring home first and perhaps needed the ships for that. Freight was plentiful and high. Every condition indicated that the ships could be operated at a profit, and so from May 19, 1919, to June 5, 1920, Congress was inert. Now, when we can not operate at a profit, men, like the gentleman from Iowa, are howling that the President right at once, without consulting Congress and immediately after the armistice, ought to have sold these ships or given them away on any terms or conditions which he might have deemed proper. It is simply a partisan and shameful effort to condemn and malign the President and the Shipping Board for the crime of being a part of his administration. And let me add that the Republican President has had since March 4 to try his hand on selling these ships, and so far as I am advised has not in those three months sold one.

I hope Democrats will do better and refuse to condemn or malign the Republican President and Shipping Board if they are as faithful and honest as President Wilson and his Shipping Board have been in their administration of this great branch of the Government.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I can not let the statement go unchallenged that the gentleman has just concluded his speech with that "they knew he could not sell the ships and therefore he did not." I have tried to correct the gentleman several times. The gentleman knows that the merchant marine act did not pass until just before the adjournment of Congress at the last session, but under the appropriation act of June 15, 1917, which authorized the purchase of the ships, a good many ships were sold, not alone to Americans but to Europeans, and they were sold under the provision of the law, contrary to the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No; I will not yield until I have read the law. The gentleman does not seem to know what the law is. The law that the President of the United States was operating under all of the time provides:

All ships constructed, purchased, or requisitioned under authority herein or heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States shall be operated and disposed of as the President may direct.

It is not as Congress may direct, but Congress gave the President the power to buy ships and to sell the ships, and the President was operating under that law all of the time, until at least the merchant marine act was passed. He was operating under that law when most of these ships were sold. Practically none of the ships were sold after the passage of the merchant marine act. All of the ships that we got any money for were sold under the provision that I have just read. Whatever blame attaches to it should be accepted by men like men, because the Congress gave the President the right and it gave it to him without stint. It gave him full power to sell the ships at any price he might designate and to sell the ships to whomsoever he desired. All this talk about throwing it on the Congress is the merest bunk.

But, Mr. Speaker, I desire now to take up the pending amendment. We have placed on the amendment a limitation with regard to expenditures. When the deficiency bill came before Congress we asked the question whether or not they had been increasing the salaries from year to year. Mr. Brown said they had not, that this deficiency was not caused by an increase in the salaries at all. I was somewhat apprehensive about this bureau because it grew from an expenditure of $30,000 in 1915 to $125,000 for this year. Mr. Brown said there had been no increase. After he appeared before the committee I learned the fact that Mr. Brown, just before March 4 last, went to President Wilson and had his salary increased from $6,000 to $10,000 a year, and he had the assistant chief's salary increased from $5,500 a year to $6,500 a year, and so on with a great many other increases. When we took this matter before the conference it was my thought that we ought to place a limitation upon the salary of the director of practically what he was getting at the beginning of the year. This amendment does not permit the payment of any salary in excess of $7,500 a year, which is the salary of the Members of the House and the Senate, and it then provides that the same rate of pay for these employees that was in effect at the beginning of the fiscal year shall remain in effect until changed by law. It seems to me that it is an amendment that ought to be adopted.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes of time?

Mr. GOOD. On this amendment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In regard to the colloquy of a few moments ago.

Mr. GOOD. I suggest that we dispose of this matter first.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 19: Page 14, line 15, after the figures "$15,000,000," insert: "Provided, That payments for the support and maintenance of persons dependent upon any trainee of the board as provided by section 2 of the act may, in the discretion of the board, be paid either direct to such dependent or dependents or to the trainee upon whom they are dependent: And provided further, That any person entitled under the provisions of the vocational rehabilitation act, as amended, to take vocational training must make application therefor within 18 months from the date of the approval of this act."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 19 and agree to the same. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I shall not attempt during these five minutes to make such a reply as might be adequate to the very learned argument made a moment ago in reference to the appointment of Mr. Lasker, of Chicago, on the Shipping Board. I regret that arguments of that sort should come from gentlemen for whom all of us have the very highest regard, and I do not believe in their hearts they feel that that kind of criticism is justified in advance of a man's appointment to an office. Mr. Lasker, of Chicago, is one of the most successful business men in that part of the country. One of the speakers ridiculed his interest in Quaker Oats, ridiculed his interest in the Van Camp Co., ridiculed his interest in the Chicago Baseball Club. One would think those are not legitimate business enterprises. One would think that a successful business man of this country has no right to have any money invested in a corporation, like the Quaker Oats Co., which furnishes a market and is furnishing use for the products of the farms of this land. One would think there is something contemptible and beneath the dignity of a gentleman and of a business man to be interested in the baseball business, which represents a sport so popular with everybody, even with Members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to stop this promiscuous denunciation and criticism of successful men in business who are willing to give their services to public office. Certainly men of the class of Mr. Farrell, of the class of Mr. Teagle, of the class of Mr. Lasker, certainly those men do not take public office for the emoluments which such public office might give them. They take public office at the request and earnest solicitation, if at all, of the President of the United States and of others who desire to secure their services.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I just want to say I know Mr. Lasker very well. I do not know whether he is going to be appointed chairman of the Shipping Board or not, and I do not care, but I know he is one of the able men of America who has been one of our most successful business men.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is no question about that. I want to say this in reference to the Shipping Board——

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have only five minutes. I am a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I know the Hon. John Barton Payne well, and he, too, came from Chicago. John Barton Payne never ran a ship; John Barton Payne never built a ship; and John Barton Payne, in my opinion—and I said it before upon the floor of this House—was very able and capable as chairman of the Shipping Board, and I expressed my regret that the President saw fit to keep moving him from one position to another so that he was never able to accomplish anything in the position for which he seemed to be so admirably fitted. If President Wilson had permitted John Barton Payne to remain at the head of the Shipping Board I believe he would have accomplished great results as he seemed about to do when he took hold of the business of that board. He was no more qualified, he was no more prepared, for taking up the work of the Shipping Board than Mr. Lasker would be, than Mr. Teagle would be, or Mr. Farrell would be. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], and then I think we will have to finish this bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my good friend from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has had something to say by way of criticism of some remarks which were made by me and my colleague in reference to the failure of the administration to promptly appoint members of the Shipping Board. I expressly stated, and I wish to state now, that in anything I may have said I did not intend in the least to reflect upon either the high personal character or the business ability of Mr. Lasker, of Chicago. I did express some element of doubt whether a man whose interests had been along the line indicated by the gentleman from Illinois, who knows nothing about ships or the shipping industry, was exactly the man to take charge as chairman of the Shipping Board if it is in the situation described by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand it is the purpose to sell these ships, and if they are sold at all they will be sold to men in the shipping business. I think that is one reason why a man in the shipping business may not be available for a position on the Shipping Board. Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know. I do not know just why they are not available, but I had hoped, and I am sure the country had hoped, that in the development of this great merchant marine, which is costing so much money and which for the first time within years has offered real hope that we would have a great merchant marine of ships flying our flag and carrying our commerce rather than be compelled to depend upon foreign ships and foreign shipping interests, that the President would have selected some one whose past experience was such as to commend himself to the entire country as a man who would be able to take charge of the situation from the start.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman know of one chairman of the Shipping Board appointed by President Wilson who knew anything about ships when he was appointed, with the exception of Admiral Benson?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I know that gentlemen on that side of the Chamber from the very time of their appointment have never failed to criticize them severely for their actions upon the Shipping Board. We have just listened to a 30-minute speech this morning from the gentleman from Iowa severely condemning the administration of the Shipping Boards of the past.

I will say to the gentleman that one chairman of the Shipping Board, a man who stands high in this country and who has great information about ships and shipping interests, was Admiral Benson, who, on account of his experience and ability, has been retained by the present President as his personal agent since March 4, and is now in charge.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. And in addition to the chairman we had Mr. Rossiter and Mr. Piez, who are shipping men, on the board with the chairman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am glad to have that suggestion from the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was Mr. Piez a shipping man before he came on the board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know.

Mr. BRITTEN. And neither was Mr. Hurley.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no intention of casting personal reflections on anyone. I do not question the ability of any of these gentlemen who have been suggested for chairman of the Shipping Board, but what I complain of is this long delay which has resulted in bringing about just the situation that has been described in this House and at the other end of the Capitol. If you want results, if you want the Shipping Board to function, then, in God's name, appoint a Shipping Board so that it can function.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will my friend from Tennessee tell the House what he thinks of the appointment of former Senator Chamberlain as a member of the Shipping Board?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether Senator Chamberlain has any information relative to ships or not. I know that he is a gentleman of ability and stands high throughout the country, and is a man who I am sure will faithfully do his duty.

Mr. KNUTSON. We are all sure of that.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the debate from now on will be confined to the amendments. They all have relation to the appropriation of money, and we ought to divorce our discussion of that from such discussions as have just taken place. I want to call the attention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the fact that this is a change of existing law, in that it permits the payment of allowances that are due a trainee and the dependent members of the trainee's family in the judgment of the board. It is found that some trainees with families depending upon them for support draw increased compensation because they have families and give nothing to the support of the families, and these families in some cases become a public charge. This will simply give the board the power in such cases to allot the amount to the trainee or to the members of his family, as may seem just to the board. It also provides that any person who is entitled to vocational training must make application for vocational training within 18 months after the passage of this act. This matter was suggested to the House committee. We refused to adopt it, because it was legislation. The Senate has adopted this amendment, and I have now moved to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 19.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 21: Page 15, after line 5, insert:

"INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

"For payment to Henry Jones Ford, on account of services rendered as Interstate Commerce Commissioner from June 11, 1920, to March 4, 1921, $8,800."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the House bill in quite a number of cases carried appropriations for officials in a similar situation. I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 21.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 21.

Mr. GOOD. In all cases where the appointment of an official had been legally made, except that the appointment was not confirmed, and where the official performed the duties, we carried appropriations for that official. Mr. Ford was appointed as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission but was not confirmed. He rendered service from June 11, 1920, to March 4, 1921, and no appropriation has been made for that service. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House has reported out a bill in favor of authorizing this item of appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 21.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 41: Page 29, after line 21, insert:

"JUDICIAL.

"To pay the widow of Edward Douglass White, late Chief Justice of the United States, $15,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 41 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 41 and concur in the same.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, while there is no law for the appropriation, the custom in a number of cases has been to appropriate one year's salary to the widow of a deceased Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think that has taken place in recent years in most cases, except perhaps that of Chief Justice Fuller. An appropriation was made for the widow of Justice Brewer for a full year's salary. In the case of the death of Justice Harlan we appropriated to his widow one year's salary, and the same was true in the case of Justice Lurton. The amount carried here of $15,000 is one year's salary and is in accordance with the custom of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 41 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 42: Page 34, after line 18, insert:

"OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

"For the operation and maintenance of the aeroplane mail service between New York and San Francisco, including the same objects specified under this head in the Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $125,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 42 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 42 and concur in the same. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 49: Page 44 of the bill, at the top of the page, insert:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay to PETER G. TEN EYCK, from the appropriation 'Meat inspection, Bureau of Animal Industry, 1921,' the sum of $84, representing rent remaining unpaid by the Department of Agriculture for the use and occupancy of a room in the Spencer-Trask Building, Albany, N. Y., from and including November 1, 1920, to February 28, 1921, the provisions of section 114 of the Penal Code notwithstanding."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 49 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 49 and concur in the same.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a case where the Department of Agriculture occupied rooms in a building owned by a Member of Congress.

Under section 114 of the Penal Code they would not be authorized to receive it, or the Government could not pay it, without express authority of law. The Department of Agriculture occupied the room at the regular rent, and the amount is due to Mr. TEN EYCK, and it should be paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, page 49, insert:

"The statement of appropriations, etc., for the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress shall include the Army, naval, and second deficiency appropriation acts passed during the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, and all other appropriations made at the latter session shall be compiled and published with the statement of appropriations for the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 67, and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 67 and concur in the same. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted insert:

"Public Buildings Commission: The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to credit to the account of the disbursing officer of the Public Buildings Commission the sum of $354.51, heretofore expended for the repair and upkeep of an automobile, and charge the same to the appropriation for the Public Buildings Commission."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 68 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 68 and concur in the same.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, that is an item where a congressional commission, composed of Members of the Senate and Members of the House, took over an automobile from the Housing Corporation and had it repaired, and the repairs amounted to $354.51. After the repairs were made they found they had no authority of law to incur the expense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 50, insert:

"SENATE.

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the appropriation 'For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others,' for the fiscal year 1921, to Austin Jackson, for services rendered as assistant clerk to the Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE, Senator from the State of Nevada, at the rate of $1,500 per annum from March 4, 1921, to March 20, 1921, both dates inclusive."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 69 and concur in the same.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I wish the gentleman from Iowa would explain why we have to make a special appropriation for that. Is not that provided for by law?

Mr. GOOD. No. There is no authority to pay it because the appointment was not received in time. It was lost in the mail, and during that 16-day period, while that clerk performed the service, it was found that the appointment had not been made in accordance with law. But the clerk did the work and he is entitled to be paid. The formal appointment was lost in the mail.

Mr. SMITH. Why is it necessary to bring an item of that kind to the House?

Mr. GOOD. If we had included it in the conference report, it would have made the whole conference report subject to a point of order. We were careful not to include anything that would make the conference report subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19, page 52, insert:

"The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to transfer, without payment therefor, to the Government Printing Office one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, if such vehicle can be obtained from surplus stores not needed by the War Department."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to transfer, without payment therefor, to the Government Printing Office one motor-propelled and passenger-carrying vehicle."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recede from the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 76 and concur therein with the amendment as reported.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the House strikes out the provision and directs that it shall be done, even if the automobile is not surplus and the War Department needs it?

Mr. GOOD. If the words are left in in many of these amendments—there are two or three of them—"if such vehicle can be obtained from surplus stores not needed by the War Department," you might as well not enact the legislation at all, because they have not declared a great many of the automobiles in stock as surplus.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman, if that be so, ought not the automobile, if it is needed, be bought elsewhere instead of taking it from one department against its will and giving it to another?

Mr. GOOD. No. We have hundreds of automobiles in the War Department, and very soon they will be out of date, and then the War Department, which is never willing to take anything either out of date or out of style, will want to junk them.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is not this taking matters into the hands of the House from the War Department?

Mr. GOOD. The Government Printing Office has many employees. It does work for all the 10 departments and under the law now for all the independent establishments. The Public Printer is obliged either to send his foreman or assistant or go himself to these departments. He now has an automobile that is out of commission, and perhaps needs a small passenger car as much as anybody else in the Government.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire on my own account to protest against that mode of doing business. It is not the proper way to do, in my judgment, for the House to tell the War Department what is surplus and what is not.

Mr. GOOD. We have always done that; we have had to tell the War Department when it can buy property, and when not.

Mr. SMITH. Will this afford the War Department an opportunity to get a new automobile when the next appropriation bill comes up?

Mr. GOOD. They can not get it unless they get the appropriation for it.

Mr. SMITH. Probably they will get the appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to concur in the amendment with the amendment which has been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 86: Page 78, after line 6, insert:

"CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

"For travel, printing, stationery, contingent expenses, additional employees, and other necessary expenses of examinations, fiscal year 1922, $100,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, except one at $3,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 86 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$75,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the sum of $117,000 was estimated for by the Civil Service Commission as being necessary to conduct the civil-service examinations for vacancies in post offices throughout the country. The Senate amendment carried $100,000. It has seemed to us that the amount carried in the Senate amendment is excessively large, and it is somewhat problematical as to just the number of post offices where examinations will be held. It is likewise somewhat problematical as to what each examination will cost. It has seemed to us that if possible the expenditure for next year for this purpose should not exceed $75,000, and therefore I have offered the amendment to reduce the amount from $100,000 to $75,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. This $75,000 proposed by the gentleman is one of the incidental expenses connected with the change of postmasters throughout the country?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is one of the incidentals of what happened in November?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am for this amendment. I doubt if it will be enough to serve the purposes for which the appropriation is being made. I am for it because it seems to be necessary to enable a change from Democratic to Republican postmasters, and inasmuch as the Republican Party are in control of the Government, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection, but, on the contrary, I think they are entitled to the offices, if they want them, although I know of no real economic reason and no reason based on efficiency which would require a change in the postmasters over the country.

Mr. RICKETTS. Evidently the gentleman is not familiar with the existing condition of affairs in the Post Office Department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is entitled to his opinion about that. As stated by the gentleman from Iowa, $117,000 was asked for this purpose. A member of the Civil Service Commission told me privately that in his judgment $117,000 would not be sufficient to conduct all of the examinations; but I realize the hunger that exists in certain quarters for some of these offices, and I think it very well to make this appropriation now, and I have no doubt that the majority in Congress will provide whatever funds may be necessary later on. Personally I would have preferred to see this change made in some other way, because I was never for the order which was made during the Democratic administration, and this seems to be a very high price to be paid at this time of high taxes merely to enable a change of postmasters on the subterfuge that it is being done through the civil service. Everybody knows and appreciates the real purpose of the recent Executive order, which has made this appropriation necessary.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I only want to express the hope that that hunger will be satisfied to a greater extent than it was satisfied in the gentleman's district under the previous administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no doubt it will be very fully satisfied, because I have observed that if there is one party that is capable of taking care of its own when it comes to filling the offices it is the party to which the gentleman belongs. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the motion to concur in Senate amendment 86 with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 88: Page 78, after line 19, insert:

"PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

"Buildings and grounds: For the erection of an 8-room extensible building on the site in the immediate vicinity of the Mott School, $140,000;

"For the purchase of additional land adjoining the John Eaton School, $12,000;

"For the erection of an 8-room addition to the John Eaton School, $140,000;

"For beginning the erection of a junior high school north of Taylor Street and east of Fourteenth Street, on the land now owned by the District of Columbia, $100,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for said building at a cost not to exceed $300,000;

"For the purchase of a site for a junior high school building in the vicinity of the Gage, Emery, and Eckington Schools, $50,000;

"For beginning the erection of a junior high school on the site in the vicinity of the Gage, Emery, and Eckington Schools, $100,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for said building at a cost not to exceed $300,000;

"For a new site in the vicinity of the Smothers School, $5,000;

"For the erection of a 4-room building on the site to be purchased in the vicinity of the Smothers School to replace the Smothers School, $70,000;

"For the purchase of a site for a 16-room extensible building in the vicinity of and north of Lincoln Park, $30,000;

"For the erection of an 8-room extensible building on the site to be purchased in the vicinity of and north of Lincoln Park, $140,000;

"For the erection of a 4-room addition to the Monroe School, $75,000;

"For the purchase of a site adjoining the Lovejoy School, $6,500;

"For the purchase of a site west of Sixteenth Street NW., in the Ingleside section, $40,000;

"For the purchase of land adjoining the Phillips School, $9,000;

"For the purchase of a site for a 16-room building adjoining the Buchanan School, $30,000;

"For the erection of an 8-room extensible building adjoining the Buchanan School, $140,000;

"For the purchase of a new site in the vicinity of the Bell School, $20,000;

"For the erection of an 8-room building on the site to be purchased in the immediate vicinity of the Bell School, to ultimately replace the Bell School, $140,000;

"For the erection of a building for the care of tubercular pupils, $150,000;

"For repairs and alterations of the Harrison School, now used for colored tubercular children, $17,000;

"For the purchase of a site in the vicinity of Woodley Park, $40,000;

"For the purchase of land adjoining the Armstrong Manual Training School, $20,000;

"For the purchase of additional land north of the Hayes School, $5,000;

"For the purchase of additional land adjoining the Emery School, $8,000;

"For the purchase of additional land adjoining the Peabody School, $20,000;
"For the purchase of additional land adjoining the Adams School, $20,000;
"For the purchase of additional land adjoining the Webb School, $1,500;
"For the purchase of additional land adjoining the Harrison School, $15,000; in all, fiscal year 1922, $1,544,000, to be disbursed and accounted for as 'Buildings and grounds, public schools,' and for that purpose shall constitute one fund."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 88 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 88 and concur in the same.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if this were a question of the people living in the District of Columbia taxing themselves in order to provide adequate school facilities for their children here in this District I would vote for just as high a tax and for just as great an expenditure of public money for that purpose as any man in this House, because no man in this House believes more strongly in providing proper educational facilities for the boys and girls and young men and young women of the country than I do. Or if it were a question of voting for an appropriation found necessary through a proper investigation by Congress, I would not oppose it. But unfortunately the other body put this amendment of over $1,500,000 on a deficiency bill, when we all know that by reason of the existing circumstances no great amount of consideration could have been given it, and the Senate has proposed in this bill that the people of the United States shall pay half of this expense. Even under the proposition as it will be made by our friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in charge of this bill that the people living here in the District be required to pay 60 per cent, that still leaves 40 per cent of this amount of taxation upon the whole people of the United States, so that we should act deliberately and with consideration in the proposed expenditure of this money.

This question is now before the District Committee. It has just begun to give the question consideration, and very careful consideration has been begun by two members of that committee. Why not let us finish our investigation? Why rush the matter in a deficiency bill? Why do you not give the proper committee a chance to investigate this question and see what is really needed? I know that the proposal made by the District Commissioners here is exaggerated and much larger than is necessary. When this question first came up I had occasion to visit some of these schools in person, and I am now making an attempt to visit all of them, and if given time some of the other members of the committee may do the same thing.

Now, I heard that the Johnson School was badly congested, and I made a personal visit to it, going into each classroom, and personally inspecting conditions, and asking questions of each teacher there, being accompanied by the principal of the school. The following is the report of same I made to the District Committee at the time we had Dr. Ballou before us, to wit:

JOHNSON SCHOOL.

[Miss Brewer, principal.]

Miss Brewer's room: 44 desks, 36 pupils enrolled, 8 vacant desks, 8 windows. No pay pupils in school.
Mrs. Dawson's room: 48 desks, 39 pupils enrolled, 9 vacant desks, 8 windows.
Mrs. H. M. Tancre's room: 48 desks, 39 pupils enrolled, 9 vacant desks, 6 windows.
Miss Street's room: 46 desks, 32 pupils enrolled, 14 vacant desks, 6 windows.
Miss Lantenschalager's room: 48 desks, 46 pupils enrolled, 2 vacant desks, 8 windows.
Miss Schoenborn's room: 48 desks, 36 pupils enrolled, 12 vacant desks, 8 windows.
Miss Sargeant's room: 48 desks, 31 pupils enrolled, 17 vacant desks, 6 windows.
Miss McCauley's room: 48 desks, 32 pupils enrolled, 16 vacant desks, 6 windows.

ONLY PORTABLE BUILDING (JOHNSON SCHOOL).

Miss Dwyer's room (3 A grade): 45 desks, 35 pupils enrolled (1 extra), 10 vacant desks. This is the only portable building at Johnson school, and is composed of the one room taught by Miss Dwyer. Eleven windows, 2 glass doors. Only 3 sick children last winter; health ideal; teacher thoroughly satisfied.

I had also heard that there was great congestion at the Powell School, and I personally inspected every classroom in it, and the following is my report made of conditions there to the District Committee at the time we had Dr. Ballou before us, to wit:

POWELL SCHOOL.

[Miss McGill, principal; R. L. Haycock, supervisor, third division, officing here.]

Miss Spackman's room (7 B grade): 48 desks, 31 pupils enrolled, 17 vacant desks, 6 windows.
Miss Aetcheson's room: 48 desks, 47 pupils enrolled, 1 vacant desk, 7 windows.
Miss Jaquette's room: 48 desks, 39 pupils enrolled, 9 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Oberly's room (on stage), kindergarten class; has assistant teacher: 23 pupils, 5 years old.

[Kindergarten class.]

Miss Quinter's room (has assistant teacher): 35 pupils enrolled, 5 years old; 7 windows. Teaches to noon every day.
Miss Holzberg's room: 48 desks, 44 pupils enrolled, 4 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Dill's room: 44 desks, 37 pupils enrolled, 7 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Carmichael's room: Sewing. Girls taking sewing instruction come here daily.
Miss Bagby's room: 48 desks, 33 pupils enrolled, 15 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Kirby's room: 46 desks, 44 pupils enrolled, 2 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Meloy's room: 46 desks, 35 pupils enrolled, 11 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Mrs. Chenery's room: 47 desks, 33 pupils enrolled, 14 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Short's room: 48 desks, 45 pupils enrolled, 3 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Lamson's room: 48 desks, 41 pupils enrolled, 7 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss Taylor's room (6 A grade): 48 desks, 36 pupils enrolled, 12 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Miss F. A. Reeve's room: 47 desks, 47 pupils enrolled, 7 windows.
Miss L. M. W. Reeve's room: 48 desks, 36 pupils enrolled, 12 vacant desks, 7 windows.
Mrs. Burmeister's room: 48 desks, 45 pupils enrolled, 3 vacant desks, 7 windows.

[Portable schools at Powell School, 2; 1 classroom in each.]

First portable—Powell School:
Mrs. Page's room: 47 desks, 38 pupils enrolled, 9 vacant desks, 11 windows, 2 glass doors.
Second portable—Powell School:
Mrs. Smith's room: 42 pupils enrolled, room for 8 extra desks, 11 windows, 2 glass doors.
Carpenter shop: With expert mechanic in charge as instructor, to which various classes of boys go daily.

Now, besides the above, the only evidence we have had before the District Committee on this question was that we had Dr. Ballou to come before us one morning and make a statement. If any member of the District Committee besides myself has made any personal inspection of the schools of Washington, he has not yet given the District Committee the benefit of his information.

There was only one schoolroom visited by me where there was an enrolled pupil for each desk in the room. To each teacher visited I said, "What do you need? Do you need anything to give the children the best instruction?" Well, some said a globe, some said a wall map, some said a sand box. "Anything else?" I asked. "No." "Got everything you need?" "Yes." "Is your room comfortable?" "Yes." "Sanitary?" "Yes." "You don't want anything else except the few items mentioned?" "No."

Now, in the State of Texas little children of kindergarten age are not permitted to attend the public schools free. In Texas a child can not go to a public school until it is 7 years of age.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Here in Washington the children can begin at the nursery age of 5 years. In these two schools, the Johnson and the Powell, I found in one of them one kindergarten class and the other had two, and in one room I found only 25 little tots 5 and 6 years old, with two teachers in charge of the 25 children. Here each kindergarten teacher is furnished an assistant. I want to say that there is not a city in the United States to-day where there are better school facilities than we have in the city of Washington. It is true that at the Johnson School they had a building with just one large room in it on the outside they called a portable building. At the Powell School they had two such 1-room buildings they called portable buildings. In the one at the Johnson School the teacher said that she had had the best health in her school the past winter that they had in any school, with only three cases of sickness. The two temporary 1-room portable buildings at the Powell School were stuck down in a low place where there was mud in wet weather and they had had some sickness there. There was plenty of room on high, dry ground there to move those two buildings out of the mud to avoid that trouble, and I called the principal's attention to this.

I believe that if you will properly readjust the school children and make them attend the proper schools you will solve most of these difficulties. They all want to go to certain schools. For instance, you take the Force School out on Massachusetts

Avenue, and most of the people have heard that the children of the great Theodore Roosevelt went there, and because of that sentiment there are a lot of children that want to go to the Force School, and it is always crowded. There ought to be a proper readjustment in the city, and if you had a proper readjustment there would be very little crowded conditions.

Again, is it proper and right for the whole people of the United States to be called upon to continue to build fine new school buildings for the city of Washington and to pay 40 per cent of their maintenance? Do you know that in this city there are 2,485 children from the States of Maryland and Virginia who go to school in Washington practically free of tuition and the people of the United States pay 40 per cent of the expense? Why should the people of the United States be called upon to educate 2,485 children who live in the States of Virginia and Maryland? Those States give each child an apportionment, but it is not transferred to Washington. I would not call upon the Congress to help educate the children of Texas. I do not think the people of Virginia and Maryland ought to call upon the rest of the United States to educate the children in their particular States.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. As a matter of fact, is it not true that the children coming from Maryland and Virginia pay tuition to the District of Columbia schools?

Mr. BLANTON. Out of 2,485 children from the two States I have named, how many does the gentleman from Idaho think pay tuition?

Mr. SMITH. I am seeking information from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Only 82. I know exactly, because I have investigated it. Out of 2,485 children who are attending school in the District of Columbia and living in Virginia and Maryland only 82 pay tuition, and the balance come in scot free, and are furnished their school books. It is claimed that their fathers and mothers are working in the District. They come here each morning from Maryland and Virginia to work in some Government service. That may be true, but they moved over into Virginia and Maryland, where, instead of paying $131 a month rent, as I pay for an unfurnished house, they get the same house there for $40 and $50 a month. If they can save from $50 to $100 a month on rent by living in Virginia and Maryland, why should they object to paying $6 a month for their children to go to school in the District?

Mr. HICKS. Why are they not compelled to pay tuition?

Mr. BLANTON. Because Congress does not force them to do it. I am protesting that Congress ought to compel every single child that lives out of the District of Columbia who goes to school in the District to pay tuition, and then we would not have congestion. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to verify the figures I have mentioned, I will call attention to the following list of enrolled nonresident pupils, by schools, here in Washington, showing the number enrolled, and the number paying tuition. Dr. Ballou verifies this as correct, to wit:

When a person inspects the many, many splendid school buildings situated over Washington, some of them such as the Central High, Western High, Dunbar (colored) High, and others almost as extensive as many big universities, and remembers that the whole people of the United States have paid 50 per cent of the cost of same, and up to last year 50 per cent of the maintenance of same, and that they are now to keep on paying at least 40 per cent of the cost of all new buildings, and at least 40 per cent of the annual cost of maintenance, I take it that the people want us, as their representatives, to go slow and to be sure that we are right before we go ahead. They do not want us to spend their money recklessly in gobs of $1,500,000 by impulsive amendments on deficiency appropriation bills for new construction, without any extensive investigation. We are simply taking the word of Dr. Ballou for all this, and I will guarantee that I have been in more school buildings in Washington than he has personally. He is taking somebody's word for what he asks. Out of the 800 pupils in the Takoma School 300 are from the State of Maryland, live and sleep in Maryland every night, and the people of the United States are paying a large per cent of the cost of their education.

I know that at a banquet in Washington not long ago one of our distinguished committee chairman, in his exuberance, is reported by Washington papers to have exclaimed that he was going to spend $800,000,000 in the District, and was going to give $100,000,000 to the Washington schools, that the blue sky was to be his limit, that he was used to spending money in large gobs from where he came from, but that the Congressmen from the jack-rabbit sections of the South and West were not used to spending money. I expect him to vote for this proposal. But let me again assert that the money he has been used to spending during his 24 years as a public lawmaker has been public money and not his own private money. Some of us Congressmen from the jack-rabbit sections of the South and West are used to spending our own money freely and generously, but we are careful about spending the people's money out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas can get more erroneous statements into a speech of 10 minutes than any other Member of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman tell me one?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is complaining because children whose parents reside out of the District attend schools in the District without paying tuition. The gentleman forgets the large appropriations we have made for the agricultural colleges and schools of mechanic arts to every State in the Union. The gentleman forgets that out of the Federal Treasury large allotments to States for educational purposes have been made, and Texas gets a very large sum.

The gentleman says that the children of Federal employees working in the District but living in Maryland and Virginia do not pay any tuition. That is so, but it is because Congress has said by a specific statute that they do not need to pay any tuition. That is the reason. Congress legislated on the subject, and said that these children, whose fathers and mothers are Government employees in the District of Columbia, should have the advantages of the schools of the District without charge.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Can the gentleman tell the reason why these 74 children to whom the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] refers have to pay tuition?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about every child. I have not taken a census of it.

Mr. KEARNS. He said that 74 out of 2,500 had to pay tuition.

Mr. FOCHT. They do not have to pay tuition; they volunteered to do it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the situation with respect to schools in the District of Columbia is this: The District has been growing, and the population has been increasing very rapidly. We have done very little in the way of constructing school buildings. Take the first item in the amendment, which is illustrative of the general situation. It is the Mott School, at Fourth and Trumbull Streets, in the District of Columbia. The enrollment to-day is 1,010 pupils. They have 18 classrooms, one supply room occupied by coaching classes, and an assembly hall occupied by the fifth grade. They have two portable buildings which are occupied by second grades and one kindergarten. Sixty students, nearly 60 pupils for every room, and in many cases—and this is one of them—the children are permitted to go to school for only a few hours a day, because there are not school facilities enough. They are turned upon the streets to do as they please. Before the Committee on Appropriations or the conferees were willing to agree on this matter and to instruct me to make the motion which I have made we took the matter up with the House Committee on the District of Columbia. The Committee on the District of Columbia has been investigating the matter and told us that every one of these items should be allowed.

The only criticism that committee had was the fact that it would not supply what is necessary in the District. The Senate Committee on the District has had extensive hearings on the matter and they have urged this as an emergency. The House last spring attempted to solve the question and would have solved it and we would have granted other appropriations at that time but for the fact that then the estimate of the minimum cost for constructing an eight-room school building was $220,000. Some investigation has been made in regard to costs at this time, and they have brought them down, so that they think they can construct an eight-room building for $140,000. At any rate they will not be permitted to expend more than $140,000. The amendment which I have moved to agree to is in harmony with the wish of the Senate committee that investigated the matter and the express wish of the House committee that has jurisdiction of the legislation.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. The gentleman does not claim that this example that he has given for one school, averaging 60 pupils, is at all general throughout the District of Columbia?

Mr. GOOD. I can give the gentleman the facts in regard to the matter.

Mr. CHALMERS. I visited a school last week and I found an entirely different condition. I do not think that the crowding of the District schools is such as has been pictured.

Mr. GOOD. Was it one of the schools that we have provided for here?

Mr. CHALMERS. I think the children in the building would not average 40 per room. It may be, as has been said, that this is important enough to put upon a deficiency bill, and yet a matter of this importance ought to have the careful consideration of the committee, it seems to me.

Mr. GOOD. It has had the careful consideration of three committees. It had the consideration of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the District appropriation bill. I do not claim that it had the attention of the committee on deficiencies, except that we reviewed the testimony. It had the investigation of the House committee on District affairs—that is, legislative affairs—which says that the only objection to it is that it is not enough, and it has had the investigation of and extensive hearings before the Senate committee on the District. I hate to put on an appropriation just as badly as the gentleman does, and I have been trying to do the best I could to keep them down, but I say to the gentleman that I do not want to take the responsibility of turning young children out on the streets in the District of Columbia when we have provided by the agreement of the conference report that 60 per cent of the cost of these buildings shall be paid out of the revenues of the District and 40 per cent out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that this congestion, so far as the schools are concerned in the city of Washington, has existed for several years. There has been great agitation and great demand for additional school buildings. We have had portable buildings, but they are not healthy, they do not provide proper comforts for the children in the winter. The gentleman knows that it was stated to the conferees that even the sum appropriated here would not provide sufficient buildings to enable the school board to do away with all of the portable buildings.

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And, as the gentleman has suggested, it is by no means sufficient to provide adequate, up-to-date facilities for school buildings.

Mr. GOOD. One of the items is to rebuild a wooden building which was constructed in 1864–65, which has been condemned as being insanitary.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wish to say that during the little over two years that I have been here one of the members of my family has never been able to attend school more than half a day. That condition is almost general throughout considerable portions of the city.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD, for I shall not have time to read it, the statement I have here in regard to each of these school buildings, the record furnished by Dr. Ballou, so that it may be preserved as a permanent record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Memorandum on classroom needs of the elementary schools and what the $2,000,000 program now before Congress provides.

[Prepared by Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools.]

1. NEED OF ADDITIONAL CLASSROOMS IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS, 183 CLASSROOMS NEEDED, NOVEMBER 1, 1920.

The study made by the superintendent of schools shows the need of 183 additional classrooms to accommodate the pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia on November 1, 1920, as follows:

	Classrooms.
To eliminate the use of portable schoolhouses	73
To eliminate the use of rented quarters and undesirable rooms	35
To reduce oversize classes to classes of 40 pupils	57
To eliminate part time classes	18
Total additional rooms needed	183

In the following pages the basis of each stated need is summarized.

SEVENTY-EIGHT PORTABLE SCHOOLHOUSES.

The 73 portable schoolhouses for elementary-school pupils and the 5 for high-school pupils are located as follows:

Building sites upon which located:	Number of portables.

The undesirable rooms in permanent buildings used for class work are located as follows:

First division: John Eaton School, two office rooms; Tenley School, two in annex (old church).

Third division: Brightwood Park School, 1 basement room; Parkview School, two playrooms, one library, one auditorium.

Fifth division: Gage school, one undesirable room used for class work.

Sixth division: Webb School, one playroom used for manual training, one class transferred to Blow School for lack of room.

Eighth division: Smallwood-Bowen; 1 playroom used for printing.

Eleventh division: John F. Cook School, Mott School; 1 unfit for use, 1 supply room, 1 assembly hall, 1 boys' playroom.

Thirteenth division: Lovejoy School, Cardoza School; 1 basement room, 3 basement rooms.

To eliminate the use of rented quarters and of these undesirable rooms would require at least 35 additional classrooms.

FOUR HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOUR CLASSES WITH OVER 40 PUPILS.

Classes with over 40 pupils on November 1, 1920, are indicated below:

Division.	Classes from—
	41 to 45.	46 to 50.	50	Total.
First	15	8	1	24
Third	44	28	2	74
Fifth	31	15	2	48
Sixth	13	3		16
Seventh	27	13		40
Eighth	22	11		33
Ninth	20	26	2	48
Tenth	28	10	10	48
Eleventh	39	26		65
Twelfth	5	3		8
Thirteenth	25	13	2	40
Total	269	156	19	444

To reduce these classes to 40 pupils each would require at least 57 additional classrooms.

TWENTY-SEVEN CLASSES ON PART TIME.

Classes receiving three and one-half hours of education instead of five hours are as follows:

Division.	Number of classes.	Number rooms needed.
First	6	3
Third	9	7
Fifth	1	1
Sixth	2	1
Seventh	1	1
Eighth	1	1
Ninth
Tenth	2	1
Eleventh	3	2
Thirteenth	2	1
Total	27	18

To eliminate part time and put these 27 classes, involving over 1,000 pupils, on the full time to which they are entitled would take a minimum of 18 additional classrooms.

FORTY-FOUR CLASSROOMS NOW UNDER CONSTRUCTION.

The following additional classrooms are now under construction:

	Rooms.
Burrville	8
Deanwood	4
Petworth	8
Takoma	8
West	8
Woodbridge-Langdon	8
Total	44

The Deanwood rooms have already been occupied; the other rooms will probably be ready by the opening of school on September 19, 1921.

These 44 rooms will later in this memorandum be deducted from the total need of 185 rooms, leaving an unsatisfied need of 139 classrooms for the elementary schools.

The following additional classrooms have been provided for in the last appropriation bill or before:

	Rooms.
Deanwood	4
H. D. Cooke	4
Wheatley	12
Total	20

The Deanwood addition should be ready by January 1, 1922. The addition to the H. D. Cooke will probably be ready by September 19, 1921. The Wheatley will not be ready before September, 1922. New plans had to be prepared for this addition, since former plans were for eight rooms only.

Twenty additional rooms will be deducted from the total need later in this memorandum.

Summary of relief already provided for.

	Classrooms.
Total additional rooms needed		183
Now under construction	44
Additional rooms provided for	20
		64
Total need unmet by present appropriations		119

From the above it is clear that there would still be need for 119 additional classrooms for elementary school pupils if the classrooms which have already been appropriated for had been ready for occupancy November 1, 1920. Furthermore, the computed need of 183 classrooms does not provide a single seat for a pupil not already enrolled in the schools on November 1, 1920.

The program of 183 additional classrooms only brings the schoolhouse accommodations up to date; it does not provide for probable future increase in enrollment.

In view of the above statement, no feeling can be justifiably entertained that this program is building beyond our present needs. Furthermore, this building program need not wait a school survey, since this program is so planned that it provides seats for pupils whose location is known, because they are already enrolled in the schools.

II. WHAT THE $2,000,000 PROGRAM NOW BEFORE CONGRESS PROVIDES.

The supplemental estimates submitted to Congress by the Board of Commissioners of the District of May 2, 1921, at the request of the board of education cover the cost of urgently needed school sites and buildings, of additional sites on which school buildings should be erected by September 1922, and of land for playground purposes adjoining certain schools. These estimates are classified and briefly analyzed in the following pages.

THIRTY-SIX ADDITIONAL CLASSROOMS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

The $2,000,000 program now before Congress provides additional classrooms as follows:

	Number of additional classrooms.
Mott School	8
John Eaton	8
Vicinity of Lincoln Park	8
Monroe	4
Buchanan	8
Total	36

If appropriations are made at once, so that plans may be promptly developed for these additional accommodations, these buildings should be ready for occupancy by September, 1922. They can not be erected by that date if appropriations are delayed until the regular estimates are acted on in the winter of 1922.

FOUR REPLACEMENTS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

The building program now before Congress provides for a new building to replace the present Smothers Building, which is unfit for use; for an ultimate replacement of the Bell School, which must be transferred from its present location over an old creek; for a new building to replace the Hamilton School for tubercular white children; and for certain improvements at the Harrison School for tubercular colored children.

	Rooms.
Smothers, replacement	4
Bell, replacement	8
Hamilton, replacement	4
Harrison, remodeling	0
Total	16

It should be noted that these replacements do not provide additional classrooms. They are, however, imperative needs.

TWO JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOLS.

The building program also includes a request for appropriations for two junior high schools, each of which will provide about 12 elementary schoolrooms and about the same number of high-school rooms. These two schools when completed would provide 24 elementary classrooms and 24 high-school classrooms.

Buildings of this size can scarcely be planned and erected in less than two years. If they are to be ready for September, 1923, appropriations must be made at once.

Since the relief which they will provide the high schools is as necessary as the relief they will provide the elementary schools, they should be authorized at once.

FIVE SITES FOR EARLY USE.

Five sites are estimated for on which buildings should be located at an early date. In the budget of October 1, 1921, the board of education expects to ask for appropriations for the erection of buildings on all or most of these additional sites:

Lovejoy School: Land adjoining present school.
Ingleside section: New site.
Phillips School: Land adjoining present school.
Woodley Park: New site.
Armstrong Manual Training High School: Land adjoining present school.

SIX ADDITIONS TO SCHOOL YARDS FOR SCHOOL PLAYGROUNDS.

In addition to the requests for purchase of land for school sites there are certain items which provide for the purchase of additional land adjoining school yards, which need to be extended, and on which additions to buildings may possibly, in some instances, be later erected: Hayes School, Emery School, Adams School, Peabody School, Webb School.

The purchase of this additional land is imperative if the schools are not forever to lose it. A contractor stopped building operations on the land adjoining the Adams School to allow for its purchase for a school playground. The Woodley Park site will be lost by a few months' delay. It is strongly urged that appropriations be made at once.

The policy of the superintendent of schools and the board of education with regard to the educational treatment of pupils suffering from tuberculosis is contained in the following paragraph of a letter addressed to the Board of Commissioners dated March 17, 1921, as follows:

"The superintendent of schools believes that the physical well-being of the persons in such an institution is of first and paramount importance and that provisions for the education of such persons should always be subordinate to their physical well-being. The superintendent is further of the opinion that the responsibilities for the general supervision of the health conditions in such an institution should rest primarily with the health office and, of course, the department of medical inspection in the schools. The board of education and the superintendent of schools should adapt the educational procedure in the institution to the health conditions determined upon by the health department."

In accordance with the above policy the health office and others interested in the development of such institutions were asked to make suggestions as to the facilities which such institutions should provide. The following outline indicates some of the major suggestions thus made:

Classrooms sufficient in size to accommodate pupils.
An industrial room for manual activities.
Rest rooms—each with a capacity of 30 cots.
A dining room.
A kitchen and pantry, with cold storage facilities.
A combined office and physical examination room.
Play rooms—well lighted and ventilated.
Toilets and lavatories.

In addition to the above, of course, there should be heating facilities, provisions for the storage of books, blankets, clothing, materials for the industrial room, extra cots, and other special equipment.

In addition to the above there should be an uncovered porch surrounding the building on a level with the class and rest rooms, so that cots or reclining chairs may be placed on them for the use of the children.

The building should be piped for the vacuum system of cleaning, in order that a minimum amount of dust may result from the cleaning of the rooms.

From the above it will be seen that the request for an appropriation is for an institute, rather than for the conventional type of school building.

The institution to replace the Hamilton School for white children would, in general, cover the above specifications. The remodeling of the Harrison School for colored children would as nearly as practicable conform to the above specifications.

HARRISON SCHOOL (FOR COLORED CHILDREN.)

This school has an enrollment of 63 pupils. It is located at Thirteenth and U Streets NW.

Very little has been done to this building to adapt it to the needs of these tubercular children. The item of $17,000 in the estimates now before Congress will make it possible to better adapt this school building to the special needs of tubercular children.

HAMILTON SCHOOL (FOR WHITE CHILDREN).

The Hamilton School is a 4-room building located on Bladensburg Road, far to one side of the District. It is unfortunately located, from the standpoint of accessibility.

There are enrolled in the school at the present time 33 pupils. Additional pupils are occasionally assigned to the school. During the year several pupils have been reported as being recovered from tuberculosis, and have been transferred from the Hamilton School to the regular elementary schools.

Attention is called to the fact that many more children will undoubtedly be assigned to these institutions as soon as there is a sufficiently large staff of medical inspectors to make it possible to examine physically the children in the schools. Accordingly there is little danger of building too large an institution for either colored or white children.

MOTT SCHOOL, ELEVENTH DIVISION (COLORED).

[Fourth and Trumbull Streets.]

Enrollment: 1,010 pupils.
Eighteen classrooms.
One supply room occupied by coaching class, assembly hall occupied by fifth grade, boys' playroom occupied by fifth grade.
Two portables, each occupied by second and third grades.
One kindergarten and first grade occupy same room.
The proposed 8-room addition will make it possble to—
1. Put the second and third grade part-time classes on full time.
2. Reduce oversize classes to 40 pupils or under.
3. Abandon four undesirable rooms.
4. Eliminate two portables.

There is also much congestion in the Garnet-Patterson-Phelps group of schools, which congestion will be relieved to some extent by the increased accommodation at the Mott School.

JOHN EATON SCHOOL, FIRST DIVISION.

[Thirty-fourth Street and Lowell Place NW.]

Enrollment: 519 pupils.
Eight classrooms.
Four rooms in portables.
Two office rooms used for kindergartens.
One hall room used twice a week for sewing classes.
Two first grades using the same room.
Two second grades using the same room.
Two third grades are in session part time only.
Two fourth grades are in session part time only.
The proposed 8-room addition will make it possible to—
1. Put two part-time classes on full time.
2. Provide two classrooms for the first and second grades using the same room.
3. Abandon three undesirable rooms.
4. Eliminate four portables.

JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL (IOWA AVENUE), THIRD DIVISION.

[North of Taylor Street. This site is now owned by the District government. The site is located between two north and south car lines and is accessible to pupils in the northern suburbs.]

Four portables at West School.
Five portables at Petworth School.
Three portables at the Park View School.

The Petworth School has 23 classes to be accommodated in a 16-room building, where an 8-room addition has just been completed, and where there must remain five portables to take care of unprovided-for classes. The erection of this building would provide accommodations for the pupils in these portables.

The proposed erection of a junior high school on this site will make it possible to—
1. Provide accommodations for the seventh, eighth, and ninth year pupils for this section, thus relieving the senior high schools, particularly the Central High School, and a considerable number of first-year classes.
2. Provide relief to the Park View, Petworth, Hubbard, and West Schools in the seventh and eighth grades.
3. Provide for a rapidly growing residential section.

JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL (ECKINGTON), FIFTH DIVISION.

The proposed erection of a junior high school in this vicinity would make it possible to—
1. Provide accommodations for many of the seventh and eighth grades in the following schools of the fifth division—i. e., Eckington, Emery, Gage, Brookland, Langdon, where the aggregate enrollment is about 600 pupils, thus relieving the congestion which now exists in the schools.
2. Provide relief in the first-year classes of the Central, Business, and McKinley High Schools.
3. Provide somewhat for increased school population in this rapidly growing residential section of the city.

SMOTHERS SCHOOL (REPLACEMENT), ELEVENTH DIVISION (COLORED).

[Bennings Road near Forty-second Street NE.]

Enrollment: 124 pupils.
Four classrooms.
The proposed erection of a new building on this site will make it possible to—
1. Abandon the present very undesirable building.

This is an old frame building, heated by stoves, with no running water, poor ventilation, insanitary toilets built 186 feet from the school, no playrooms nor playgrounds, and was built about 1864–1866.

Lincoln Park site: The erection of a building on this site would cause relief to congestion now in the Maury and Edmonds Schools and provide for the constantly increasing enrollment in this section of the city.

MAURY SCHOOL, SEVENTH DIVISION.

[B Street between Twelfth and Thirteenth Streets NE.]

Enrollment: 502.
Eight classrooms.
Two first grades use the same room.
Two second grades use the same room.
Two third grades use two portable buildings.

EDMONDS SCHOOL.

[Ninth and D Streets NE.]

Enrollment: 389.
Eight classrooms.
Two first grades use the same room.
One second grade and one third grade use the same room.
The proposed 16-room addition will make it possible to—
1. Put one part-time class on full time (Edmonds).
2. Avoid present doubling up of first and second grades.
3. Organize a very much needed kindergarten in the Maury or Edmonds Schools, or both.
4. Relieve present congestion in classes at Maury, Edmonds, Hilton, Peabody, and Carbery Schools.
5. Accommodate in neighborhood school many children who are forced to go north into Webb and Pierce Schools or south into the Bryan School.
6. Provide for certain increased enrollment.
7. Eliminate two portables (Maury).

MONROE SCHOOL, THIRD DIVISION.

[Columbia Road, between Georgia and Sherman Avenues.]

Enrollment: Five hundred and forty-eight pupils.
Twelve classrooms.
The annex to the Monroe was planned as an 8-room unit, but only four rooms have been built. This request is to complete the original plans.

Some of the pupils who should be admitted to the Monroe School are now compelled to enter the Park View (Newton and Warder Streets), Hubbard (Eleventh and Kenyon Streets), or Ross (Harvard Street, between Eleventh and Thirteenth Streets NW.), on account of lack of accommodations at Monroe.

One portable, third grade (on part time).
The proposed erection of a 4-room addition will make it possible to—
1. Put three third-grade classes, now on part time, on full time.
2. Reduce the classes to 40 pupils or under.
3. Provide for increased enrollment at Monroe and relieve congestion to some extent at Park View (enrollment, 1,026), and where there are three portables, and at the Hubbard (enrollment, 452), where there are two third grades on part time.
4. Eliminate one portable now occupied by a second and third grade.

LOVEJOY SCHOOL (LAND ADJOINING SCHOOL), THIRTEENTH DIVISION.

[Twelfth and D Streets NE.]

Enrollment: 695 pupils.
Twelve classrooms.
One portable.
One basement room used for classroom purposes.
Three classes accommodated in rented quarters.
Two first grades occupy same room with kindergarten classes.
One third grade on part time only.
The proposed purchase of land adjoining this school will provide play space for children at this school at the present time.

It is the purpose of the board of education to ask for an appropriation with which to erect an addition to the Lovejoy School at an early date.

INGLESIDE SITE, THIRD DIVISION.

[Fifty thousand square feet, west of Sixteenth Street, north of Irving Street, south of Park Road, east of Adams Mill Road.]

This site is for the purpose of providing for the erection of an eight-room building, which, when erected, will make it possible to—
1. Put one third grade at the Johnson School, now on part time, on full time.
2. Provide for a kindergarten class now occupying the same room with another kindergarten class at the Powell School.
3. Relieve oversize classes in the primary grades of the Johnson School (300 pupils), Powell School (324 pupils), and Cooke School (461 pupils).
4. Eliminate three portables at the Johnson-Powell unit, thus providing accommodation for four classes.

PHILLIPS SCHOOL (LAND ADJOINING SCHOOL), TENTH DIVISION.

[Twenty-eighth and M Streets NW.]

Enrollment: 338.
Eight classroooms.

MONTGOMERY SCHOOL.

[Twenty-seventh Street between I and K Streets NW.]

Enrollment: 346.
Ten classrooms.

STEVENS SCHOOL.

[Twenty-first Street between K and L Streets NW.]

Enrollment: 838.
Twenty classrooms (six classroooms used for special work).
Two third grades occupy same room.

It is the purpose of the board of education to ask for an appropriation next October with which to erect an addition to the Phillips School on this site. This addition would afford relief to the Montgomery and Stevens Schools.

BUCHANAN SCHOOL, NINTH DIVISION.

[E Street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets SE.]

Enrollment: 540 pupils.
Eight classrooms.
Three rooms in portables.
One room in portable (Bryan).
Two kindergartens occupying same room as first grade.
Two classes using same room (Bryan).
Two classes using same room (Cranch).
Two classes using same room (Tyler).
The proposed 8-room addition will make it possible to—
1. Reduce the classes to 40 pupils or under.
2. Provide four classrooms for eight classes now using the same rooms.
3. Eliminate four portables.

There are 12 vacant rooms in the schools of this division:
Two, annex of Congress Heights School.
Four, Randall Highlands School.
Three, Stanton School.
Three, Van Buren School.

None of the pupils living in the vicinity east of the Anacostia River can be accommodated in these vacant rooms. They must be accommodated in the Buchanan, Bryan, Cranch, and Tyler Schools. There are enough pupils at the present time to properly fill an 8-room addition to the Buchanan School. This will not allow for probable increase in enrollment.

BELL SCHOOL (REPLACEMENT), THIRTEENTH DIVISION (COLORED).

[First Street, between B and C Streets SW.]

Enrollment: 441 pupils.
Eight classrooms.
One third grade occupies same room with second grade.
The proposed erection of a new building on this site will make it possible to—
1. Put one third-grade part-time class on full time.
2. Abandon present very undesirable building.
This building was erected in 1889 over a filled-in creek. The officials of the engineer department have recommended against its use.
The erection of a new building on this site will bring desirable relief to the congested schools at the south, which are Randall and Cardoza.

HARRISON SCHOOL (FOR COLORED TUBERCULAR CHILDREN).

[Thirteenth Street, between V and W Streets NW.]

Enrollment: Sixty-three pupils.
Very little has been done to this building to adapt it to the needs of these tubercular children. The item of $17,000 in the estimates now before Congress will make it possible to better adapt this school building to the special needs of tubercular children.

HAMILTON SCHOOL (FOR WHITE TUBERCULAR CHILDREN).

[Bladensburg Road and Mount Olivet Road NE.]

The Hamilton School is a 4-room building located on Bladensburg Road, far to one side of the District. It is unfortunately located from the standpoint of accessibility.
There are enrolled in the school at the present time 33 pupils. Additional pupils are occasionally assigned to the school. During the year several pupils have been reported as being recovered from tuberculosis and had been transferred from the Hamilton School to the regular elementary schools.
Attention is called to the fact that many more children will undoubtedly be assigned to these institutions as soon as there is a sufficiently large staff of medical inspectors to make it possible to examine physically the children in the schools. Accordingly there is little danger of building too large an institution for either colored or white children.

WOODLEY PARK (SITE).

The purchase of this site will provide, while land is available, for a building badly needed to take care of the pupils in this neighborhood, who are without convenient school accommodations.

ARMSTRONG MANUAL TRAINING SCHOOL (ADDITIONAL LAND).

[P Street between First and Third Streets NW.]

Enrollment: 638 pupils.
This school was erected in 1902 to accommodate 300 pupils. In addition to the main building five portable buildings are being used on the present site to take care of its present enrollment.
An addition will soon have to be built to this school. This land requested should be purchased at once in anticipation of such need.

HAYES SCHOOL (LAND NORTH OF SCHOOL), SIXTH DIVISION.

[Fifth and K Streets NE.]

Enrollment: 360 pupils.
Eight classrooms.
This building is practically without playground or land upon which an addition could be made.
The land in question is at present unimproved and available. This section is being rapidly built up and the land should be acquired at once.

EMERY SCHOOL (ADDITIONAL LAND), FIFTH DIVISION.

[Lincoln Road and North Capitol Street.]

Enrollment: 688 pupils.
Sixteen classrooms.
A small tract of vacant land south of the Emery School, if built upon, would jeopardize the light and air conditions of the present building.
It is the wish of the board of education to purchase this land at once.

PEABODY SCHOOL (ADDITIONAL LAND), SEVENTH DIVISION.

[Fifth and C Streets NE.]

Enrollment: 529 pupils.
Classrooms, 12. One small house in Shotts Place rented.
This is a large building, absolutely without playground space. The land which it is proposed to purchase has no improvements of any considerable value.
The additional land will undoubtedly be needed in the near future for the construction of an addition to the Peabody School. Until then, of course, the land will be used for playground purposes.

ADAMS SCHOOL (ADDITIONAL LAND), FIRST DIVISION.

[R Street between Seventeenth Street and New Hampshire Avenue NW.]

Enrollment: 331 pupils.
Eight classrooms.
This building is practically without play space. The land in question is now unimproved. Plans are now actually made for occupying the site by houses. At the request of the Commissioners of the District the builder ceased building operations to provide an opportunity for the purchase of this land by school authorities for playground purposes.

WEBB SCHOOL (ADDITIONAL LAND ADJOINING), SIXTH DIVISION.

[Fifteenth and Rosedale Streets NE.]

Enrollment: 356 pupils.
Eight rooms.
The boys' playroom in the Webb is now used for manual training purposes.
A sixth-grade class is sent to the Blow School for classroom work.
This is a small piece of unimproved land, which will add greatly to the light, ventilation, and playground facilities of this building, as well as provide classrooms already needed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement from Dr. Ballou and a statement of the investigation I made at the Johnson and the Powers Schools.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, there should be no confusion as to the necessity here in this deficiency appropriation bill for this item. It is well known that throughout the country, not only in respect to the matter of schools but in regard to every other branch and functioning of a public nature, there has been vast dislocation.

Now, with reference to the schools of Washington, it is well known that during the war there was a great influx of outside population, temporary, it is true, in large part, but just how much of an exodus there has been it has been impossible to ascertain up to this time. Hence, without any increase of school accommodations, there necessarily had to be a great congestion. You will find that to have been the case in nearly every city and every town and even hamlet in the United States, particularly the centers of business activities, of manufacturing establishments, where the population seemed to flow during the war time; hence it is no exception but rather was intensified in the Capital of the Nation, where we had an influx of over 100,000 people who never lived here before. Consequently the schools have been congested. Now, with respect to the gentleman who speaks of some schools having only a few scholars, or, rather, vacant seats, I desire to say that scientifically 40 scholars constitute the standard number of a school, and therefore there may have been places in the schools, 50 or 60 seats, and probably 10 or 8 or 5 are unoccupied, and yet under examination before the committee it was found that in no instance were there less than 40, and probably 45 to 50, in every school; hence those which were described here as having vacant seats were those under what is called the standard system of education of numbers under one teacher. Now, the urgency of this situation was made entirely manifest to the Committee on the District of Columbia by Prof. Ballou under a statement which was inserted in the RECORD, or will appear there, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Now, Dr. Ballou was under fire before the committee on several occasions, and I was greatly disappointed—really, I was chagrined—after what I learned as to the educational facilities of this District, recalling that in Pennsylvania we take the little foreign boy and girl by the hand, send them to our public schools with free schoolbooks and, if necessary, with a good meal in their stomachs, and again, if necessary, clothe them, and in many instances wash them. That is what we do with children in Pennsylvania, and we also have compulsory education. Here we found not only deficiency in accommodations but an absence of free schoolbooks.

They are only in the hands of a few, certainly not all. Free schoolbooks ought to be in the hands of every child. They ought to have free schoolbooks and a good teacher to teach them, and every child ought to be compelled to go to school. I was very greatly disappointed when the head of the school system in Washington asked for such a meager sum as is contained in this bill and which is wholly inadequate. It is not a question of money here, my friends, because when we get at this thing thoroughly and make a complete and exhaustive study of it you will see us asking not for a meager million and a half dollars, but it will be for $5,000,000 to take care of the education of the youth of the District.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield? I ask that the gentleman be granted an additional minute.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want some real information. On page 80, line 20, there is an appropriation of $17,000 for the Harrison school for tubercular children. Do you physically examine these children to ascertain whether they are afflicted with tuberculosis, or how do you reach the conclusion that they are tubercular children? I ask this in all good faith. I am in favor of the amendment, but I want some information along that line.

Mr. FOCHT. It would be a crime to place the child in a tubercular institution where there are other tubercular children who have not been examined and a diagnosis pronounced as to its tubercular condition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. But that is not an answer to my question.

Mr. FOCHT. Undoubtedly I say yes; that answers it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is that the way you learn whether they are tubercular?

Mr. FOCHT. Undoubtedly, by proper physical examination by a person competent to make a proper diagnosis of the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. How many tubercular children are there in the District of Columbia in schools?

Mr. FOCHT. I presume a great many more than anybody knows about. I have not examined them at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Well, I take it that the gentleman does not know very much about the situation.

Mr. FOCHT. You take it. You can have your opinion. But I refuse to be kidded any further, and I will go on with my remarks, and I decline to be interrupted by a gentleman who says I know nothing about it. The gentleman can take the floor after awhile and tell how wise he is, and I will impart what little information I have right now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am in favor of it.

Mr. FOCHT. All right. The gentleman is a fine fellow, and I thank him for the information, and I hope the House will be illuminated, enlightened, and instructed by the gentleman, but I want to say just as far as we have gone we find the service here woefully deficient, and that is the reason I am for this bill and why every other Member of the House should be for it, but I give warning that this is a very small item in comparison with what the necessities call for and what we will ask in the course of our further investigation when we come to lay before the House a complete canvass and survey of the school situation of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it was stated a few moments ago that a matter of this importance should have careful investigation in the committee, and it should not come as an amendment from the Senate for action by the House without full investigation. For the information of the House I desire to state as a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations whose duty it is to make appropriations for the public-school buildings in the District of Columbia that we have investigated this matter for the past three or four years, during which period we had insistent demands for more appropriations and for more buildings.

We have postponed from year to year a proper response to those demands upon the theory that the cost of material and construction would go down, and that we could have it done a great deal cheaper perhaps next year than this year. That is one reason why we did not bring in a greater appropriation for school buildings—at least it influenced my vote. I will state to the House, if human testimony can be relied upon, these buildings are absolutely essential for the accommodation of the children of the District of Columbia. And I state to you that since the Government has assumed the province of educating the youth of the District it is its duty to furnish ample schoolhouses and teachers so that it can discharge the sacred duty efficiently and effectively.

Mr. LOWREY. May I ask the gentleman a question? I want to know about those buildings. It says, I believe, in the appropriation bill, that there are two 8-room buildings, each $140,000. It seems to me that is an unreasonable appropriation for a building of that size. What is the reason for that cost?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not a material man nor a carpenter, but I know that is about what they cost, and what the others have been costing, and that is cheaper than it has been in the past, considerably. They have been costing $186,000.

Mr. LOWREY. And they have been planned by architects?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir; and erected on competitive bids.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to demand a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands a division of the question. The question is on receding from disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a preferential motion, that the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON moves to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows: Page 81, line 15, after the word "fund," insert: "Provided, That obligations shall not be entered into under these appropriations for 'public schools, buildings, and grounds in excess of such amount that the share of the appropriations for the District for 1922 to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia can be paid out of such revenues for the year 1922.'"

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of that amendment I want to say that as I understand the purpose of the chairman of the committee, and what is likely to be the action of the House, it will be provided that 60 per cent of the cost of these buildings and grounds shall be paid from the revenues of the District and 40 from the Federal Treasury. That applies generally to the expenditures in the District. Now, the expenditures of the District necessarily should not be in any year an amount so large that the revenues will not take care of that 60 per cent. The revenues of the District are by law limited to a 2 per cent tax rate. So that when they have spent all their 60 per cent share, all they can raise under their 2 per cent maximum tax, then they are up against it. Now, the amount here, a million and a half dollars, added to the other appropriations for District purposes for the coming year, will produce a total so large, in my opinion, that there will be a deficit of two or three hundred thousand dollars chargeable to the District. It is my understanding that it is the hope of the District that they will take that two or three hundred thousand dollars, that should be paid by the District, from the Federal Treasury on the theory that the District has a surplus, as they call it, in that Treasury. Now, that alleged surplus amounts to about $4,000,000. The question of whether or not they have that surplus there belonging to them is one that is debatable. It is denied by many Members of Congress, and before you proceed to establish the policy of turning that alleged surplus of $4,000,000 over to them we ought to have the matter up here in a proper way and thrash it out on its merits, and not have it come as a tail to a public-school kite like this.

The only effect of the amendment I have offered is to provide that the District will go on spending under their appropriation until they have used up all their revenues, and then they will stop. If I am wrong, if the amount that this school program adds is not so great as to exceed their revenues, then the amendment will have no effect whatever, but if I am right it safeguards the Treasury against any raid of two or three or four hundred thousand dollars out of an alleged surplus.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, they can not begin to use this money for a year?

Mr. CRAMTON. A good deal of it can not be used during the year, but, as I understand, when it finally is used it will be taken out of the 1922 revenue.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not believe they will use any of it for a year.

Mr. CRAMTON. But when it is used it will come out of the 1922 revenues. This is simply a precaution, and I do not think anybody will object to it.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a very wise precaution.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield? If I understand the gentleman, without dipping into this surplus at all the appropriation for the next fiscal year, together with this appropriation, will not exceed the anticipated revenues of the District by more than $200,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. That was the estimate of one of the gentlemen in the District government, and I think was the most hopeful possible. My own guess would be that it would run four or five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GOOD. That might seriously, then, just stop what you intend to do.

Mr. CRAMTON. On the other hand, through their desire to extend the school system with the appropriation given there, it is an encouragement to economize in other branches of the District government and use that money for school purposes.

Mr. GOOD. You cut pretty deep on your other branches. You take your street cleaning and sewer appropriations, and you will find that you have cut pretty substantially. While I hope there will be saving, yet I do not think the gentleman looks for any substantial saving anywhere along the line, does he?

Mr. CRAMTON. There will be a few places where they will save.

Mr. GOOD. There are certain places where they ought not to save. They ought not to neglect the sewers, so as to bring about an unhealthy condition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Probably the best estimate is the hope expressed by Col. Kutz, of $200,000 or $300,000. I think he stated the amount at $300,000, and the District's share is 60 per cent of that, so that around $200,000 was his expectation. I hope the gentleman will have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. This amendment, as I understand it, contemplates the payment of this additional sum out of the revenues for 1921?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The limit of taxation is 2 per cent. They have never gotten up to the 2 per cent yet. If they do not want to have a deficiency, let them raise the taxation to the 2 per cent, and then they will have lots of money.

Mr. GOOD. Have they any authority to levy a tax in excess of 2 per cent?

Mr. CRAMTON. They have not.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have never come anywhere near it yet.

Mr. GOOD. If I understand the gentleman from Michigan, if they levy a tax of 2 per cent, as they are authorized to do, then it is estimated that with this appropriation there will be a deficit in the District funds of about $200,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is it. If there is not——

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Minnesota shakes his head.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think that will be the case with the present scale of taxes. They have not gotten up to it yet.

Mr. CRAMTON. I took up the matter this morning with the engineer commissioner of the District, and with that maximum they run the danger of this deficit of $200,000. What I want to prevent is the setting of this precedent. If you once establish the precedent that they can get a piece of money out of the Treasury on the theory that they have a $4,000,000 surplus, you might as well say good-by to that four million.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 57.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 6.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of concurring in the amendment will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 276, nays 31, answered "present" 4, not voting 120, as follows:

Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote.

Mr. COLLIER. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts. If I were not, I would vote "yea." I vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 89: Page 81, after line 15, insert:

"FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

"For the purchase of a site for a branch of the free Public Library in the southeastern section of the District of Columbia, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and authority is hereby conferred upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept from the Carnegie Corporation of New York not less than $50,000 for purpose of erecting a suitable branch library building on such a site, subject to the approval of said commissioners and the board of library trustees. Authority is hereby conferred upon a commission to consist of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, the president of the board of library trustees, and the chairman of the committee on branch libraries of the library trustees to supervise the erection of said branch library building, $10,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 15 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the comma and "$10,000."

Mr. GOOD. This item appears twice in the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 92: Page 83, after line 13, insert:

"INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD.

"The duties and powers conferred upon the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board by chapter 15 of the Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918, with respect to the expenditure of the appropriations made therein are extended and made applicable to the appropriations for similar purposes made in this act.

"For expenses of the board, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, books of reference and periodicals, printing and binding, traveling, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1922, $25,000.

"For assisting the States in protecting the military and naval forces of the United States against venereal diseases, fiscal year 1922, $200,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in assisting reformatories, detention homes, hospitals, or other similar institutions in the maintenance of venereally infected persons.

"For allotment to the various States for the prevention, treatment, and control of venereal diseases, fiscal year 1922, $200,000: Provided, That the sum of $5,000 shall be first allotted from this appropriation to each State that satisfies the conditions and regulations governing this appropriation, and the remainder of this appropriation shall then be allotted to each State in the proportion which its population bears to the population of the continental United States, exclusive of Alaska and the Canal Zone, in conformity with the conditions and regulations governing such allotments.

"In all, Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, $425,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD.

"The duties and powers conferred upon the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board by chapter 15 of the Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918, with respect to the expenditure of the appropriations made therein are extended and made applicable to the appropriations for similar purposes made in this act.

"For expenses of the board, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, books of reference and periodicals, printing and binding, traveling, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1922, $25,000.

"For assisting the States in protecting the military and naval forces of the United States against venereal diseases, fiscal year 1922, $200,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in assisting reformatories, detention homes, hospitals, or other similar institutions in the maintenance of venereally infected persons.

"In all, Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, $225,000."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the motion.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think it is subject to a point of order, I carry exactly the same language that is carried in the Senate amendment, but strike out a portion of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not sure that it is subject to a point of order. I have reserved it as a matter of precaution, in order to ask the gentleman a question. There is a provision that says something about extending the powers of this board to certain appropriations carried in this act.

Mr. GOOD. That is the exact language carried in the Senate amendment. I do not change that by the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." The only change in the Senate amendment is the striking out of the lines from 7 to 16, inclusive, and then substituting $225,000 for $425,000, in line 18. The rest of the amendment is just the same.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly clear in my own mind what is the duty of Congress with regard to the enlisted forces of the United States in giving them some protection in place of that which they now have, so far as prevention of venereal diseases is concerned. This year there is appropriated for this purpose $1,015,000, to protect from these dread diseases the young men who are enlisted in the military services of the United States. This amount is spent in connection with the local authorities where there are camps and large numbers of young men in the military service, and it is the plan so far as possible to segregate these young men from the prostitutes who are in the habit of visiting these places. The laws in most of the States are rather lax, and the execution of these laws has been still more lax. Under the Chamberlain-Kahn Act provision was made for some Federal protection for these men. Now, as I have stated, they have this year over $1,000,000 for this purpose. I think it was the intention of the framers of that act that as we got away from the war we should gradually have the local authorities take charge of this service entirely. Next year I do not believe we should be called upon for any appropriation for this service, and the amendment which I have offered cuts the amount down to $250,000, and the thought has been that with this appropriation the State and local authorities hereafter will be compelled to take care of this regulation themselves. The only question is whether or not Congress ought at once to stop enforcing the laws and regulations, and stop assisting the military authorities and the local authorities to bring about better health conditions in this regard. I am frank to say that I am guided very largely by the very best medical authorities in the United States, men like the professors from Johns Hopkins who have this matter in charge, who say that this is absolutely essential, and that they think by conducting this work for another year the local authorities will be able to cope with the situation. They do not think they are able to cope with it unassisted now. Personally I would prefer not to make the motion for this amount, but I have been persuaded by these medical authorities who have come to me that it is for the best interests of the young men who are taken from their homes and who are away from parental control and authority that they have whatever protection we can throw about them in this regard.

Therefore, following the unanimous request of the medical authorities I have reported this amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Within the past two or three weeks I was talking with one of the members of the board and he expressed his personal opinion that the board ought to be abolished and this work turned back to the military and naval authorities in connection with the local authority.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman says one member of the board?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Which member of the board?

Mr. PADGETT. I will not give his name.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman ought to give his name, because the board sent up a united request, and nobody ought to be on the board who will do that sort of thing—ask the Appropriations Committee to report out an appropriation which he does not believe in.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa says "united request" from the board. I would like to know when the request was made.

Mr. GOOD. They have made the request for the appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When was it made? Not when we were conducting the hearings on the deficiency bill. This is the first information that I have had that the board ever made any request on this bill.

Mr. GOOD. My understanding is that there was a formal estimate, but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. PADGETT. This gentleman expressed the opinion that this legislation authorizing the board being a strictly war measure, and peace now prevailing, it had served its purpose and that the work was largely a duplication of other work.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that some members of the board have spoken to me about it, but I do not remember which ones. If the board does not want it, I do not want to ask for it. I will now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen of the House are familiar with the legislation and the reasons which brought about its enactment. During the war when we were mobilizing something like 4,000,000 boys in the land, placing them in various camps and cantonments over the country where they were exposed to all sorts of temptations, Congress very properly thought an appropriation should be made to afford them protection. So, without a dissenting voice, so far as I know, we passed an act creating the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board. That act was intended to be limited, as I think, in the opinion of practically every Member who voted for it, to the period of the war and gave authority for appropriations to be made to assist the States in controlling venereal diseases for the protection of our soldiers in the Army and also the Marine Corps and the Navy. In addition to that it gave authority for appropriations to be made to the States for assisting in the general work of controlling venereal diseases, also for appropriations to be made in order to assist colleges and universities to carry on that sort of work.

A year and a half ago the proposition came before the House, and on a point of order which was made at that time it was held that the law, so far as appropriations made in behalf of States, colleges, and universities, had expired by limitation. Therefore we have no law, in my judgment, to-day which will authorize the appropriation to assist a State in this general work or to render assistance to colleges and universities in doing this sort of work.

The gentleman from Iowa has proposed an amendment which carries $25,000 on its face for the office in Washington, and $200,000 to be expended in assisting the States in controlling venereal diseases for the protection of soldiers and seamen in the Navy. As far as I am concerned, if I had to take one amendment or the other, I would infinitely prefer the Senate amendment, although it is not authorized by law. Why? Because, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], my colleague, pointed out a while ago, this is a duplication of work, a duplication of service, and if you are going to appropriate money out of the Treasury, appropriate it for all the States.

Everyone knows that the Army appropriation bill carries a considerable sum—I do not recall how much—for this very work to be performed among the soldiers. The naval appropriation bill carried several hundred thousand dollars for the same purpose with reference to the seamen in the Navy and the Marine Corps.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to ask if it is not a fact that a great deal of credit is claimed by this organization for the care of soldiers and seamen and marines during the war period when it is not due to the organization at all, but due to the officers of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps who enforced discipline in the various branches of the Military Establishment for the protection of these young men?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am satisfied that a great deal of the credit is due to the officers of the Army and the Marine Corps and in the Navy for enforcing discipline, as the gentleman from Illinois says.

Mr. LAYTON. If the department of the Federal Government looks after such things, why should we not have a dental bureau to look after the teeth?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If this is going to be the policy, then there will be some reason for that.

Mr. LAYTON. In other words, we will go on and not stop.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. Now, in addition to the fact that you have now a very large appropriation for the Army for this very work, and a large appropriation in the naval bill for the naval and marine forces——

Mr. GOOD. Not to do this work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For the treatment of soldiers and sailors and which may be applied to this work. This is a disease. I think clearly under the appropriation surgeons have the right to use it for this purpose, and it is so used, as I am informed. In addition, you have a division of the Public Health Service devoted solely to the study and prevention of venereal diseases which carries an appropriation of $200,000. So I repeat that this is a duplication of the service. You are here seeking to duplicate work and service which will be performed under other departments of the Government. I repeat that I would infinitely prefer to accept the Senate amendment than to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa referred to the appropriation of last year, and said it carried a million and fifteen thousand dollars for the Interdepartmental Hygiene Board. That is true; but how was it divided? We only appropriated $150,000 for this specific purpose.

At that time we had a much larger Army than we are going to have next year; we had a much larger Navy than we are going to have next year, because we all know that the Army is going to be materially cut down and the Navy materially reduced. Yet last year in the face of the fact that we had an Army much larger and a Navy much larger than we will have next year, we carried only $150,000 for this specific purpose, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa proposes $200,000 for the same purpose. There has not been, so far as I know as a member of the subcommittee having charge of the deficiency appropriation bill, a single request made by this interdepartmental board for an appropriation in this bill for this purpose, in so far as the House committee is concerned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes more?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Therefore it was not considered by the Appropriation Committee of the House and did not come before the House. Here are the Senate hearings upon this bill. There was not a single person who appeared before the Senate committee advocating this. There was not a single line of testimony taken upon this particular amendment. There is not, so far as the record shows, a single request submitted by the interdepartmental board that an appropriation be made for this purpose. When this bill was under consideration in the Senate, you will find that not one single Senator had one single word to say either for or against the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. But the Senate never discusses any amendment. That is true of all amendments.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true. That may be a reason which satisfies my good friend from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. That is no argument against it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For my part before I vote out of the Treasury $225,000, I want at least to have a request made for it by those who are to have charge of the funds, and I want some testimony before the committee showing how it is going to be used.

Mr. GOOD. There is a request.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When did it come?

Mr. GOOD. It is Senate Document No. 28.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It never was submitted to the House committee.

Mr. GOOD. It came after the House bill was passed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, it was submitted after the House bill was prepared and presented to the House. I want to say this. I am in favor of this kind of work by the States, but if Congress is going to do it, let us do it in a regular and orderly way, let us have some legislation passed by Congress so that it can carefully consider and determine just how the money is to be expended and what kind of salaries are to be paid. Do not let us legislate $225,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for work that is going to be duplicated in other services, when we have no information as to what salaries are going to be paid and how it is going to be actually expended.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Did I understand the gentleman, who I take it is a real Democrat, who comes at least from a good Democratic section of the country, to be in favor of this stuff?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I am opposed to it.

Mr. LAYTON. Bureaucracy and paternalism, taking charge of the Government, of everything under God's heaven that ought to be left to the people of the States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am opposed to it, but I did say that I would infinitely prefer to accept the Senate amendment than to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], because I believe the Senate amendment would carry an appropriation which would not serve to duplicate work now being performed by other departments.

Mr. LAYTON. The trouble with me is that I do not know where to find a resting place. The gentleman's side of the House is as bad as this side. We are all of us sliding as fast as a railroad express train right into socialism, sovietism, and everything else. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the time has come when Congress must ride in the other direction, or the people are going to demand the reason why.

Mr. LAYTON. I think the gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will support the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. I consider it most meritorious legislation. During my time in the legislature of my own State, some 10 years ago, we passed the first legislation and made the first appropriation for work of this character, and the records of the War Department will bear me out when I tell you that among the young men from my State who were admitted to the Army and Navy during the recent war there was a smaller percentage of venereal disease than among the men of other States. Oregon stood at the top of the list. I believe this is good legislation, not only from the standpoint of the States but of the Nation, for the protection of the young manhood of the country, and I am going to support it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me three or four minutes?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a most excellent point for the House to begin to demonstrate its real belief in some of these economy talks that we have had and also some of the decentralization policies that we hear advocated here so often and yet so seldom see put into effect. There is no excuse for continuing this appropriation under present conditions. There was an excuse when we were raising an Army of 4,000,000 men, called speedily into the service from hillside and valley, with every class and character of our people rushed suddenly into camps, without the States themselves having any opportunity to do the necessary things to throw safeguards around the camps—called into the Army under the draft. There was not only an excuse, but there was a justification in those extraordinary times for the Federal Government to make its appropriation for this purpose; but now we have nothing but the Regular Army. The volunteer armies and the draft armies have all been disbanded, and we are back to the same conditions that prevailed for more than 100 years, when we got along without encroaching upon, not the rights but the duties of the States. I think sometimes that we rather create a bad sentiment about these things by emphasizing State rights themselves and not talking about State duties. This is a police proposition. This thing ought to be done under the police powers of the States. We have got to go back to those principles sometimes. Surely some time we will have to try to put a stop to the Federal Government undertaking to do everything that the States ought to do. It seems to me that this is a good time to begin, and I hope the House will vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, so that it will finally go entirely out of this bill when it is passed. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, probably there is no disease in this country that is as insidious as the disease that is taken care of by this amendment. At the time we went into the war, which was referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the boys came from the homes and the firesides of this country. The States at that time had full authority to take care of these matters, but they had done absolutely nothing. Of the young men who came to the colors of their country on the first call, as I remember, over 25 per cent of them had venereal diseases, simply an awful condition to contemplate. As the war went on there was a material reduction in that respect. The men were taught how to take care of themselves, to go to the doctors immediately in case of difficulty. In my opinion this provision in the bill is so important so far as public health is concerned that there ought to be really no opposition to the provision. We take care of many diseases, and even provide that men shall be isolated if they fall victims to those diseases. To my mind there is nothing more important than to take care of these private diseases because they affect the childhood of the Nation in the years to come. They apply to the womanhood of the Nation, and the greatest amount of care that can be given the matter is none too much in looking after the welfare of our people in this regard.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. The question is not looking after the welfare, but it is a continuation of this war instrumentality.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that.

Mr. PADGETT. The Army has a Medical Corps to look after and treat especially all of these matters for the soldiers. The Navy has it also——

Mr. KAHN. I understand all that.

Mr. PADGETT. And this complex thing comes here and tries to cover over and do the same work that is provided for with ample appropriations in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps.

Mr. KAHN. I do not agree with the gentleman at all. This is not to do the same work by any means.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. The whole question is this: Shall we nationalize the public health?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, I do not think that is involved in the matter.

Mr. LAYTON. It is an insidious influence that is creeping up——

Mr. KAHN. I decline to yield for a speech. I do not think that that has anything to do with it at all. We spend a great amount of money, and this Congress gladly votes a large amount of money to pay for diseases affecting animals and to pay for the eradication of insects that destroy cotton and other plants. And yet Members on this floor protest against appropriations for conserving men. I for one am for the men first. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I only want to correct some false impressions existing in regard to this provision. I have no more interest in it than any other Member of the House. I do want to call attention to the fact that there is absolutely no conflict or duplication in the service performed by the Army and Navy. The statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee that one member of the board told him that they did not need the service is a serious reflection upon some member of the board. The members of the board are composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, and his name appears as voicing the sentiment of the board. The statement asking for $425,000 is signed by M. W. Ireland, Surgeon General of the Army, and he signs on behalf of the Secretary of War. The statement asking for $425,000 is signed by E. R. Stitt, Surgeon General of the Navy, and he signed, of course, on behalf of the Secretary of the Navy, and if there is one of those Secretaries who has not enough backbone to come and say to the Congress what he means I would like to know what his name is.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And tell the House just when that request was signed first?

Mr. GOOD. It is dated the 27th of May.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am speaking of the first request signed by the Surgeon General of the Navy to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. GOOD. That is dated March 29, 1921.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And how long was it held even before it was transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury to be transmitted to the Congress?

Mr. GOOD. It could not have been transmitted to the Congress until after the Congress convened.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman the question, How long before it was transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury after it was signed?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will tell the gentleman; I have a copy. It was signed——

Mr. GOOD. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman should yield; the House wants the information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. I have already told the gentleman it is dated March 29, 1921, and it was transmitted to Congress on the 27th day of May, 1921. It was signed from room 1030, Eighteenth Street and Virginia Avenue NW., by M. W. Ireland, Surgeon General of the Army, on April 20, 1921——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. April 30.

Mr. GOOD. And I do not see any other date——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But is it not a fact it was signed March 29, and held a month before it was sent to the Secretary of the Treasury and held a month before it was sent to the House?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know anything about it, except as shown. I do not know who held it.

Now, then, I want to say to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken in regard to there being an overlapping of activities. We expressly provide in the language of the bill that no part of this sum shall be expended in existing reformatories, dormitories, detention homes, hospitals, or other institutions. This is a preventive measure, as stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. The Nation was shocked when it learned that 25 per cent of the young men in the first draft of the Army and Navy were suffering from venereal diseases.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. KAHN. As I now recall, it was 27 per cent.

Mr. GOOD. It was a condition that shocked the moral sentiment of America. While the Army and Navy appropriations always carried money to take care of these men that were sick, it was found that it was necessary to do work which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] well says is State work.

I agree that we are encroaching somewhat upon the duties of States and I trust this will be the last of it. But because we found this terrible condition in the young men of the country, and we were taking them from their homes and throwing them into large centers of population, Congress, it seems to me, wisely said, "We will start some preventive measures, and when lewd women visit these camps where local police are not adequate to take care of the situation we will assist in giving some protection to the young men." That is all this measure is. It is not for hospitalization. It is a humane thing for a boy who is serving his country in the Army or the Navy of the United States. It did take from the amount that was allotted to the States, but I have stricken that out. And I struck it out because I found in my own State that out of that allotment to States the Public Health Service was paying the doctor, the public health official, more than was being paid to the governor of the State of Iowa.

Now, we provided here only $200,000 to do this work. The great medical authorities of America are back of this movement. The women, through their club organizations, have written hundreds of letters, urging, for the sake of the boys that are away from home, that this protection for this year be carried on, so that the States can properly take care of this situation. I have no desire to have this amendment carried except I believe you must ease down on a proposition of this kind gradually, or else we may lose all we have accomplished by large appropriations during the last three years.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House proceeded to divide, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the ayes were 113.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present. The House is dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those opposed will still remain standing. [After counting.] On this vote the ayes are 113 and the noes are 58.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. As the Chair recalls, every Member, almost to a man, voted, and as the vote disclosed that there is no quorum present, there will be an automatic call.

Mr. GOOD. I beg to differ with the Chair. Quite a number of Members did not rise at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to count.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the Chair taking cognizance of those who are leaving the Chamber?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has authority to note those who are present and not voting and have their presence noted by the Clerk, but he has no authority whatsoever to prevent them from withdrawing from the Chamber at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. I would like to inquire if the Speaker does not count those on the other side of the House who left the Chamber?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is all out of order pending the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has a right to make a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair has recognized him for that purpose.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the point of order having been made that there is no quorum present, nothing can be entertained until the presence or absence of a quorum has been ascertained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it has been the uniform practice of the House for the last 14 years, in the knowledge of the Chair, that during the consideration of the point of no quorum a parliamentary inquiry may be entertained.

Mr. DOWELL. My inquiry is if it is not the duty of the Speaker to count those on the Democratic side who left the floor after the point of order was made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has the right to include in the count of a quorum those Members who were present at the time when the question was raised and who since have left the Chamber. The Chair will again count to see whether or not there is a quorum present.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the fact that three senile Democrats who were dragged in here to vote in favor of the amendment withdrew to the couches in the cloakroom does not constitute a proper predicate for a parliamentary inquiry. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a point of order, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-eight Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 81, answered "present" 3, not voting 160, as follows:

Mr. REED of New York with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. COLLIER. I have a pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I voted "no." I wish to withdraw that vote and be recorded as "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 94: Page 85, after line 19, insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

"Passport bureaus: For salaries and expenses of maintenance of passport bureaus, fiscal year 1922, as follows:

"At New York, N. Y., $20,820;

"At San Francisco, Calif., $7,500;

"At Chicago, Ill., $17,500;

"At Seattle, Wash., $4,500;

"At New Orleans, La., $7,500;

"In all, $57,820."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 94.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 94 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York, which is a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAGEE moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 94 and agree to the same.

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, we already have passport bureaus in the city of New York and in the city of San Francisco. The amendment of the Senate, if adopted, will provide for additional bureaus in Chicago, Seattle, and New Orleans. The passport bureau in New York was established about January 1, 1916, and the one in San Francisco some time in the year 1918. These bureaus are self-sustaining and even more than that. Last year the net revenue to the Government from the passport bureau in New York City was $24,000 and in the city of San Francisco $579. These bureaus have been established for the accommodation of the people. Under the direction of the Secretary of State a passport can be issued at one of these bureaus, or a passport amended. When you come to consider the distance from San Francisco to Washington, and the great convenience to the people of having a passport issued there upon direction of the Secretary of State if the applicant shall be found to be entitled to a passport, you can realize the importance to San Francisco of having a passport bureau. I can hardly see what objection anyone can have to the establishment of passport bureaus in large cities in this country for the benefit and accommodation of the people, especially when it does not cost the Government a cent but is a source of revenue to the Government. I am against waste and extravagance, but I am also strongly in favor of thrift, and when the Government can not only accommodate the people but also obtain revenue at the same time, why should we not adopt a system and practice of that kind?

The Secretary of State recently sent a letter to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY]. At my request the gentleman from Arkansas has consented that I may read into the RECORD this communication from the Secretary of State bearing upon this question. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 4, 1921.

The Hon. H. M. JACOWAY,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In response to your secretary's recent oral request for information relative to the desirability of securing appropriations for the continuance of the passport bureaus at New York and San Francisco, with the possible establishment of additional bureaus at other important centers, I am now pleased to inform you that estimates for this purpose have been forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the Congress.

In order that you may properly judge of the relative cost of maintenance as compared with the revenue of those bureaus, your attention is directed to the following tabulation, which shows the estimated number of applications to be taken and the cost of maintenance of each bureau. Perhaps the most striking feature in this connection, as you will observe, is the fact that the fees derived from the taking of passport applications at all of the bureaus would amount to as much as or more than their cost of maintenance. In other words, they may be considered as self-sustaining.

Location of bureau.	Number of applications (at $1 each).	Cost.
New York	41,094	$20,820
San Francisco	5,109	7,500
Chicago	5,600	17,500
Seattle	1,200	4,500
New Orleans	5,000	7,500

The figures given for the number of applications executed at New York and San Francisco are based upon receipts from those offices during the past year. The figures given for Chicago are believed to be accurate within one or two hundred. The figures for Seattle and New Orleans are estimates. When the New York office was established it handled only about 50 to 75 cases a day. The office now normally executes 150 applications per day. At the present time the number is running over 200 daily. In the year following the establishment of the agency at San Francisco the number of applications increased about 100 per cent. There is therefore no reason to doubt that the receipts from the cities in which agencies are proposed will materially increase above the present average receipts from those cities.

If the bureaus now established in New York and San Francisco are abolished, the major portion of the fees received through those offices will be lost to the Government, the reason for this being that the taking of applications for passports would devolve to a considerable degree upon clerks of State courts, who retain the fees for executing applications for passports.

It may be remarked that no provision has been made for a bureau at Key West, Fla., as the Cuban legation has informed this department that no passports are now required for Americans entering Cuba from the United States.

You are aware of the great convenience to the public afforded by these agencies where timely information regarding the requirements of foreign governments is given out by specialized officials and where it is possible to assemble all essential documents relating to the proof of nationality and the right of the applicant to possess an American passport. Confusion and the loss of time are the inevitable result of intrusting such work to the clerks of courts, who are not specialized on the subject and from whom applications arrive at the department in incomplete form.

Since the traveling public is subject to many delays, annoyances, and expenses incidental to the existing passport requirements, I feel that it is desirable to afford such facilities at home as will ameliorate rather than multiply the hardships in this regard. As this can be done at nominal expense, if not indeed without expense to the Government, I deem it very desirable that provision should be made therefor.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAGEE. Just one minute more.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. MAGEE. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I trust the House will agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he leaves the floor?

Mr. MAGEE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Am I correct in assuming that unless this Senate amendment is agreed to, at least in part, the existing passport bureaus at New York and San Francisco will be abolished after July 1?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I speak especially on behalf of one of the Pacific coast cities. Out our way we are trying mighty hard to build up a commerce between the United States and the Orient. We have a line of Shipping Board vessels leaving the city of Seattle for the Orient. The function of this Senate amendment is to permit passports to be granted in these cities. If there is anything that will tend to build up commerce and encourage our people to travel, it is this facility in aid of travel. I want to call the attention of Members to the fact that it will cost the Government nothing to give our people these facilities and enable us to stimulate travel between our country and the Orient.

Mr. SMITH. If this passport office is not established at Seattle or San Francisco, anyone wanting to go to the Orient would have to make arrangements for a passport at least two weeks in advance of his sailing, whereas if they are established, he could secure his passport at either place in a few hours.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir; that is the situation.

Mr. MADDEN. He would not save anything anyway because the passports are issued in Washington.

Mr. SMITH. They are sent to the agents of the department in blank, and all these officials have to do is to secure authority from Washington, by wire if necessary, and issue the passport.

Mr. MILLER. They are filled out right in these passport offices.

Mr. MADDEN. The practice is for the application to be made at the point of residence by an individual to the office now existing or through the clerk of a Federal court, and when they are satisfied that all the requirements are completed, the passports are sent here to Washington.

Mr. SMITH. That is true ordinarily, but the passport offices have passports signed in blank, and all the officer has to do is to issue them, after authority is granted from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. And under the statement of the gentleman from Illinois the fees would go to the clerk of the United States court instead of to the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. The letter that was read in response to the inquiry of the Secretary to Mr. JACOWAY shows that the revenue would go to the clerk of the State court and the State court clerk has nothing to do with it.

Mr. GOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when this matter was up before I submitted a letter from the Secretary of State relating to this matter, and a point of order was made that the amendment now under consideration could not then be considered. Since that time the Senate has placed it on the bill, and it is before us now for determination. This is necessary, and it is no expense to the Government. It is a great convenience to the traveling public, the commercial men. The traveling public and commercial men ought to be considered. I trust that the House will see its way clear to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur in the Senate amendment, so that these people, wherever located—in New Orleans, Chicago, Seattle, New York, or San Francisco—may have an opportunity at the earliest date possible to receive their passports so that they may go to the foreign countries to do business or on pleasure, as they may see fit. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, the passport office at San Francisco within the last three years has taken care of 10,000 applications for passports. The passport office is located at the Federal building. Only a few clerks are required to take care of this work, and it has been a great convenience to the traveling public, not alone to the business men who may want to get passports for passage to the Orient and Central and South America but for travelers for pleasure to these countries. This is a matter of great importance to the people of the Pacific coast, who are 3,000 miles away from Washington. With all due regard to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I will say that the passports are granted by the office at San Francisco upon telegraphic orders from Washington and they have full power to visé the passports. In addition, it saves a lot of correspondence between the people on the Pacific coast and Washington. The clerical end of the passport work is taken care of by men in charge there. Everyone who wants to leave the country for foreign lands is not acquainted with the passport regulations, but they can go to the passport office in the customhouse at San Francisco and find out what they have to do. This is an economical proposition. It not only brings revenue into the Treasury but is a great convenience, and we ought at least to give some consideration to the matter of service. There is not a department of the Government but what was created for service to the public, whether it is the Post Office Department, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, or any other executive department. They are created for service. When you establish the passport office at San Francisco or Seattle or New York, it will render a great service to the business interests of the country and to the people who are going to travel abroad, and I hope the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE] will be accepted by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, there probably is not a Member of the House who does not from time to time get telegrams from his traveling constituencies requesting immediate action on passports. I had one sent this morning. It was impossible for Chicago to issue the passport, and so the passport had to be issued in Washington. It has to be sent to the customhouse in New York because of the inability of Chicago to issue a passport. The motion of the gentleman from New York is consistent with economy in the service, is consistent with efficiency in the service, and ought to be adopted by the House. The traveling public is entitled to it and the State Department desires it. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the time of the House, for it seems to me that this is a simple proposition to have these passport offices established for the convenience of the public. If we want something to serve the public, let us adopt this amendment, and I hope the House will adopt it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can better sustain the motion of the gentleman from New York than to read portions of a letter from the Secretary of State to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE]. It is very much along the lines of the letter of my colleague [Mr. O'CONNOR], who when the deficiency bill was up before the House offered a similar amendment which was ruled out on a point of order, because of the perennial desire of gentlemen to make points of order that a thing is not authorized. Here is what the Secretary says:

If the bureaus now established in New York and San Francisco are abolished, the major portion of the fees received through those offices will be lost to the Government, the reason for this being that the taking of applications for passports would devolve to a considerable degree upon clerks of State courts, who retain the fees for executing applications for passports.

It may be remarked that no provision has been made for a bureau at Key West, Fla., as the Cuban Legation has informed this department that no passports are now required for Americans entering Cuba from the United States.

You are aware of the great convenience to the public afforded by these agencies where timely information regarding the requirements of foreign Governments is given out by specialized officials, and where it is possible to assemble all essential documents relating to the proof of nationality and the right of the applicant to possess an American passport. Confusion and the loss of time are the inevitable results of intrusting such work to the clerks of courts, who are not specialized on the subject and from whom applications arrive at the department in incomplete form.

Since the traveling public is subject to many delays, annoyances, and expenses incidental to the existing passport requirements, I feel that it is desirable to afford such facilities at home as will ameliorate rather than multiply the hardships in this regard. As this can be done at nominal expense, if not, indeed, without expense to the Government, I deem it very desirable that provision should be made therefor.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant, CHARLES E. HUGHES.

That ought to be conclusive to those who want to aid the traveling and commercial public in getting relief from the vexatious delays in getting passports, frequently required, on very short notice.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, while I have made the motion that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, I realize that there is a very earnest demand upon the part of Members that this service be continued. It is asked for by the State Department, and it is estimated it will not cost the Government anything, because it is paid by those who make application. I have no desire to oppose the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield some time to me?

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman from Texas opposed to the motion of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa converted me on the proposition, and I am still with him if all of the balance of the House is against him. I think that issuing passports is a safeguard that we should retain in the Secretary of State's office here in Washington. It should have the final say as to whether or not a passport should be issued. If we had had the proper safeguards thrown about the issuing of passports, we would not have had the infamous international draft dodger, Bergdoll, getting out of this country into Germany.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I have not the time. I want to say that we can not throw too many safeguards around the issuance of passports. It is said as an excuse for this measure that the Federal clerks in our States will get these fees. I would just as soon have the Federal clerk in my district continue to get his $1 fee for each application for a passport which he receives as this other officer that we are to create, who is to receive a salary that will take up all of the fee. What is the difference? You may as well pay it as a fee to the Federal clerk in our own State as to pay it as a salary to somebody else in some other State. I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that we refuse to concur in the Senate amendment, and I am standing here with him if all others desert him.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 163, noes 9.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and two Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 260, nays 13, answered "present" 1, not voting 157, as follows:

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

Mr. FAUST with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. TILSON with Mr. UPSHAW.

Mr. SNELL with Mr. STEDMAN.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. LARSEN of Georgia.

Mr. PORTER with Mr. MANSFIELD.

Mr. APPLEBY with Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri with Mr. HAWES.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the next Senate amendment. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute, and the Senate amendment is quite long.

Mr. BLANTON. On what point?

Mr. GOOD. It is in reference to a lot of Treasury items.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

"Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, fiscal year 1922, $10,000.

"Division of Printing and Stationery: Clerks—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; multigraph operators—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; skilled laborer, $840; 4 laborers, at $720 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; in all, fiscal year 1922, $11,380.

"Division of Mail and Files: Distributing clerk, $1,400; reading and routing clerk, $1,400; assistant file clerk, $1,100; assistant mail messenger, $900; in all, fiscal year 1922, $4,800."

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman knows that the Sweet bill provides for an office paying $10,000 to an Assistant Secretary——

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment until we get the point of order settled.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law; that it establishes new positions that are not authorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the same language exactly is carried in the Senate amendment, and it is not subject to the point of order. It is true it is a new position, but it is germane.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa states that this is exactly the same language as the Senate amendment, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is this a new office in addition to that carried in the Sweet bill?

Mr. GOOD. It has no reference to the Sweet bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. This is a new office carrying a $10,000-a-year salary?

Mr. GOOD. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, I am going to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, and I will take five minutes myself, as I am trying to close the bill to-night, and we will try to explain the provision.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just wanted to ask this question: Is this the same undersecretary that is provided for in what is known as the McFadden bill, which proposes to abolish the Comptroller of the Treasury and make a new undersecretary in his place?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield some time to those who do know; the gentleman says he does not know.

Mr. GOOD. I have yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa early in the proceedings of to-day made some remarks to the effect that possibly I had changed my mind in regard to some positions in this bill. I wish to say to him and to the House that I have not changed my mind in reference to these various positions. I have never said some of them were not necessary for the year 1922. My criticism when this bill was before the House before, in so far as some positions were concerned, went to the effect that in the last legislative bill they were not taken care of, and that claims were then made that great economies were being effected, and there were being made great reductions of force, when as a matter of fact in this bill they are sought to be restored for the year 1922. But in so far as this particular position is concerned, I think I am entirely consistent when I enter my very earnest protest to the passage of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. Now, this amendment undertakes to create a new position, an entirely new position, to be known as the Undersecretary of the Treasury, who is to be paid a salary of $10,000 per annum. Now, if gentlemen upon the other side, by whom the people have been promised economy, want to start at this time on the practice of creating an office which pays $10,000 a year in a deficiency bill, why of course that is their privilege. But it is not in keeping with your promises to the people.

Before you do that I want to call your attention to the fact that when you create this position of an Undersecretary of the Treasury at $10,000 a year you will very soon, possibly to-morrow or next day, as soon as the pending Sweet bill comes to a vote, create another Assistant Secretary of the Treasury at $10,000 a year. During and for the war Congress created two additional Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. There were already three permanent Assistant Secretaries. Congress created the two additional Secretaries at a salary of not $10,000 but $5,000. Those positions expired by limitation, and the legislative bill which passed in February expressly failed to make appropriations providing for those places. But here we are about to create a new position, not at $5,000 but at $10,000 a year, and in no sense needed.

Mr. WINGO. And I will state to the gentleman that there is a bill pending before the Banking and Currency Committee to create another Secretary of the Treasury at $10,000 a year, and put him on the Federal Reserve Board and give him $2,000 extra for that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That adds to the story of the failure of the Republican majority to practice the economy it so eloquently preached in the campaign before the last election.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Tennessee know any reason why we should not increase the salaries of assistant secretaries in the other departments to $10,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no reason on earth for it if this amendment is adopted. And I wish to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that if this Congress is consistent, when it comes to preparing the next appropriation bill it will increase the salaries of other secretaries in the various departments. You can be very certain that this will be taken for a precedent, and you will be met by the demand that other secretaries be increased from $5,000 to $10,000 a year.

Now, gentlemen, there was a hearing on this proposition before the committee. The Secretary of the Treasury, for whom I have great admiration and respect, appeared and strenuously presented his claims for the need of an undersecretary of the Treasury. I must confess I never understood just why they wanted to call him "undersecretary." Some question was raised. The only suggestion I heard in reply was that Great Britain has an undersecretary of finance, or some position of that sort. But what I oppose is not so much the name but the salary you are undertaking to fix for this new position, a salary of $10,000—over and beyond any sum Congress has ever appropriated for any position of this particular kind. You only pay your Undersecretary of State, if I remember correctly, $7,500 a year. Why pay the Undersecretary of the Treasury $10,000 a year? The Secretary of the Treasury now has an Assistant Secretary at $5,000 and three Assistant Secretaries at $5,000 each. You here propose an undersecretary at $10,000, and you will soon give him another assistant at $10,000.

Mr. LUCE. I think the gentleman's sense of fairness will lead him to state that by the creation of this office we will abolish the office of Comptroller of the Currency, so that there will be no addition to the burden on the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have heard it intimated that there was such legislation contemplated. Personally I am not now inclined to favor it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has not read the bill, evidently. It proposes not only to abolish the comptroller but to create an additional number. In other words, to create three offices and abolish one.

Mr. LUCE. I am quite confident that the fairness of the gentleman from Arkansas will permit me to express the prediction that no such conflict of authority will take place, and that the ultimate result of this legislation will be simply to replace the Comptroller of the Currency by this undersecretary without having any additional expense.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote down this amendment in the interest of economy.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, it was first argued that we should decline to agree to this amendment because the Sweet bill creates an office of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. It must be remembered that the Sweet bill abolishes the office of Director of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and simply transfers the duties to a new officer. Now, it is argued that because a bill is now pending in some committee by which it is intended to create an office under the Secretary of the Treasury we should decline now to pass this amendment, when the present Secretary of the Treasury is overburdened with activities, and when under the law the office of two of the Assistant Secretaries will cease to exist after the 1st of July. The Secretary of the Treasury says he is overburdened with duties; that he is obliged to come to Congress now in support of the revenue bill; that he is obliged to do a great deal of work in connection with the tariff bill. Never before in the country's history were there so many duties thrown upon the Secretary of the Treasury, and all that Congress wants to do is to give him the force, to give him the assistance in the executive department so that he can do his work.

They say that $10,000 a year is too much, and yet when the other side brought before Congress a bill a few years ago authorizing the loaning of money to farmers you created five positions and gave the holders salaries of $10,000 a year. Under the Secretary of the Treasury the Commissioner of Internal Revenue gets $10,000 a year, the collector of customs at New York gets $12,000, the Comptroller of the Currency gets $12,000 a year. Here you are creating a position, if you create the position as I think you ought to create it, to give the Secretary of the Treasury the help that he says he must have in his office in order that he may perform the great duties of that office, which are larger by manyfold than ever before; and yet it is claimed that because some bill is pending in some committee creating another position we should not now do the work that is necessary so that when the 1st of July comes the Secretary of the Treasury can have the assistance that will assist him to perform the great duties devolved upon him.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 133, noes 76.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the motion will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 132, not voting 155, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 96——

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of Senate amendment 96, as I shall offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate amendment, as he is going to offer a substitute for it. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 96: Page 89, at the top of the page, insert:

"OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

"For salaries, fiscal year 1922, at annual rates of compensation as follows: Clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each; clerk-counters—2 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; 2 messengers at $840 each; in all, $37,880.

"For compensation, in addition to that carried therefor in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, as follows: Deputy comptroller, $500; deputy comptroller, $500; chief clerk, $500; in all, $1,500.

"For expenses of Federal reserve and national currency (to be reimbursed by the Federal reserve and national banks): For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Clerk-counters—3 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each; 7 counters at $1,000 each; in all, $14,800.

"The Comptroller of the Currency may designate a national-bank examiner to act as chief of the examining division in his office."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

"For salaries, fiscal year 1922, at annual rates of compensation as follows: Clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each; clerk-counters—2 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; 2 messengers at $840 each; in all, $37,880.

"The Comptroller of the Currency may designate a national-bank examiner to act as chief of the examining division in his office."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the first paragraph of my proposed amendment is in the Senate amendment to the bill. The third paragraph is included in the conference report. The second paragraph has to do with increases of salaries, and the substitute which I have offered does not include it. I move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 135, noes 33.

Mr. WINGO. On that vote I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven Members present, not a quorum. As many as are in favor of ordering the previous question will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees and the Doorkeeper will close the doors.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 77, answered "present" 1, not voting 164, as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. DOUGHTON.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The unencumbered balances in the appropriations for compensation of employees to audit the accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service in the fiscal years 1920 and 1921 are reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1922. And not exceeding $975 per annum may be expended out of the appropriation for contingent and miscellaneous expenses for rental of telephones in the fiscal years 1921 and 1922.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to pass Senate amendment 99 until we have disposed of Senate amendments 100 and 101, because if they are not agreed to we do not want to concur in Senate amendment 99.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to pass over Senate amendment 99 until we dispose of Senate amendments 100 and 101. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chicago, Ill., Broadview Hospital: For recreation building, walks, and roads, water-softening apparatus, additional water supply, planting and improving of grounds, and for superintendence and technical services necessary for said work at customary rates of compensation to be employed within or without the District of Columbia and without regard to civil-service rules and regulations, at a limit of cost not to exceed $500,000: Provided, That the expenditures for such superintendence and technical services shall not exceed 3 per cent of the total amount expended hereunder: And provided further, That in carrying the foregoing authorization into effect the Secretary is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to enter into contracts or to employ labor and purchase materials in the open market, all of said work to be performed under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. FISH. We are appropriating here half a million dollars to erect a hospital——

Mr. GOOD. No; the hospital has been erected at a cost of $3,000,000, without any profit to the contractors. An audit of the books of Shank & Co. and Mr. Hines shows that the contractors have lost over $1,000,000. There is no adequate water supply, not a tree on the place, and the Government owns 300 acres of land, no building for recreation for the men, no roads or walks or anything of that kind. It was intended by this amendment to provide for a water supply, as the water-supply system is not adequate for a hospital for a thousand men. The hospital is complete and cost $3,400,000, and cost the contractors over $4,000,000.

Mr. FISH. The amendment as I read it calls for an appropriation not to exceed $500,000.

Mr. GOOD. That is for the water supply and building for recreation, swimming pool, and trees, walks, and so forth.

Mr. FISH. Has this anything to do with the ex-service men?

Mr. GOOD. That is what it is for. The whole hospital will hold 1,000 beds for ex-service men.

Mr. FISH. Why does it not come under the bill where we appropriated $18,000,000 to take care of these hospitals?

Mr. GOOD. Because the committee found that the $18,600,000 would be necessary to do the work in certain hospitals they had selected and the building of the new one in the State of the gentleman in New York.

Mr. FISH. I am afraid not. Will the gentleman yield me three minutes to speak on this matter?

Mr. GOOD. I will offer the amendment, and then if the gentleman wants to speak I will yield him three minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment: In lines 6, 7, and 8 of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment, strike out the following words: "at a limit of cost not to exceed."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to the fact that we are casually appropriating a sum of $500,000 on a hospital that is not fully completed. That is, $500,000 for recreation buildings, walks and roads, water-softening apparatus additional to the water supply, and so forth.

How are we going to make good our promise of economy when we pass a $500,000 appropriation without a minute's debate? The crux of the present financial situation is appropriations and not so much the question of taxation. It is these unreasonable appropriations by Congress which make the public impatient. We take up too much time in talking about taxation and ways and means of raising revenue, which is only the manifest of the disease, and do not consider sufficiently the real disease, which is appropriations by Congress such as this, appropriating lump sums of $500,000. Now, I am informed that this is for ex-service men, and as an ex-service man I am opposed to this particular amendment. I do not believe in using the ex-service men as a camouflage in making appropriations in a deficiency bill when we have provided $18,000,000 for permanent hospitals for ex-service men and when the deficiency does not yet exist. This appropriation should come under the provision for $18,000,000.

A lot of you Republicans, and especially the new men in this House, came here pledged to economy, yet you have made no improvement upon the Democratic record under this bill, when you appropriate such sums without a minute's debate. What are you new men who come here from doubtful districts going to do when you go back home and explain that you did not live up to your promises of economy? I am not familiar with the facts in regard to this particular appropriation and all I know is what I read, which was called to my attention not more than two minutes ago. Nevertheless, we should have some discussion in this House on an appropriation amounting to $500,000. We ought to know whether it is a necessity and whether it can not come, where it seems to me it should come, under the provisions of the $18,000,000 appropriation for permanent hospitals for ex-service men.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me one minute on this same thing?

Mr. GOOD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with what has been said by my colleague from New York [Mr. FISH]. If I knew the facts about this hospital I might not be against this amendment, but when we appropriate in this House $500,000 flat for recreation buildings, walks and roads, water-softening apparatus, and additional water supply, planting and improving grounds, and the other items enumerated here, even though these adornments are adjuncts to the hospital for ex-service men, I think we should know something about the facts and that there should be some debate upon it. I think we should be informed whether we can afford that sort of adornment at the present time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I am afraid that my time is up. If I have any time, I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman came over here from Baltimore the other day with a request to rebuild some rotten docks and offered an amendment for $75,000, and nobody but the gentleman knew anything about it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I have a right to answer that, have I not? In regard to the matter of those docks——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman yield me a little further time.

Mr. GOOD. I do not yield any further time.

Mr. HILL. Then I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

Mr. GOOD. Not on the docks; no.

The SPEAKER. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, the situation with regard to this hospital is this: Neither of the gentlemen would be opposed to some appropriation. I do not know whether this is the proper amount. I do know that we have expended $3,400,000 and that we have inadequate water supply and inadequate fire protection. The gentlemen would put their comrades in a building where there is inadequate water supply and inadequate fire protection, for they would now refuse to give them water supply and fire protection after we have spent $3,400,000 on the building. They may do that to their comrades, but the mothers and fathers of those comrades would not agree to any such thing, and the intelligent American public sentiment will not stand behind anything of that kind. This amount may be too much. The next item may be too much, but we have spent the money, and what we are asking for here is an appropriation of a small amount to make the appropriation we have already made available for the ex-service men. I mo the previous question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me one minute?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 101, page 91 of the bill, insert:

"Dawsonsprings, Ky.: Sanatorium. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the principal buildings for the Dawsonsprings, Ky., Sanatorium to be erected of fireproof construction and as originally designed, $750,000, and the limit of cost heretofore fixed for said sanatorium is hereby increased from $1,500,000 to $2,250,000: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the completion of the buildings and approaches for said sanatorium shall be under the supervision and direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the compensation of the superintendent of construction and such technical and clerical assistance as may be necessarily employed in the superintendence of the completion of said buildings and approaches to be chargeable to the appropriation for the field force of the office of the Supervising Architect."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 101. This item is for Dawsonsprings. We have already appropriated a million and a half dollars there. The former Secretary of the Treasury was confident that the hospital could be built for that amount if he could construct it by purchasing the material and hiring the labor. Some contracts were entered into, and the hospital is now in a state of incompletion. We have spent one and a half million dollars upon it. According to the estimate of the supervising architect, it will take $750,000 to complete the hospital by providing fireproof construction for some of the buildings. This is a hospital for the tubercular ex-service men. I do not see how we can avoid the appropriation of this money, much as I should like to do it, because we need the hospital and it is practically two-thirds complete. It is proposed by this appropriation to complete it. I move the previous question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me two minutes against the amendment?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is this a deficiency for the year 1921?

Mr. GOOD. It is a Senate amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But it is not a deficiency.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me two minutes?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. I have only two minutes. Mr. Speaker, I was much interested in what the gentleman said in reference to taking care of the soldiers, but I was also much interested in that he was not able to say how much of the $500,000 in the last item was necessary for the Broadview Hospital.

I protest against an appropriation of $750,000 for this Dawsonsprings Sanatorium without further consideration and without having the details of it. If it is necessary for the hospital and necessary for the soldiers, it should have a proper hearing. Here in two items are appropriated $1,250,000 without any consideration, and as far as I am personally concerned as a Representative of this House I do not care whether it is a Senate amendment or not; I would like to vote against it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for one suggestion? I want to say to the House that both of these propositions, the hospital at Broadview, Ill., and the sanatorium at Dawsonsprings, Ky., have been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Hearings have been had and the committee has reported favorably on both propositions, and the report is before this House and these propositions have the support and indorsement of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a further fact that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has made a personal investigation of these propositions and has submitted a request for this amount?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is true.

Mr. GOOD. And with this appropriation the building will be fireproof.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. This appropriation of $750,000, will that include an adequate water supply, the decorating of the grounds and parks, and so forth?

Mr. GOOD. That is the estimate for the completion of the building in every respect, including the grading, building of bridges, roads, and so forth.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. That is a new water supply.

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely; and that is the estimate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. I now move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 99.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I have a substitute for 105, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 105, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"WAR DEPARTMENT.

"Office of the Secretary: For additional amount required for the salary of the Assistant Secretary of War in accordance with section 5a of the act 'To amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice,' fiscal year 1922, $5,000.

"Water system, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii: For installation of a pipe line to replace the present water main from Koolau Reservoir to Schofield Barracks, fiscal year 1922, $600,000.

"Quartermaster Corps: To complete the acquisition of land required for the Infantry School at Camp Benning, Ga., there may be expended from the appropriation 'General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps,' for the fiscal year 1919, the sum of $400,000, which amount shall be in addition to the sum of $515,252, the expenditure of which for the same purpose was authorized by the act approved February 28, 1920, entitled 'An act to amend the Army appropriation act of 1920, and for the purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes.' The said sum of $400,000 herein authorized to be expended shall remain on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation 'General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps, 1919,' until June 30, 1922."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a little time or yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I notice the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa is the same as the amendment 105 put in by the Senate, except with the omission of two items.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I especially want to call attention to the second item in the substitute offered, and that is the provision of $600,000 for a water system at certain barracks in Hawaii. How does that item come to be a deficiency appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. It has been estimated on two different bills. The water supply for Schofield Barracks is brought about 5 miles. It was originally built, I think, in 1912 and cost $175,000. It was put in wrought-iron pipes, but because of the peculiar condition of the soil there the pipe gave out after it had been down about four or five years, and it cost $200,000 to repair it. Then they asked for $200,000 more for repairs. We refused that and asked for a survey, first, to see if we could not get a water supply nearer, and second, to see if they could use cast-iron pipe, because they say the life of cast-iron pipe will be indefinite, which everybody who is familiar with it knows. The cast-iron pipe installation costs $600,000, and its life will be indefinite. It is simply to replace pipe of the same dimensions to carry the only water supply for the Schofield Barracks that they have.

Mr. CRAMTON. What I am trying to direct the attention of the gentleman to is this——

Mr. GOOD. The leakage now is stated to be 500,000 gallons per day from this water supply.

Mr. CRAMTON. What I am trying to direct attention to is that the item appropriated for is not for the year 1921, of which the deficiency bill has jurisdiction, but is expressly for the fiscal year 1922, which would come under the jurisdiction of the committee having charge of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. No; it would not be in the Army bill. It would come under the sundry civil bill. After long hearings, we asked for further investigation, and they instituted an investigation but did not have the report ready when we reached this bill, but they had it in the Senate. We were satisfied that we should do something. They have a regiment there—I think one regiment now, maybe more—and this is the only water supply. The leakage is stated to amount to 500,000 gallons a day. It is in a bad way, and something must be done.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Is this $600,000 an existing deficit?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is for the purpose of putting in a cast-iron pipe.

Mr. HILL. That is, the $600,000 is for a pipe?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly. You could not put in the pipe until you had the money.

Mr. HILL. And it is to be cast-iron pipe?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; cast-iron pipe.

Mr. HILL. Cast-iron pipe has the life of five years, and is never used by water companies.

Mr. GOOD. That shows what the gentleman knows about it. Cast-iron pipe, according to the experts, has a life that is almost indefinite. They have cast-iron pipe in some of the cities that has been down over a hundred years.

Mr. MADDEN. A hundred years, unless they have electrolysis.

Mr. HILL. I happen to be the president of a half-million-dollar water company, and we never use cast-iron pipe.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 106.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have a substitute for that also, and I ask that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "and," insert the word "of," and in line 13 strike out the following: "In the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask how much the unexpended balances are that are carried forward?

Mr. GOOD. There are at the present time quite a large number of unexpended balances, but the Secretary of War has been attempting to make these settlements, and just how much it will be on the 1st of July I do not know. There is something over $35,000,000 at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 107:

"Ogden Arsenal, Utah: Of the $5,000,000 which the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, was authorized in the second deficiency act, approved March 6, 1920, to expend during the fiscal year 1921 for the construction of storage facilities for ammunition and components thereof, $100,000 is hereby made available during the fiscal year 1922 for the development of a water supply for Ogden Arsenal, Utah: Provided, That not to exceed $30,000 of the amount herein made available for this purpose may be expended for the purchase of such land and water rights as may be necessary to provide a suitable water supply for Ogden Arsenal.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from our disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 107 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 108, page 96:

"POSTAL SERVICE—OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUES—OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

"When any damage is done to person or property by or through the operation of the Post Office Department in any branch of its service and such damage is found by the Postmaster General upon investigation to be a proper charge against the United States, the Postmaster General is hereby invested with power to adjust and settle any claim for such damage when his award for such damage in any case does not exceed $500; and the sum of $35,000 is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year 1922 to carry out the provisions of this paragraph."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 113.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate amendment, as I have a substitute, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE—BUREAU OF FISHERIES.

"Expenses of advisory committee: For the expenses of an advisory committee of not to exceed two members from the Atlantic coast, two members from the Pacific coast, and four members from the inland waters, Great Lakes, and Alaskan sections of the United States, to be designated from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce, to consist of men prominently identified with the various branches of the fishery industry, qualified in aquatic research, and experienced in fish culture, who shall visit the Bureau of Fisheries at such times as the Secretary of Commerce may deem necessary and report to the Secretary of Commerce on the condition and needs of the service, the members to serve without compensation, but to be paid the actual expenses incurred in attending the meetings, fiscal year 1922, $2,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 137, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute I have here be read in lieu of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

"Not more than $25,000 of the appropriation for 'Promoting commerce, Department of Commerce, fiscal year 1922,' may be used for personal services in Washington, D. C.

"Commercial attachés: The appropriation for 'Commercial attachés, fiscal year 1922,' shall be available for the compensation of a clerk or clerks for each commercial attaché at the rate of not to exceed $2,500 per annum for each person so employed. And not to exceed two commercial attachés employed under said appropriation may be recalled from their foreign posts and assigned for duty in the Department of Commerce without loss of salary."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.
The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 23
So the amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.
The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1, page 102, insert the following:

"SENATE.

"Committee employee: For an assistant clerk to the Committee on Finance, fiscal year 1922, $2,100."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.
The motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.
Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the amendment.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the amendment. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

"In order to keep the expenditures within or under the appropriations for the fiscal year 1922 for printing and binding, the heads of the various executive departments and Government establishments are hereby authorized to discontinue the printing of any annual or special reports under their respective jurisdiction: Provided, That where the printing of said reports is discontinued, the original copy thereof shall be kept on file in the offices of the heads of the respective departments or Government establishments for public inspection."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question there for information?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. WINGO. Am I correct in supposing that this repeals the law requiring certain departments to make annual reports and print them?
Mr. GOOD. They make the annual reports, but if the department itself feels that the annual report is not of such public importance as would warrant its printing, they suspend the printing. The law requires that the reports shall be printed. The department feels that inasmuch as some of the reports were not printed heretofore they can suspend the printing. But the original report must be kept on file and kept open to inspection.
Mr. WINGO. There are some reports that are very necessary to be made to Congress for the information of Congress. Now, suppose a department declined to give Congress access to that report and withholds printing?
Mr. GOOD. All the reports sent to Congress are printed by Congress, and are not printed by the departments.
Mr. WINGO. This simply cuts out their private printing?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. WINGO. It will not prevent the printing of reports that are required to be made to Congress annually?
Mr. GOOD. No; it will not interfere with them.
The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The amendment was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WOODRUFF, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I rise for information. May I ask what will be the order of business to-morrow?
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is in the lap of the gentleman.
The SPEAKER. To-morrow is Thursday. The gentleman will be recognized to-morrow morning if he so desires.
Mr. SWEET. It is the desire of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to go on with this soldier legislation.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will expect to recognize the gentleman if he desires it to-morrow.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution and bill:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 9, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for the privileges continued unto us. Help us to realize not simply the utterance of speech but the deep throbbings of our hearts as we ask for companionship with Thee through all the devious ways of life. Help us, we beseech of Thee, to be true to the highest ideals, to the glory of Thy name. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, June 6, 1921, when, on request of Mr. McCUMBER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

RECOGNITION OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 37).

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on the 5th day of January, 1904, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] delivered in the Senate a very full, comprehensive, and elaborate speech upon the matter of the authority of the President of the United States in the question of recognizing new States or any other States. There is but one copy extant of that speech, I understand, in document form. It goes into the matter very fully, giving the decisions of the Supreme Court on the subject, the letters of Attorneys General, the action of the Presidents, and the views of law writers logically arranged.

I think at this time when quite a number of prospective new nations are in process of incubation the Senate may find the material gathered in that speech of great use. I therefore ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? It is so ordered, without objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overlue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to sundry amendments of the Senate to the bill and agreed to the same, and that the House receded from its disagreement to sundry amendments of the Senate and agreed to the same with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. MYERS. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Montana and also a telegram from an official of the Legislature of Montana in regard to the unfinished business now before the Senate. I ask that the memorial and the telegram in relation thereto be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial and telegram were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HELENA, MONT., January 25, 1921.

Senator H. L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.:

A resolution passed both house and senate unanimously, part of which follows:

"Whereas there is pending before Congress Senate bill 3944, by Gronna, Senate bills by KENDRICK and KENYON, and House bill by ANDERSON, which we consider to be detrimental to our industry, we believe the remedy for abuses of power and inefficient service by large concerns lies in strict and broad-minded supervision and not in curtailment of production that might result from the delegating of a commission with arbitrary power."

Copies going forward, to-day's mail, as confirmation of the above wire.

C. J. McALLISTER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Senate memorial 1, introduced by committee on stock growing and grazing, relative to the regulation of the packing industry.

Whereas there is pending before the Congress of the United States Senate bill 3944, introduced by Gronna, and Senate bills by KENDRICK and KENYON, and House bill by ANDERSON, the purposes of which are to provide transportation, storage, and marketing facilities for, and to regulate commerce among the States in, live stock, meats, and other products derived from live stock or the slaughtering of live stock, which we consider to be detrimental to our industry; and

Whereas, regardless of our objections to said bills on the foregoing grounds, we believe that the remedy for the abuses of power and inefficient service to the public by large concerns throughout the country lies in strict and broad-minded supervision and not in the curtailment of production that might result from the delegating of a commission with arbitrary powers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the seventeenth legislative assembly (the house of representatives concurring), That we do hereby protest against the passage of said bills or like legislation tending to create any further agitation; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the senate to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and they are urged to use their best efforts to prevent the passage of said bills.

NELSON STORY, Jr.,
President of the Senate.
C. J. MCALLISTER,
Secretary of the Senate.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, on the 2d instant the Senate received a communication from the United States Shipping Board submitting a very valuable report which required several months to compile, and which was made at the request of the Senate through a resolution unanimously adopted during the last Congress. It had been my understanding that the report had been ordered printed, but I have just learned otherwise. I think it is a very valuable document.

It has been discussed more or less in the public press, and in my own mail I have many inquiries for copies of the report. Its publication might tend to throw light on many matters which are frequently under discussion relating to Shipping Board activities. On making inquiry, I find that the report was not ordered printed. I should like to ask unanimous consent that the report be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator say the report was made in response to a Senate resolution?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; a Senate resolution adopted by the last Congress. It required some six or seven months for the Shipping Board to compile the statistics and information asked for by the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator now asks to have the report printed as a public document?

Mr. EDGE. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the nature of the report?

Mr. EDGE. Generally it gives the details of receipts and expenditures, forms of contracts, number of ships in operation, where they are in operation, information as to claims that have been settled and adjusted, as well as those which are still in process of adjustment; in other words, it answers in great detail many of the criticisms which we have heard from time to time in the Senate and elsewhere. It seems to have been a great mistake that the report was simply filed, and that we do not have it for reference, as it should be had when matters relating to the Shipping Board are under discussion before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know that the law requires the Shipping Board to make reports to Congress, and I was wondering if their report to Congress did not include this material.

Mr. EDGE. No; this was the report called for by special resolution passed unanimously by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. It gives no account of the banquets which they have held in New York?

Mr. EDGE. I think the report of a congressional investigating committee might go more into detail with reference to matters of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. I think some committee ought to go into it.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey if the report shows the number of employees who have been to New York, Chicago, and other places at various times attending banquets and whose expenses have been paid by the Government?

Mr. EDGE. I am sure I can not answer the query of the Senator from Iowa. I am very positive, however, that the report is a very valuable document and should be printed for such purposes as we usually print public reports covering important activities. Here is a department of the Government spending, as has been frequently stated, more money than any other department of the Government. There has been much criticism, some undoubtedly justified and some perhaps not justified. The information called for by the report was compiled in answer to direct questions. So far as I have had time to go over the report I think they have given us very valuable information. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered as requested.

DEATH OF COL. FREDERICK W. GALBRAITH.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the morning newspapers convey the sad news of the accidental death of Col. Frederick W. Galbraith, head of the American Legion. It might not be inappropriate at the present time for some one to say a few words of appreciation of the services of this distinguished soldier.

Col. Frederick W. Galbraith, jr., entered the service as lieutenant colonel of the One hundred and forty-fifth United States Infantry, an Ohio regiment, and commanded his regiment on the other side through all of its activities in the Argonne and Belgium. He was twice wounded in action and was decorated by the United States Government with the distinguished service cross and by the French Government with the croix de guerre. In civil life he was identified with the paper-manufacturing business in Ohio.

As the oldest member of a large family, he started as a sailor on a sailing vessel and worked up to the position of first mate before he became 20 years of age, yet he was only 47 years old at the time of his untimely death. He was chosen last year as the national commander of the American Legion and has since devoted himself earnestly to assisting those who suffered by reason of their services in the war.

In my association with him in matters of legislation pending before the Committee on Military Affairs I have found him at all times a great patriot, a good American, entirely unselfish in the great work he has done for the benefit of our soldiers who served in the great World War.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to add to the very fitting tribute to Col. Galbraith that has been spoken by the Senator from New Jersey. As a representative in part of the State of Ohio, I feel it appropriate, however, that I should add just a word and say that in the untimely taking off of this great soldier the people of Ohio feel that they have lost a great citizen. Not only was he a great soldier, but he stood for the things that were the highest and finest in the civic life of his State and his Nation. I have therefore risen to add my word of personal tribute to Col. Galbraith. He was the soldiers' friend; he toiled unceasingly in the cause of the World War veterans.

RELIEF OF DISABLED EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I do not know of any better way to show our respect for the patriotic services rendered by Col. Galbraith than to advance the splendid work for which he stood as the administrative head of the American Legion by taking action on the resolution that has been pending here for several weeks and which seeks to investigate into all agencies and bureaus dealing with the welfare of the veterans of the World War. I therefore ask unanimous consent to call up Senate resolution 59.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 59, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 59) submitted by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts April 28, 1921, and reported by Mr. CALDER from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate May 27, 1921, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate all bureaus and agencies of the Government dealing with the care, treatment, insuring, compensating, rehabilitating, and hospitalizing of the veterans of the World War.

That said committee shall investigate specifically the manner, methods, and scope of the activities of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the United States Public Health Service, and the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

That said committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to visit such places and institutions as it may deem necessary, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer or stenographers to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page.

That said committee may sit during the sessions and recesses of the Senate, and it shall report its findings and make recommendations for such amendments and changes in existing laws as it may deem necessary for the welfare of ex-service men and their dependents to the Senate at the earliest possible date.

All expenses in connection herewith to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts make some statement or give some reason as to how or why he thinks the adoption of the resolution would promote the interests of those in whom we are all interested. I reserve the right to object until I hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I presume it is generally known to the Members of the Senate that there is a good deal of unrest and complaining upon the part of the veterans of the late war because of the treatment or lack of consideration which their incapacitated comrades have received from the Government. I am surprised that it should be necessary to have explained that there is a general demand on the part of our ex-service men for some action on the part of Congress that will seek to put at rest the discontent and dissatisfaction rampant among the war veterans of this country. My mail—and I think the statement applies to the mail of a good many other Senators with whom I have conversed—contains altogether too many complaints of delays and postponements in obtaining decisions relating to the fixing and paying of reasonable and just compensation to our incapacitated veterans.

The situation in regard to hospitalization was explained at length, so far as I have been able to find out what the conditions are, in a speech made by me on the floor of the Senate on April 27 last. Members of the House of Representatives have discussed this question; posts of the American Legion and other war-veteran organizations have criticized conditions and demanded relief; women's organizations have also pleaded for reform; and I supposed if there was any one fact that is generally conceded to have a sound basis it is that the veterans of the late war are justified in making very serious complaint in regard to the manner in which they have been treated in the matter of insurance, of compensation, and of hospitalization.

This resolution seeks for the first time upon the part of the Senate and, so far as I know, of the House of Representatives to undertake an investigation and inquiry into these complaints. To be sure, the Executive, the President of the United States, has caused to be made an investigation into the hospitalization of our war veterans, and, so far as I know, the results of that investigation have been very helpful and very beneficial; but the representatives of the people, the Congress of the United States, have sat silently by all these months and have apparently shown no interest or no purpose to study the whole ex-soldier problem and to find out what is the reason of the prevailing discontent, what is the reason why our soldiers and their friends and relatives are complaining about the indifferent if not neglectful treatment they have received from their Government.

It seems to me that no better service could be rendered to our country and to these men than for the Congress of the United States to say, "Here is a committee selected and chosen to hear you; to find out what your complaints are; to ascertain the reason why the activities of these governmental bureaus have been unsatisfactory." We should send a committee to the hospitals to talk with the invalids of the late war and take every practicable step necessary to prove conclusively that our Government, or at least its representatives in Congress, are desirous of straightening out the injustices and removing the neglect of which they, with apparent good reason, complain. That is the purpose of the resolution; that is the whole problem, to seek by public inquiry and by remedial legislation to restore confidence and trust in the breasts of the veterans of the late war. I can conceive of nothing that will do more to restore a high morale among our ex-service men.

Anyone who has talked with them knows that they are, as a class, very much dissatisfied with the treatment that has been accorded them. Only a short time ago a veteran at one of the hospitals, where 40 men were housed, told me that they had had a secret ballot to see what action they would take if our country were involved in another war, and the 40 men unanimously voted that they would refuse to enlist in another war.

Of course, that judgment is to be discounted by reason of the fact that those men are invalids, and are more or less pessimistic and dissatisfied; but, Senators, the state of mind of these men is not what it should be. It is a serious matter to let this feeling go on without an earnest effort to check it. The veterans of the World War are to be the future leaders of America and of American public opinion. We want them satisfied and contented; we want them to feel that their Government is doing everything possible to show full appreciation for their splendid services and sacrifices. We want them above everything else to realize that they have not been abandoned nor neglected. They feel and believe—and my investigation leads me to the same conclusion—that they have just complaints. Can there be any question but that a poor fellow suffering with tuberculosis, who is unable to get a decision month after month as to his compensation, his right to receive permanent hospital treatment or to have his insurance restored, has a grievance, and a just grievance, of which Congress ought to take cognizance and into which I think we ought to speedily inquire?

I can not conceive of any better service than to have Senators go to these veterans of the horrors of war service and assure them of our deep and lasting interest in everything that pertains to their care and treatment. Let us say to them, "We are your friends; we are the representatives of the American Government; we representatives of the Senate of the United States want to know what your troubles and difficulties are; and if these bureaus are not treating you right we purpose to see that an immediate change of policy is adopted; we are determined to help you back to health and happiness; we intend that your dependents shall not suffer because of your war disability; we are your friends; America appreciates your service; Congress should reflect by deeds the wishes of the American people." Mr. President, I urge the Senate to enter into the proposed inquiry in a spirit of enthusiasm and earnestness, determined to bring these brave and patriotic ex-service men back to a contented state of mind. We must not delay another day. Their discontent and dissatisfaction must be banished. Sunshine and cheer must take the place of gloom and pessimism.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Massachusetts ought to state that the fault of which he complains is not with Congress. There are now some 262,000 of these disabled men, and yet I know of no case where a request has been made for money for the soldiers that has not been granted by Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. To whom are these bureaus responsible but to Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not now objecting in any way to what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, but I desire to state that the Congress of the United States is appropriating each month $172 for every one of the 262,000 disabled soldiers. I believe that the Senator from Massachusetts will admit that such an appropriation, if handled properly, is sufficient to take care of every one of our disabled soldiers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; and my resolution seeks to try to have it handled properly by trying to find out what the various bureaus and agencies have been doing and why they have failed to hold the confidence, trust, support, and approval of the soldiers and of their friends. That is the very purpose of the resolution—to find out why, with the vast sums of money which we have been appropriating, there still exists this discontent and dissatisfaction; why the delay continues; why these men feel they are treated with suspicion rather than sympathy.

Only a few days ago I had a college man suffering with an acute case of tuberculosis—admitted active—come to me with a letter ordering his discharge from a Government hospital because the Bureau of War Risk Insurance had decided that the young man had not filed sufficient evidence connecting his tubercular condition with his war service. Think of throwing our fine, brave heroes, suffering with disease, out in the highways because they can not furnish affidavits that they had a cough, or spit blood, or got wet feet while in the Army. Where, Senators, did these physically fit boys get their tuberculosis if they did not contract it during the strenuous, unusual, and abnormal life of the war camp? Twenty-five thousand of them! What is the matter with our manhood if the explanation is not clearly and unmistakably that the taking of our youth from their comfortable homes, contented employment, and avocations and suddenly putting them into the open life of the camp and the trench and through the strenuous and fatiguing drills and Army maneuvers, which will in many cases apparently improve them physically while really undermining their constitutions? Is it not well known that worry and mental anxiety is frequently the cause of disease? Who will deny but what many an American boy spends days away from home with hearts breaking with grief and longing for those at home?

I had two unfortunate fellows from Walter Reed Hospital call at my office this very morning and tell me that they were suffering with tuberculosis; that they had been insured and carried their policies for over three years; but while they were waiting for their compensation they did not have any money, and, therefore, could not pay their premiums and their policies lapsed. They tried to have their policies renewed, but they could not have them renewed, because they are now physically unsound and have, therefore, lost their status. Do you think it will help improve the state of mind of a tubercular soldier who is facing death to know that he has been refused the right to take up his lapsed policy, in order that his dependents may have a little insurance money at his death?

I tell you that these cases, and there are hundreds of them, are breeding discontent and creating a very serious situation. Every American Legion post in the country is overwhelmed with the complaints from our disabled soldiers.

If all our Senators could hear these ex-soldiers discuss their troubles, they would begin to appreciate that it is time for action; that it is time for some assurance to be given that the Congress is interested in them.

We are passing resolutions here to investigate strikes; we are passing resolutions to study the highway, the postal, and the farm problem; we are passing resolutions to look into troubles of various kinds amongst civilians in different parts of the country. Why not the problem of our dying and diseased soldiers? Is there any service that we can render more helpful in the direction of restoring confidence and trust in the United States of America than to show that we are interested in our veterans?

Let me say here that before any other problem of reconstruction I consider that the first problem we should have solved and settled was that which concerned the restoration to health, to strength, and to competency the men who fought the war and brought victory to their country. I place this work of Congress before reconstruction of industrial conditions or taxation or tariff schedules.

The restoration to health of the sick and disabled veterans of the war, the payment of our debt of gratitude to them, are the first obligations of a grateful Government and of a generous people; and the American people are grateful. The fault is with the officials of our Government, if anywhere. It certainly is not with the American people, for they want these men dealt with generously; they want them given the best hospitals and the best of care, regardless of cost; they want them given every assurance of our appreciation and gratitude; and I repeat I think that we can render no better service now than to find out what their grievances are, to ascertain what can be done in the way of amending the laws passed during the war, which were enacted before we knew what the terrible havoc to the health of our soldiers was to be, and to present to the Congress a report which will show that Congress purposes and intends to do everything possible and reasonable for the welfare of the World War veterans. I want this whole question thoroughly surveyed by Congress and settled once for all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not interrupt the Senator with any idea of criticizing what he has said in any way.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply felt that if the Senator's statement was going to the country I would not want the inference from what the Senator says to get into the minds of the people that Congress had not appropriated the money.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think Congress has been very generous in its appropriations. I think a great deal of the trouble has been due to the lack of proper administration and also to the failure to have a proper afterwar resurvey of the laws which were enacted for the benefit of the soldiers during the war. Now that the war is over, action should be taken to amend existing law or pass new laws which will remedy the evils of which complaint is made. For instance, who would have thought that we would have had the terrible situation of about 10,000 men mentally incapacitated as the result of the war, and of 25,000 tuberculosis patients within two years? Was any law drafted anticipating such a situation, providing how we should care for them, and what should be granted to them in the way of compensation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Such an inquiry as the Senator from Massachusetts proposes might have the effect of cutting a little of the red tape with which so many of these matters are entangled. Soldier patients can not get their cases acted on for weeks and weeks, and in the meantime many of them are dying because they can get no help, when they ought to be able to secure action on their applications at once. I learned yesterday of a case where a man who was ordered to a hospital died before he could get there. If the order had been issued weeks before, his life might have been saved.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is a scandal, as the Senator from North Carolina suggests, and the worst feature of it is that in cases of tuberculosis for a patient to have worries and cares on his mind will retard his recovery more than anything else. If Senators had visited hospitals, as I have, and seen these poor fellows as soon as I appeared run to their trunks and bring out their war-risk insurance letters, as if they were the most precious thing in life, setting forth what their Government was going to do or not do for them in the way of compensation, they would appreciate how real this situation is to them. The treatment of our soldiers is, gentlemen of the Senate, a pathetic story—and one that no public man can be proud of. I repeat that for those suffering from the dread disease tuberculosis, worry and discontent accentuates their condition more than anything else. Delay in securing action on their applications for compensation is a prolific cause of worry and discontent, and, as has been indicated, the whole story is one of unnecessary delays and nonsensical red tape.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator had concluded. I wanted to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I listened some time ago to the very able and eloquent address delivered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, who had made a personal investigation of some of the so-called hospitals where our wounded and disabled soldiers are receiving treatment. I confess that I was horrified at the disclosures made by him. It seemed to me that his testimony, given after personal observation and investigation, disclosed a state of facts for which the American people can not stand.

We have before us very important legislation; the Government is greatly in debt; we have all manner of difficult problems to settle, Mr. President, but there is one thing it seems to me must take precedence over everything else, no matter what it may be, and that is that the American Government shall do justice to its soldiers who served in the late war, particularly to its wounded soldiers. I thought before I listened to the Senator from Massachusetts that we had appropriated large sums of money, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has stated; that we had provided all that had been asked for, and I was dumfounded to learn that notwithstanding that fact such conditions actually existed as were narrated by the Senator from Massachusetts. The fact that we have appropriated all the money that has been asked for, Mr. President, taken in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts based on his personal observation and investigation, makes it all the more necessary, it seems to me, that the Senate should ascertain what is wrong. It seems to me that the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts will accomplish that result.

Evidently the soldiers are not receiving fair treatment. Everybody wants them to get the very best treatment that is possible. They are not getting it. We have been led to believe that we have appropriated money enough to give it to them. If there is something wrong in the handling of the money, and if they have not received this treatment, we ought to know it so as to rectify it. If it takes more money, we ought to know it and to appropriate more; but under no conditions ought we to delay. This committee ought to be at work. The country, and especially the legislative Members, who are responsible for legislation, ought to know, and ought to know without delay, what the difficulty is, and just how to remedy it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to say a word in support of this resolution. I do not want to charge anybody with dereliction of duty or in any manner to overstate the conditions which exist, but statements have been made to me of such a character as to indicate a gross failure to properly organize the work of caring for the soldiers.

I am going to give the Senate a very simple illustration.

I went home the other day and found my wife making a pair of pajamas. I asked her why. She said that word had come to the wives and families of Senators that they did not have a proper change of undergarments at Walter Reed Hospital, and that the women had again taken up the work in which they had been engaged during the war, and that what she was doing others were doing. I do not state that to bring either my wife or these other ladies into prominence, but if it be the case that in the Capital of the Nation men are so destitute of proper bedclothing that the ladies have to take it up it is significant of what must exist in other branches of the hospitals in Washington and in other hospitals more remote from the Capital.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a minute?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have just returned from home myself, and I found some good women there organized, from the information they had, to get cast-off clothing and money to take care of the destitute soldiers in hospitals. They did not have clothes and they had no money to spend and they were absolutely destitute.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to criticize, but I say that if the fact to which I have called attention and the fact just brought to our attention by the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina are true—and they must be—if the gentlemen in charge of the hospital service of the United States can not run it any better than that, in God's name let us again call on the women and organize them, and they will take care of these soldiers.

I was not much of a woman-suffrage man, but there is one thing that I know a woman can do better than any man on earth can do it, and that is to take care of people in distress; and while we ought not to impose this burden upon the women, if the gentlemen running this business can not take care of it and do it right, let us call on the women, and they will do it right.

The last time I was in my home city one of the ladies there wanted me to go and visit a hospital. She was doing work in it. My situation was such that I could not go that day, and the next day I was called out of town, and I have regretted ever since the fact that I did not go. I am going to be home in a few days, and I shall visit that hospital; but the report I got later through her husband as to her particular complaint was of such a character as to astonish me.

You must put some humanity into these hospitals. These soldiers are entitled to a different kind of treatment than would be meted out at some eleemosynary institution. They are entitled to the best medical care the world's science can give them. They are entitled to it promptly. There is no sense in any red tape about it. Every soldier ought to be furnished with papers, if he does not possess them, that identify him and show his standing and his position; and an examination by a physician ought to be possible within a few minutes' time after an application is made.

I do not intend to take time to go into any details, or to hold the Senate here. I know that there is not a Senator in this body who does not feel exactly as I feel. I think the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is a good way to get this matter started, and I hope it will be adopted this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider Senate resolution 59, submitted by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts on April 28, 1921, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, three from the majority party and two from the minority party, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate all bureaus and agencies of the Government dealing with the care, treatment, insuring, compensating, rehabilitating, and hospitalizing of the veterans of the World War.

That said committee shall investigate specifically the manner, methods, and scope of the activities of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the United States Public Health Service, and the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

That said committee so appointed shall be authorized to select its own chairman, to send for persons and papers, to visit such places and institutions as it may deem necessary, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer or stenographers to report such hearings as may be held in connection with such investigation at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page.

That said committee may sit during the sessions and recesses of the Senate, and it shall report its findings and make recommendations for such amendments and changes in existing laws as it may deem necessary for the welfare of ex-service men and their dependents to the Senate at the earliest possible date.

All expenses in connection herewith to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have always tried to pursue a policy of not being unreasonable in my expectations of those charged with grave and stupendous responsibilities. Following the war, it was my inclination as far as possible to throw the mantle of charity over the shortcomings and the neglect of those upon whom devolved the duty of caring for our sick and wounded, and those upon whom fell the responsibility of adjusting their compensation claims. Feeling this way, I have refrained heretofore from any public expression, at least, of displeasure and dissatisfaction at the manner in which our sick and wounded have been cared for; but I feel that this resolution at the present time meets a need and a necessity, and that it has become high time that Congress was acting for the purpose of trying to correct the neglect which has been going on.

I have received from time to time communications from soldiers from my State indicating to me and impressing me with the fact that the disposition on the part of those in authority, instead of being that of sympathy, that of a policy of trying to assist in relieving the distressed, to the contrary was a policy of indifference. One of the most recent cases that I have in mind is that of a soldier who has been in the hospital for four or five months trying to get his compensation claim adjusted, having once been upon a grade of probably 100 per cent disability, and then graded down to 10 per cent, although he is still in the hospital, and has been for months; and I have been giving my personal attention to that matter for at least six of eight weeks. My efforts have proven absolutely futile; and instead of getting a reply within a few days, it is two or three weeks or a month, probably, before you can get any information upon a claim and upon affidavits that are presented.

In this particular case it seems to me that the disposition of those having it in charge is unsympathetic; that instead of resolving any doubt in favor of the man who served his country, and served it faithfully, and in this particular instance was at the front for some 18 months, every presumption is resolved against the poor fellow who is upon a stricken bed in a hospital to-day, and has been trying for the last four months to get his compensation adjusted.

There is no reason in the world why the business in regard to handling these compensation claims and in regard to assigning the soldiers to the hospitals should not be expedited and handled promptly and with proper sympathy for these unfortunate men who so faithfully served their country.

I hope the resolution will pass, and that some relief will be afforded.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry from the Senator from Florida, or from any other Senator, as to whether it is not a fact that in the War Risk Insurance Bureau, where they are already behind with their work, they are now discharging a vast number of employees?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I understand that that is the policy that is being pursued.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I reserved the right to object to the consideration of this resolution in order to elicit some information as to the nature of the resolution, not having had an opportunity to examine it. I shall not object at all to its consideration and I shall support the resolution.

While I am on my feet I want to say that I think there is no difference of opinion amongst the Members of the Senate as to the desirability of making every proper effort to promote the interests of the service men. I know there is no one on this side but that desires that every action shall be taken that can possibly be taken; but I want to say that my humble experience in a legislative body other than this has not led me to have great confidence in the efficacy of investigations. So far as I am concerned, what I want these departments to do is to function—I think they are functioning pretty well in some directions now, as I shall have occasion to say in a moment—rather than to put in their time answering questions in an inquiry. It has not been my experience that the public business has been particularly promoted by investigations. It may be that in this case it will be. At all events, I shall support the resolution in the hope that it will be productive of good.

The experience I have had with certain of these bureaus and departments that have to do with the soldiers' claims has not been of the character that other Senators seem to have had. For example, in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance there is, in my judgment, very much greater efficiency and activity than formerly. I am having less difficulty in getting a prompt adjustment of claims. I think that ought to be said. I think it ought to be said that in this administration the President and all the executive departments, as every Senator knows, are making active and earnest and honest and energetic efforts to get results along the lines that are desired for the relief of the ex-service men.

Personally, I doubt whether the adoption of this resolution and the investigation which it contemplates will forward that action. However, in the hope that it may do so, I shall support the resolution. But it must be understood that there is not any difference of opinion as to whether the interests of the ex-service men should be advanced. There may be differences of opinion as to the methods that should be adopted to advance those interests.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would like to ask the Senator if a great many of the cases which are brought to his attention are not finally brought to his attention because the ex-service men themselves can not get any prompt service or reply from the bureau?

Mr. WILLIS. That possibly is true in some cases; in some cases it is not true. And since the Senator inquires about it and forces me to say it, I say to him that in the little experience I had before the 4th of March, as compared with the experience I have had with those cases since the bureau has been under a different administration, there has been a tremendous improvement, and cases are handled very much more rapidly and efficiently than they were theretofore.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I very much hope that there is improvement; there was great room for improvement, and there is still a great deal of room for improvement. As far as some cases I have been handling for ex-soldiers in my State are concerned, I have not observed any very glaring indications of improvement; but I hope there has been some improvement.

Most of these cases come to the attention of Senators is my experience, because the ex-service man has been unable to get proper attention from the bureau. I think it is a great travesty upon justice, and it is an outrage against the ex-service man, that he has to appeal to a Senator or Representative to get a hearing or to get a reply from a bureau in regard to a matter in which he is vitally interested.

Of course, I know that these bureaus have adopted a policy of giving a good deal more attention to a Senator or Representative; but I take the position, Mr. President, that the ex-service man himself, his relatives, or friends who are interested in him, should have prompt response and prompt attention to matters pending before these bureaus without the necessity of the intervention of a Senator or a Representative.

Somehow or other it seems that more or less of these departments have this idea of a little more folding of hands and a little more doing of nothing and running a month or two behind in everything. I can never understand why Government business should not be expedited and carried along promptly, the same as private business. Who ever heard of a big private corporation adopting a policy of running a month or two behind all the time? That is the trouble, more or less, with the Bureau of War Risk and other Government offices.

Take, for instance, the Pension Bureau. I had a letter this morning in regard to a pension claim which has been pending for about a year. The parties insist that all the proof is there, and when I made inquiry about it I found that it was more customary to pigeonhole a pension application and act upon it later on, when somebody calls it up, than to put it in business channels and go ahead and handle it promptly, as it should be handled.

I think it is high time that Congress should get behind this matter and that Congress should see that the ex-soldiers get what they are entitled to receive and what they merit from the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the discussion, because there does not seem to be any serious opposition to the resolution. This is not a question for party division. Both sides of the Chamber are sympathetic with this movement for a full inquiry. My distinguished colleague [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the majority, as well as the very able leader of the minority [Mr. UNDERWOOD], have both assured me of their sympathy and support of this resolution. I wish, however, before the debate closes, to call the Senate's attention to a very interesting chart or diagram which was printed in the RECORD on May 27, at page 1825. That diagram is being distributed pretty generally throughout the country. It shows that there are about 25,000 veterans in hospitals; that 15,000 of that number are in United States Government hospitals; and that 10,000 are in so-called contract hospitals; and that there are 20,000 more in need of hospital treatment.

The chart further shows that Congress appropriated at the last session $18,000,000 for new hospitals, which will take care of 7,000 of the 20,000 incapacitated veterans now without hospital treatment. The chart further shows that there still will be left uncared for 13,000 incapacitated veterans, and that even after the money we have appropriated has been spent there still will be need to provide accommodations for 13,000 additional incapacitated veterans. The chart also shows that the number of tuberculosis patients is increasing at the rate of 1,500 per month.

I can not vouch for the accuracy of this diagram, but it is being generally distributed, and seems to have been prepared with great care. But the fact alone that the hospitalizing of these men is so inadequately taken care of ought to be a sufficient reason for the inquiry I have proposed. In any event, the whole question should be studied and solved for all time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LUMBER INDUSTRY ON PACIFIC COAST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Federal Trade Commission transmitting a report analyzing the activities of the trade associations composed of Douglas fir loggers and lumber manufacturers of the Pacific coast, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in order to dispose of certain nominations pending, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator withhold the motion?

Mr. LODGE. It will take but a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senator offering his resolutions, or whatever he has to present. The morning business has not been concluded. The Senator can put in all his business in five minutes, if he will let the Senate go into executive session and dispose of some nominations.

Mr. HARRISON. It may take longer than the affable Senator from Massachusetts thinks to dispose of the nominations.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President; I yield to the Senator to offer his resolutions, or whatever they are.

ADMIRAL SIMS'S STATEMENT ON THE IRISH QUESTION.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer a resolution, Mr. President, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent, out of order, to submit a resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 89), as follows:

Whereas Admiral William S. Sims is quoted in newspaper reports as having used the following language in an address before the English Speaking Union in London Tuesday night, June 7, 1921: "There are many in our country who technically are Americans, naturalized and born there, but none of them American at all. They are American when they want money but Sinn Feiners on the platform. They are making war on America to-day. The simple truth of it is that they have the blood of English and American boys on their hands. They are like zebras, either black horses with white stripes or white horses with black stripes. But we know they are not horses; they are asses. But each of these asses has a vote, and there are lots of them": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate is directed to make a thorough investigation of the purported remarks of Admiral Sims and report to the Senate with recommendations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the resolution at this time, on the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is received.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks for immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi if it is not a fact that the Secretary of the Navy has taken steps in this matter?

Mr. HARRISON. That is what the papers say; but it seems to me that the charges touching the Senate membership are so grave, and the indictment against certain of our citizens so heinous, and the remarks so indiscreet, that the Senate can not ignore them, notwithstanding that the Secretary of the Navy may have requested information touching the truthfulness of the alleged statement. I might say, Mr. President, in answer to that question, too, that the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], one of the leaders on that side of the aisle, is quoted in this morning's Washington Post as follows:

Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK, who sustained the admiral in his controversy with Secretary of the Navy Daniels, was one of the first to take up the admiral's latest speech and immediately visited the White House and the Navy Department, demanding that cognizance be taken of what he terms "grossly improper" remarks.

So I imagine that there can not be any opposition to the proposed resolution for an immediate investigation. It is so outrageous, that the resolution should pass and the Naval Affairs Committee should take it up immediately and make a thorough investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to take this occasion to call attention to a rather remarkable but very encouraging document that seems not to have received the notice that it is entitled to in view of the distressed condition in which the business of the country finds itself. I wish to read some paragraphs from the document, hoping that Senators, who, like myself, are receiving distress signals from their people, may be enabled from official sources to notify them that the condition is not without hope. The matter contained in the article is rather startling in view of the condition in which business, and particularly the agricultural and stock-raising industry, finds itself.

I am going to read from a statement——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know under what order of morning business we are working?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The presentation of petitions and memorials is now in order, and the Senator from South Carolina is presenting a petition or a memorial.

Mr. SMITH. It partakes of the nature of both to some extent. The document is startling in view of the condition known to exist, and I am going to read the article in order that it may appear in the RECORD in full.

The article was released to the press on Monday, June 6, and reads as follows:

Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, left Sunday night for a two weeks' trip through the cattle-producing sections of the country. Stopping en route at Des Moines, Iowa, he will visit Cheyenne, Wyo.; Denver, Colo.; Albuquerque, N. Mex.; El Paso, San Angelo, San Antonio, and Dallas, Tex., returning thence direct to Washington.

Before leaving Gov. Harding gave out the following authorized statement from the Federal Reserve Board:

Therefore it is an official statement from the entire board.

It is the opinion of the Federal Reserve Board that the country is approaching a new crop season with underlying conditions far sounder than they were a year ago. While there are still large amounts of staple products being carried over, financed partly in bank credit, the reserves of the 12 Federal reserve banks combined are nearly 40 per cent higher than they were at this time last year, standing at about 57.5 per cent as against 42 per cent. There is no ground for apprehension regarding the ability of the banks to meet the requirements of both agriculture and industry.

The Federal reserve system now holds the largest amount of gold in its history, more than $2,400,000,000, and the inflow from other countries still continues. While the loans and invested assets of the Federal reserve banks have been reduced since the peak on November 5 last by more than $1,000,000,000, most of this liquidation has come about in an orderly and natural way. Liquidation has been most pronounced in financial and industrial centers rather than in agricultural sections, as is evidenced by the fact that while the rediscounts held by the Federal reserve banks are materially less than at this time a year ago, these banks are now carrying more than twice as much agricultural and live-stock paper (maturities from 90 days to 6 months) as they had on hand a year ago.

I would have the Senate bear in mind the particular paragraph which I am about to read. It is as follows:

It should be understood that until there is a broadening of the market for agricultural products many farmers will have to be granted extensions on loans already made them and will in many cases require additional credits pending the making and marketing of the new crops. The Federal Reserve Board is gratified to know that the Federal reserve banks are prepared to extend liberal credits to member banks, and through them to nonmember banks, for these and other productive requirements of their customers, and the board urges all banks to aid in easing along the situation in the agricultural districts until normal and regular processes of production and distribution can be further developed. The board feels that the financial emergency which menaced the country during the year 1920 has definitely passed.

The reason why I call attention to this is the fact that a great many of us have been using our best efforts to see if there could not be given some financial relief to the situation, and here comes a statement from the Federal Reserve Board in the midst of all this trouble, in the midst of all these failures and bankruptcies that are occurring throughout the country, that the Federal reserve system has the greatest gold reserve in its history, and that it is in a position to relieve the situation and begging the member banks and the nonmember banks to avail themselves of the reserve and to relieve the situation.

The article continues:

There is, however, in some sections a situation which affects seriously producers of some highly essential products. In the stock-raising industry particularly additional credit facilities are urgently needed. Live-stock paper running not longer than six months is eligible for rediscount at Federal reserve banks, and loans for the purpose of feeding and fattening cattle are, therefore, more easily obtained than the longer time loans for breeding cattle and young calves. The banks of the country are urged to bear in mind the needs of the live-stock industry and to extend as liberal accommodations to those engaged in the industry as circumstances will permit.

The board does not believe that it would be advisable to amend the law by making one and two year paper eligible for rediscount at the Federal reserve banks, but in view of the emergency which threatens the entire live-stock industry, recommends, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, that Congress authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make available to the War Finance Corporation $50,000,000, and that said corporation be empowered to make advances up to this amount on live-stock paper. These loans could be made through the Federal reserve banks as fiscal agents of the War Finance Corporation rather than as banks of discount. This recommendation is made in order to meet the peculiar emergency existing in the live-stock industry, where the process of production is unusually long and requires longer term credit facilities than can be afforded by means of paper with six months' maturity. The board would suggest, however, that the time for making such loans be limited to three years from the passage of the necessary legislation, with a view of having the funds thus advanced ultimately returned to the Treasury.

This legislation, in the board's opinion, will meet the present emergency and should give ample time for the development of permanent plans for the financing of the live-stock industry. It would also tend to stabilize the credits affecting this industry and serve to demonstrate the value to those desiring short-time investments of cattle paper running longer than six months.

At the proper time I shall take occasion to address the Senate on the condition that existed last year and that exists now and, as far as my investigation goes, I shall undertake to show the responsibility for the condition in the country in view of the startling fact that we have no money panic and have not been in any danger of a money panic; but there has been and is now the most terrific commodity panic that the country has ever seen.

AMENDMENT OF FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in view of the startling statement of Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, I think this is an opportune time to move to take up a bill which I believe will not require very much discussion. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency and it will be helpful to the financial situation, as far as agriculture is concerned.

I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1811) to amend the Federal farm loan act as amended.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not wish to interpose any objection, but I am wondering if we can not get through with morning business first?

Mr. KENYON. Apparently there is no chance of getting through with morning business. We have had speeches on almost every subject this morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a little report from a committee which I am anxious to submit when we reach that order of business.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to get this bill up, and then I shall be glad to yield for routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1811.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will yield to enable me to introduce a Senate resolution?

Mr. KENYON. I yield for that purpose.

THE SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read, and that it then may lie on the table. I shall call it up and submit some remarks upon it at the earliest opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 90), as follows:

Whereas a controversy exists between the United States Shipping Board and the men employed upon its ships, and between the men and the private owners of American ships, as a result of which hundreds of ships are idle, including those owned by the Government and those privately owned, and many thousands of men are out of employment; and

Whereas the loss to the owners of the ships, including the Government, as a result of the first month of the controversy amounts to many millions of dollars, conservatively estimated at about $30,000,000, and the loss to the men in wages alone amounts to several million dollars monthly; and

Whereas the controversy and the resulting idleness of both ships and men if long continued will disorganize the shipping business of the country and endanger the entire program for the upbuilding and maintenance of a merchant marine, upon which billions of dollars of the people's money have already been expended; and

Whereas the people of this country, who are the real owners of the ships controlled by the United States Shipping Board, have the right to know fully all the facts respecting the controversy which has resulted in the idleness of these ships and the consequent loss and injury not only to the shipping interests but to the entire business interests of the country; and

Whereas the settlements recently made of strikes and controversies between seamen and ship owners and operators in Great Britain and other countries have released the full maritime resources of those countries to compete with the disorganized merchant marine of this country; and

Whereas the continued idleness of our ships and men, which must result in closing foreign markets to our agricultural and other products, except as they may be carried in foreign ships and upon terms dictated by foreign rivals, presents a situation which menaces the interests of all classes of our people; and

Whereas grave charges against the integrity and efficiency of the management by the Shipping Board of the public business and the property committed to its care have been made in the press and in the public debate in the United States Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof to be appointed by it, is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation into the controversy above mentioned, and the causes thereof, and into the questions of wages and working conditions involved in said controversy, and into the claims and contentions of the respective parties to said controversy and the merits thereof, and into the conditions existing in the marine service of this country on both publicly and privately owned ships; and that said committee thoroughly investigate the methods and practices of said Shipping Board, and the agreements, understandings, and relations, if any exist, between the shipowners or operators in the United States, including said Shipping Board, and all association of shipowners, among themselves, and with the shipowners or operators or associations thereof in other countries, and any control, or attempt to control the shipping interests or business of this country, or any portion thereof, or the regulation thereof, by any foreign interests, concerns, or influences whatsoever, and to report its findings and conclusions thereon to the Senate with all convenient speed.

The said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper, and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœna or otherwise, and to require the production of books, papers, and documents, and to employ counsel and other assistance, and stenographers at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses, sign subpœnas for witnesses, and every person duly summoned as a witness before said committee or any subcommittee thereof, who fails or refuses to obey the process of said committee or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the pastor and congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Chattahoochee, Fla., praying for the calling of an international conference for the purpose of considering the question of disarmament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Green Cove Springs, Fla., praying that an international conference be called for the purpose of considering the question of a reduction of armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution of the Women's Auxiliary to American Legion, Post No. 29, of Claremont, N. H., favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KNOX presented a resolution of the City Council of Connellsville, Pa., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented four resolutions of the Felix Building and Loan Association, the Pannonia Beneficial Building and Loan Association, the Ellwood Building Association, and the Lester Building and Loan Association, all of the city of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation exempting building and loan associations from income tax where the income derived by a member from savings in shares does not exceed $500, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented four resolutions of the Women's Auxiliary, Donald McLeod Post, No. 336, American Legion, of North Wales; Quota Club of Scranton; Kiwanis Club of York; and Harrisburg Post, No. 27, American Legion, of Harrisburg, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented 45 petitions of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for physical education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILLIS presented five resolutions of the pastor and congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Dresden; the pastor and congregation of the Muskingum Presbyterian Church, of Dresden; the pastor and congregation of the Church of the Brethren of Fort McKinley, of Dayton; the pastor and congregation of the Salem Church of the Brethren, of Phillipsburg; and the pastor and congregation of the Church of Christ of Coshocton, all in the State of Ohio, favoring the calling of an international conference for the purpose of considering the question of disarmament, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented two resolutions of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Burdick, Lost Springs, Herington, and Delovan, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented five resolutions of the pastor and congregation of the First Congregational Church of Christ of Alma; the pastor and congregation of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) of St. Francis; the pastor and sundry members of the Central Congregational Church of Topeka; and resolutions adopted at the monthly meeting of Friends of Haviland, on June 6, and of Bethel Friends at Liberal, on May 27, 1921, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the calling of an international conference for the purpose of furthering disarmament, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRIS presented five resolutions of the Commissioners of Roads and Revenues of Fulton County, Commissioners of Roads and Revenues of Baldwin County, Chamber of Commerce of Dublin and Laurens Counties, Chamber of Commerce and Kiwanis Club of Dawson, and Commissioners of Roads and Revenues of Candler County, all of the State of Georgia, favoring the enactment of legislation to aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented three petitions of the pastor and congregation of the First Christian Church of Atlanta, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Decatur, and W. H. Major, president of the Evangelical Ministers' Association of Atlanta, all in the State of Georgia, praying that an international conference be called for the purpose of considering disarmament, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURSUM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bueyeros, N. Mex., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORBECK presented two concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of South Dakota, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Hon. C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of representatives.

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to cooperate with the Dominion of Canada in the enlarged canalization of St. Lawrence River for the passage of ocean-going vessels into the Great Lakes.

Whereas the Dominion of Canada has provided for the improvement of the Welland Canal connecting Lake Ontario and Lake Erie so that such canal will accommodate ships of 25-foot draft, 800-foot length, and 80-foot width, work on which improvement was suspended during the war and is now again being taken up and will be completed in the near future.

Whereas the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario can not be used by vessels of over 14-foot draft and 270-foot length; and

Whereas it is deemed to be a matter of great and vital importance to the United States that the St. Lawrence River be so improved that larger vessels may be accommodated and may move between the Great Lakes and the ocean: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition the Congress of the United States to take such steps as may be deemed best and most expeditious looking to the early improvement of the St. Lawrence River by joint arrangement with the Dominion of Canada.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the signatures of the presiding officers and chief clerk of the two houses, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

For the senate.

W. H. MCMASTER, President.
A. B. BLAKE, Secretary.

For the house.

LEWIS BENSON, Speaker.
WRIGHT TARBELL, Chief Clerk.

Dated at Pierre, S. Dak., this 10th day of February, A. D. 1919.

Filed in the office of secretary of state on the 11th day of February, 1919.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Secretary's Office.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed resolution, to wit, a concurrent resolution relating to national parks and monuments, was duly passed by the seventeenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota at the city of Pierre, May 17, 1921.

[SEAL.]

C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

House concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to pass a bill exempting the national parks and monuments from the provisions of the water power act of June 10, 1920, and urging that the Smith irrigation bill (H. R. 12466) be not passed.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring):

Whereas through the fine patriotism of that group of men comprising the Washburn Expedition of 1870 in setting aside their opportunity and right to file upon and profit by the ownership of the lands of the Yellowstone explored by them, it was made possible for the entire American people to have and enjoy, for all time, the marvelous beauty and natural wonders of that territory, and through their untiring efforts a law (section 2474, R. S.) was by Congress enacted in 1872 reserving and withdrawing from settlement, occupancy, or sale, and dedicating and setting apart as a public park or pleasuring ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, that territory now included in the Yellowstone National Park; and

Whereas under section 2475 of such law it was, among other things, provided that such public park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be * * * to provide for the preservation, from injury or spoliation, of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities or wonders, within the park, and their retention in their natural condition; and

Whereas by the passage of the water power act of June 10, 1920, commission of three members was created, with authority to issue licenses to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or any State thereof, or to any State or municipality, for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other project works necessary or convenient * * * upon any part of the public lands or reservations of the United States, such act specifically defining the term "reservations" and including within its meaning national monuments and national parks; and by such water power act of June 10, 1920, the intent and purpose of the founders of, and the statutes creating, the Yellowstone National Park will be subverted and annulled and the park itself thrown open to commercialization; and

Whereas by the terms of said water power act all national parks are similarly affected and the opportunity for the commercialization thereof thereby created; and it is evident from projects already proposed that the leasing of the water facilities of the national parks will be cumulative and result in their devastation and ultimate destruction; and

Whereas a plea had been made by Stephen T. Mather, director of the National Park Service, against the encroachment on the national parks by corporations seeking to develop water power and irrigation projects, declaring that the Federal water power act permits the invasion of the parks for power purposes, and that such development would destroy many of the scenic beauties within the parks, and urging that immediate action be taken on proposed amendments to the act which will exclude the national parks from the operation of said act; and

Whereas if it was not and is not the intent or purpose of Congress to permit the opening up of the national parks for commercial purposes, there can be no possible objection to the adoption of an amendment to said act, or the passage of a bill, which will exclude all national parks from the operation of said law; and

Whereas the Smith irrigation bill, H. R. 12466, now before Congress, is an added and even more serious menace to the preservation of the national parks: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota does, therefore, petition the Congress of the United States that such honorable body take prompt action to exempt the national parks and monuments from the provisions of the water power act of June 10, 1920, and that it do not pass the Smith irrigation bill, H. R. 12466; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of South Dakota be instructed to send a copy of this memorial to each of the Representatives from the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States.

CARL GUNDERSON,
President of the Senate.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary of the Senate.
C. O. BERDAHL,
Speaker of the House.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk of the House.

File No. 65748; Box No. 584: Concurrent resolution (house) relating to national parks and monuments.

Filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 26th day of February, 1921.

Secretary of State.
By GEO. F. SAYERS,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. NORBECK also presented 15 resolutions of Bryant Post, No. 37, American Legion, of Bryant; Auxiliary of Robert E. Kelley Post, No. 70, of Flandreau; Groton Post, No. 39, American Legion, of Groton; Leo Stover Post, No. 48, American Legion, of Rosholt; Garrette Harris Post, American Legion, of Mellette; Pedersen Post, No. 144, American Legion, of Belvidere; Women's Auxiliary to American Legion Post of Sisseton; Women's Auxiliary to the American Legion Post of Alpena; Ralph Leui Post, No. 135, American Legion, of Gettysburg; Charles Curry Post, American Legion, of Clear Lake; Hutchinson Post, American Legion, of Gregory; Edwin Hodgeton Post, No. 124, American Legion, of Dupree; Young Men's Booster Association of Sioux Falls; John Fonken Post, No. 113, American Legion, of Willow Lake; and Codington County Post, No. 17, American Legion, of Watertown, all in the State of South Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented six petitions of sundry citizens of Wolsey, Egan, Sioux Falls, Flandreau, Mellette, Brentford, Millboro, Colome, Firesteel, Isabel, and Jordan, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I have here a great number of telegrams and a vast number of letters from citizens of California praying that the republic of Ireland be recognized by this Government. I wish to present them and ask that four of them, each of which is brief, be printed in the RECORD, and that the others be noted.

There being no objection, the letters indicated were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1348 SHATTUCK AVENUE,
Berkeley, Calif., April 16, 1921.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
Washington, D. C.:

"I am charged by Congress to assure you that means will be found to establish your freedom in the fullest and amplest manner." (Benjamin Franklin to the People of Ireland, Oct. 4, 1778.)

The time has arrived for the recognition and redeeming of the foregoing pledge.

JOHN MCDONALD.

OAKLAND, CALIF., May 25, 1921.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As a native-born American citizen, who contributed three sons, all I had, to our country's defense, one of whom, Sergt. G. C. Ahern, Company L, Three hundred and sixty-fourth Infantry, was killed at Argonne, as well as putting all the money I had into Liberty bonds, I feel I may say that I am an American of the genuine type, and that my earnest desire should have some weight in shaping the policy of our Government; therefore I wish to express for myself and by proxy for my immediate family and numerous relatives and friends at their request, that you miss no opportunity to recognize the Irish republic as an independent nation and to protest in strongest terms the barbarous treatment by the British Government of the terribly outraged people of Ireland.

As you know, we may find many precedents in our country's history for such procedure, to say nothing of the fact that we were led to believe by our late President as well as by the British Government during the World War that we were fighting for the freedom of small nations. How long would we hesitate if the offender were some other than the British Government? Why can't we be consistent?

Respectfully,

D. J. AHERN,
2010 East Sixteenth Street.

1322 FIFTEENTH STREET,
Santa Monica, Calif., March 12, 1921.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: In the name of humanity, in the name of decency, in the name of liberty, and in the name of the sacred memory of our thousands of brave men and women who died for the sake of freedom, I add my petition to that of every other justice-loving American citizen that you do all in your power to see that the Government of these United States recognizes the republic of Ireland.

Ireland is fighting a heroic fight for the freedom that we hold so dear and that we promised her, with all the rest of the small nations. We have kept faith with the other oppressed nations. Why not with Ireland, the most oppressed of all?

We would be insulted if anyone insinuated that we are afraid of England. But if we are not, what are we waiting for? Ireland does not ask us to fight for her. All she asks is that we keep our word to the world, and if we do that we must recognize her right to freedom. She deserves and must have our support; and you, as a representative of the people, are in honor bound to reflect the will of the people and uphold the honor and sacred duty of our country.

Very truly, yours,

ADELL W. FITZPATRICK.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 13, 1921.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE.

DEAR SIR: The United States Government has given recognition and assistance to various European Governments lately. Why discriminate against the struggling government of Ireland? The claim of Ireland is surely equal to that of any State in central Europe.

RICHARD POWER,
753 Lisbon Street.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE also presented petitions, letters, and telegrams from the following-named citizens of the State of California, praying that the republic of Ireland be recognized by the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

By Mr. TOWNSEND (by request):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 71) to amend section 3 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the 'Garabed,' claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy," approved February 8, 1918; to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENT OF FARM LOAN ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1811) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first amendment to the bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "amount," it is proposed to insert "and," and in line 4, after the word "terms," to strike out "and interest rate," so as to read:

That the first paragraph of section 20 of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $40, $100, $500, $1,000, and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize; they shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after the minimum period specified in the bonds, which shall not be longer than 10 years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 2, line 5, at the end of the bill, to insert:

They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5½ per cent per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 2, line 6, after the word "annum," I move to insert the following:

The income from joint-stock land-bank bonds issued after June 30, 1922, shall be subject to all graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Utah send his proposed amendment to the desk in order that it may be read by the Secretary?

Mr. SMOOT. I will send the amendment to the desk later.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the point of this matter is this: The joint-stock land banks and the Federal farm loan banks have been held up in their operations by the case which was pending in the Supreme Court of the United States for about a year. That case has been determined. The law has been held to be constitutional. The joint-stock land banks are unable to function, are unable to sell their bonds at a 5 per cent rate, in competition with the tremendous number of tax-exempt bonds bearing 5½ per cent, and even in some instances 6 per cent. Our effort in this matter is directed not to help the joint-stock land banks, but purely for the purpose of trying to help the agricultural situation. The profit of the joint-stock land banks now can only be 1 per cent gross, if they can float the bonds at 5 per cent, because, under the act they can not charge more than 6 per cent interest.

It is idle to talk about floating 5 per cent bonds, which are the basis of this system, and securing thereby money to loan to the farmers. It is true the Federal Farm Loan Board have succeeded in making a flotation of the present issue, but that has been due to an intensive campaign which they have carried on.

Mr. President, the farm situation in this country is known, I hope, to every Senator in this Chamber. It is certainly known to those of us who come from agricultural States. Agriculture needs credit in order to tide over the present emergency. We have loaned I do not know how many billion dollars across the sea; we have appropriated money to help those in distress in Europe; but the farmer, with the best credit on earth and the best security on earth, can not get money to finance his operations. That was the situation some years ago when the Federal farm loan act was passed. The mortgage rates the farmers had to pay had grown to a very high point, but he was willing to pay almost anything in order to get money. We enacted the Federal farm loan act for the purpose of allowing the farmer to obtain money on long-time loans. Under the joint-stock land banks the loans run for 32 years, I think, with an amortization program, so that at the end of that period the farmer will have paid the loan. He can not get the money through the Federal farm loan system unless the bonds can be floated. Whenever the joint-stock land banks can float the bonds at a less rate than 5½ per cent, of course, they will do so; it will automatically work itself out, because then the banks will receive more profit.

I realize that the question of tax exemption is a serious one, and I know how opposed the Senator from Utah is to the issuance of any more tax-exempt bonds. We have over $16,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities in the United States; that undoubtedly involves a serious question; but of that amount of tax-exempt securities all except about $480,000,000 are securities designed to help the cities. If we are going to stop the tax-exempt feature in connection with bond issues—and we may have to do that some of these days—we should not stop it where it is beneficial to agriculture and not stop it where it is beneficial to the city. The benefit derived from the tax exemption of course must be passed on, or is supposed to be passed on, to the agriculturist. He gets the benefit of it; the bank does not get the benefit of it.

There has been a great deal said against the joint-stock land banks as a part of the system; there is much prejudice against them. It has been stated on the floor that they have made enormous sums of money. Some of them have made some money, but I think the highest profit that has been realized is 11 per cent. The Senator from Utah said some months ago that the profits had run up around 21 and 22 per cent as to one bank, but on analysis I think the Senator will find that the figures cover a period of a couple of years. They have made nothing like the percentage of profit which the national banks have made.

Senators talk about this being a privilege. The Senator from Utah did so the other day, and of course it is a privilege; it is a special privilege to agriculture. We have given special privileges to national banks. They have the privilege of issuing circulation on securities held by them; that is a special privilege, and this is in a way a special privilege to agriculture. We have been accused, or some portions of the Republican Party at least have been accused, of standing for a good many special privileges. The tariff has been in the nature of a special privilege; railroad grants have been in the nature of special privileges; and now comes agriculture in the most depressed condition in which it has been in the history of the country, at least since the Civil War, and asks the Congress to have this system for agricultural credit put upon a functioning basis; that is all. The farmer is not asking any gifts, such as we have made to the people across the sea. He is simply asking for more credit, and this is one of the simple and easy ways of getting more credit to him.

If the restriction of 5 per cent is removed and 5½ per cent permitted, the farmer is to get his money at exactly the same rate of interest that he does now. The bank carrying it on cuts its spread from 1 per cent to one-half of 1 per cent, and these men from the Middle West who have interested me in this matter are not in it for the money. They are urging this thing and willing to get along with no profit in order to help the agricultural situation in the Middle West, and it is the same in the South.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. REED. I want to get the matter clear in my mind. The Senator states that if this bill is passed and 5½ per cent permitted, the bank will cut its spread or its profit to one-half of 1 per cent where it now receives 1 per cent. Where is there a provision of that kind in this bill?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator will have to take the old act. The interest is limited to 6 per cent under the rules established under the act. That is all they can charge.

Mr. REED. I understand.

Mr. KENYON. Now, they float their bonds at 5 per cent. That is the money they get to run it, under this system. There is a spread of 1 per cent, and that is a gross profit. They have to take out of that the expenses of running it.

Mr. REED. I was about to raise the question whether this bill ought not to permit 6 or 6½ per cent to be charged instead of 5½, but have the regulatory power placed in the central board; and, if the Senator will pardon me, I will say this: I am in full accord with him on the idea that higher rates of interest must be allowed if money is to be obtained, and that condition will exist until the general financial conditions change; and I am wondering whether 5½ per cent is high enough—not that I want to see the farmer have to pay more than that but because we may not be able to sell these bonds and get the money to loan to the farmer.

I heard of this sort of a case in my State the other day: It was stated to me that a farmer with lands worth even at present figures $40,000 had a loan of $10,000 which he was trying to renew even for a year, and had offered 8½ per cent and a commission, and up to the time I heard of it had not been able to get the money. It is to relieve cases of that kind that I am willing to permit a higher rate of interest, in order that the bonds can be sold and the money procured.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I am much obliged to the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. President, this system might have functioned all right in normal times at the 5 per cent rate. These, however, are not normal times, and it can not function now. The Federal farm loan banks have some advantages over the joint-stock land banks. Their bonds are sold presumably by the Government. There is a psychological advantage to that. They are cooperative in a way, and there is some advantage to that; so that the joint-stock land banks have really had to pay a higher rate of interest on their bonds than the Federal farm loan banks have had to pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he is seeking to put the private banks that are lending money to the farmer upon an equal footing with the public banks that are doing the same thing?

Mr. KENYON. Not at all. These banks do no commercial business. They make long-time loans. They do not do commercial business at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that perfectly; neither do the Federal loan banks do any commercial business. Now, why do you want to destroy the Federal loan banks by enabling these private loan banks to compete with them upon equal or advantageous terms?

Mr. KENYON. No one is trying to destroy them. Does the Senator mean the farm loan banks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Nobody is trying to destroy them at all. They are in the same act. They are under the same board.

They are the separate parts of a system. One covers loans of not over $10,000, the other covers loans up to $50,000. They are working together. There is no competition along that line.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question because I had noted, or thought I had noted, that they were not working together.

Mr. KENYON. They are supposed to work together.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The private loan banks have been working against the Federal loan banks for quite a long while.

Mr. KENYON. The joint-stock banks?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and have been sending literature to Senators, and I suppose to Congressmen, with a view of cutting down the special governmental privileges of the Federal farm loan banks——

Mr. KENYON. I never heard of it before.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The chief of which is, of course, that they are exempt from taxation as a Federal fiscal agency.

Now, I differ a little with the Senator upon one point. I do not think any debtor ought ever to tax his creditor on the note that he has given for the payment of his indebtedness. I do not think that the United States Government or that any fiscal agency of the United States Government ought to fix a tax upon a bond which is floated by them in the name and in the interest of the public, because if the tax exemption is not made there must be some tax come later.

Mr. KENYON. I do not understand what the Senator is driving at.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that evidently the Senator from Mississippi has confused the brokers on farm mortgages—farm-mortgage banks—with farm-loan banks. The farm-mortgage banks, which are private institutions making loans on farms, and so forth, in the West, have attacked not only the joint-stock land banks but the whole farm loan act, on the ground that under the farm loan act the bonds are exempt from all taxation. That is a different thing altogether. There is no conflict between the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks. They are both provided for under the farm loan act and are part of one system.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But are not these joint-stock banks private institutions?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; they are under the control of the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I understand that; but are not their bonds subject to Federal taxes and to State taxes?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all. They are exempt under the farm loan act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I have been mistaken.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is confused by the literature that is being sent out by the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. They are fighting this thing, of course.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is a private concern, attacking both the joint-stock land banks and the whole farm loan system.

Mr. KENYON. They are private brokers who are getting enormous commissions for the loans, and they are fighting the very thing which we are engaged in now, and sending out this literature.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the joint-stock banks are exempt from taxation under the same law as the Federal loan banks, then, of course, I am mistaken.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is mistaken. He rarely is, but he is this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 12 of the farm loan act provides that no loan on mortgage shall be made under the act at a rate of interest exceeding 6 per cent per annum, exclusive of amortization payments. That applies to the joint-stock land banks as well as to the Federal land banks. The limitation is there as to these loans; and the other provision of the act, section 20, which is proposed to be amended by the bill advocated by the Senator from Iowa, provides that the bonds issued under the act shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum. The Senator now proposes to make that 5½ per cent, because in that way the bonds could be sold; but he would not by that means at all increase the interest which the borrower would have to pay. That never can exceed 6 per cent; and allowing the bonds to bear interest of 5½ per cent does not mean that the joint-stock land banks can charge the borrower any more than they charge now. They are now allowed to charge the rate of interest which the bond carries, namely, 5 per cent, plus the cost of administration, which runs up to one-half of 1 per cent, as has been the experience heretofore. Now, by allowing them to fix the rate at 5½ per cent in the bonds they can sell the bonds where they can not sell them now, where they specify that the rate shall be only 5 per cent; but they can not charge the borrower any more than they charge now, 6 per cent. That is the limit under the law.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to take any more time, because I know that other Senators desire to speak, and I wish we might get through with the bill to-day. I only want to say this: The amendment of the Senator from Utah, of course, destroys this bill. It is intended to destroy it. The Senator from Utah is always frank about things, and he is opposed to this joint-stock land bank proposition, and if he can destroy it in that way it is just as well as to have the bill passed which he has introduced, and which was before the Banking and Currency Committee, to repeal the exemption. I am willing to have an amendment adopted to the effect that whenever the exemption ceases on the other securities with which these bonds must compete we will then let it cease on these bonds. That would be fair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, does the Senator think it is square and fair and honest for a great Government to tax its own promissory notes, whether in the shape of bonds or what not?

Mr. KENYON. We have granted the privilege of taxing Liberty bonds.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I owed the Senator money, and gave him a note——

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator think it would be square and right for me to reserve some degree of charge against him because he had extended me the credit of taking my note?

Mr. KENYON. I think the day is coming when we shall have to stop tax-exempt securities. It will take a constitutional amendment, of course, as far as the States are concerned, and that will be difficult; but it is drawing the money of those who have great amounts into these tax-exempt securities. This is not just the same as a bond that the Government is issuing. Does the Senator understand that the Government does not issue these bonds?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that; but the Government is behind them, and they are declared by law to be a fiscal agency of the Government as far as the Federal loan banks are concerned.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; the Supreme Court says so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that they are on exactly the same footing as a United States bond. Now, the United States Government comes to me and appeals to me to put up $10,000 and is indebted that sum to me, and then after that has passed it comes to me again and wants to tax me 1 or 2 per cent or one-half or one-tenth of 1 per cent, whatever it may be, upon its honest indebtedness to me. That is not honest. Nobody engaged in private business would undertake to do that.

Moreover, Mr. President, if the Government can float at par a 5 per cent bond, and can not float at par a 4½ per cent bond, then the difference of one-half of 1 per cent is what the people are paying for floating the bond; and if the Government can float the bond at par at 5 per cent, then the people escape that taxation of one-half of 1 per cent.

It is not honest, it is not fair, for anybody to borrow money of anybody else, and then afterwards exert a governmental function of taxing the person who has been good enough to lend the money, and lend the money at the time at par, when the man who lent the money knew that the bonds would be at a discount in less than a year.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. KENYON. I am not going to refuse to yield if the Senator wants to ask a question; but I would like to get through.

I appreciate what the Senator from Mississippi said; it is a valuable suggestion. But I want to get through, and the Senator can then take the floor if he so desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, the constitutional question of the power of the Federal Government to tax a State bond, or of the States to tax a Federal bond, is outside of this discussion. I am merely talking about the honesty of the Federal Government taxing its own bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. It does it right along, in the case of the Liberty bonds.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, we are doing that with the Liberty bonds. I just want to leave the question in this way: These joint-stock land banks have approximately $426,000,000 of tax-exempt securities, out of the $16,000,000,000 in the Nation. Agriculture contributes about 57 per cent of the primary deposits in the national banks, and borrows about 7 per cent. Mercantile and manufacturing interests borrow about 57 per cent, and contribute very much less than agriculture does.

So agriculture, which has great credit and ought to be able to marshal its credit, is unable to do it, and I think the great problem which agriculture in this country has to face is in some way to build up the right to use its own credit, and it is going to do it.

The big banks of New York and Chicago and other places draw from the smaller banks throughout the country and from agriculture to the Federal reserve bank, under their system of apportioning credits. One bank in Chicago has had more credit with the Federal Reserve for rediscounting and borrowing than all the banks of the State of Iowa. That is not a fair situation.

The farmers have gotten into a distressed situation. They want to have the acts passed by the Congress for their relief function, and see if they will not help them. The Curtis bill, passed the other day, is going to help them. They have a right, with all the interests which they have, with their stocks and their crops and their farms, to get some credit from the Government, or some assistance, when, according to the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board has said that we have $2,000,000,000 in gold reserve in this country.

I could talk a long while on this, and refer to the evidence taken before the different committees. The power which has been fighting this is the Mortgage Bankers' Association of the United States. They are the ones who have been flooding the country with literature. They are the ones who would profit by the defeat of this, because if these laws fail to function they can charge the farmers any rate they want to for mortgages, and they are doing it in many parts of the country.

You can loan money in my State, which is the strongest agricultural State in the Union, on farm mortgages for 7 per cent and a commission besides. Everything the farmer raises has gone to the bottom price, but the things which other people produce have not.

I am earnest about this, because I feel it is one thing that we may be able to do for the farmers, and not for the owners of these banks. They have shown a patriotic spirit in being willing to try to do business on a spread of one-half of 1 per cent, instead of the 1 per cent which they now have.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he intends to go on with the packer bill at 2 o'clock?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to go on with that bill at 2 o'clock. If the debate on the bill under consideration will not consume very much time, I would have no objection to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business. I would like to accommodate other Senators in that respect as far as I can, without unduly delaying the unfinished business.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will not be willing at 2 o'clock to lay the unfinished business aside?

Mr. SMOOT. That will take unanimous consent.

Mr. KENYON. I suppose unanimous consent can not be obtained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCORMICK in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	McNary	Stanfield
Ball	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Stanley
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Kellogg	Nicholson	Sutherland
Broussard	Kendrick	Norbeck	Swanson
Cameron	Kenyon	Norris	Townsend
Capper	Keyes	Overman	Trammell
Curtis	Knox	Phipps	Underwood
Dial	Ladd	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Dillingham	La Follette	Reed	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Lenroot	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Lodge	Shortridge	Watson, Ga.
Gooding	McCormick	Simmons	Watson, Ind.
Hale	McCumber	Smith	Williams
Harris	McKinley	Smoot	Wolcott
Heflin	McLean	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no desire whatever to prevent action upon this bill to-day, and if the Senator asks that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill. But I did not want to begin speaking and just get started and then be cut off. So if the Senator from Nebraska desires now, as it is within a few minutes of 2 o'clock, to ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily, I shall not object.

Mr. NORRIS. Before I do that I would like to inquire of the Senator from Utah, or any other Senator, if he can give me any idea as to about how long the consideration of this bill will take. I do not want to lay the unfinished business aside if the whole day is to be taken up with this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not give the Senator any idea as to how long it will take.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator any idea about the length of time that will be consumed, or has the Senator from Iowa any idea?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know of anyone who wants to submit any remarks except the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I do not expect anyone to give a guaranty.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator from Utah will indicate how much time he will take, we might be able to indicate how much time the other side will take.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator frankly that I do not expect to take very much time.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Chair to lay the unfinished business before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of discussing the farm loan bill, with the understanding that we shall resume the unfinished business if it develops later that the farm loan bill is going to consume too much time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment which I have proposed to the bill. In passing I wish to say that the remarks made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] with reference to the provisions of the bill as reported from the committee apply as stated by him, but my amendment in no way affects the amendments reported from the committee nor the bill as reported to the Senate. I have not asked that any part of the amendments which have been proposed by the committee as reported to the Senate be changed in any way. The amendment which I have offered reads as follows:

> The income from joint-stock land bank bonds issued after June 30, 1922, shall be subject to all graduated additional income taxes commonly known as surtaxes now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

The Senator from Iowa was correct when he said that I think the legislation creating the joint-stock land banks and giving them the privileges involved was a mistake, and it will not be many years until every Senator and every farmer in the country will realize it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to state to the Senator that I have a great deal of sympathy for the position he is taking. My own idea is that the creation of joint-stock land banks was a mistake. I feel, however, that under the present condition, particularly, of agriculture, it would be another mistake if we repealed it immediately.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, too.

Mr. NORRIS. I have a great deal of sympathy with the Senator's amendment, but it seems to me that he ought to extend the time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will extend it a year, if the Senator wishes; but I wish to say to the Senate now that every bond that is sold in the market by the joint-stock land banks could just as well be sold by the Federal farm loan banks.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit another interruption? I do not desire to take up the time, but since I have said what I have, I think I ought to make my position clear.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Briefly stated, it is that the Federal joint-stock land banks and the regular farm loan banks that are created by the farm loan act are two methods of mortgaging real estate, both of them having their securities or bonds exempted. The difference is that the farm loan banks are operated by actual farmers who live on the land and cultivate the soil that they own. It was intended to permit renters to become owners of homes and to encourage other people off the farms to move on the farms and buy homes. It has done a great deal of good, and I should like to help in every way I can.

In a general way joint-stock land banks perform an entirely different function. They enable men in town who are not farmers, who are holding land for speculation, to buy more land and increase their land holdings and then mortgage them, so that they come in competition in a way with the other loans; in other words, it enables the man in town who is not a farmer to buy out the farmers and get large tracts of land and the farm owners then become tenants.

The real object of the law was to get men to tilling the soil who owned the soil that they tilled and to make farm homes for them. I think the joint-stock land bank provision of the bill has had the opposite effect. I am not complaining about the man who holds the land for speculation, because that is perfectly legitimate and I am not criticizing it at all, but there is no reason why the Government should come to his relief. He does not live on the land. He is not a farmer. He is enabled to get cheap money by this tax-exemption feature and buy out the poor fellows who are real farmers and who ought to become owners under either provision of the land law, and if we were not in the condition that we are in now and agriculture in such a depressed condition that I would hate to do anything to interfere with it in any way, I would be in favor of repealing at any time that provision of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator, and the Senator has stated the differences——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Let me have just one minute and then I will yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I just wish to correct a statement of the Senator from Nebraska. He is mistaken entirely when he said the joint-stock land banks can loan for speculative purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say they have loaned for speculative purposes and I can prove it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then they are not following the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, not following the law? There is not a single thing in the law that prevents them from making large loans. They have made at least one loan of $78,000, taking from the money market in the United States money that should have gone direct to the farmer, while the Federal farm loan bank is limited to $10,000 in any one case.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator say that under the law a loan of $78,000 can be made?

Mr. SMOOT. I have in my possession a photograph of papers showing that such a loan has been made upon a place to build outhouses, to build sidewalks, to make a grand home. That man has made the loan, not as a loan to the man himself, but a loan to the man and some of his family.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes; there may be instances of that kind. There is a limit in the law as to the amount that can be loaned.

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-seven thousand five hundred dollars, and the Federal farm loan bank can loan $10,000, but the speculating bank owned entirely by individuals, whose bonds are exempt from taxes of all forms, can loan three and three-fourths times that amount.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, there may be instances of that kind, but very few, that enable the Senator to talk very loudly and learnedly about it. There are murders committed in Utah, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in every State.

Mr. KENYON. But that does not prove that a law against murders should not be enacted.

Mr. SMOOT. No; and the Government of the United States does not say to the man who murders, "We will protect you and exempt you from even paying any expenses whatever in any court by way of defense."

Mr. KENYON. There might be more murders if there were some such provision. There are banks that make mistakes and there are banks that do wrong in commercial banking, but that does not or should not condemn the system.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that these very joint-stock land banks advertise to the people of the United States the advantages that they claim to have over the Federal farm loan banks. Here is what they themselves say are the advantages, not only the advantages to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred, but others. Here is what they themselves say:

Advantages possible to borrowers from joint-stock land banks as compared with the borrowers from Federal loan banks are principally these—

These are the principal ones—

That the borrower from the joint-stock land banks is not required to make any subscription to the capital stock of the banks.

The farmer can not make a loan, nor can he receive more than $10,000 from a Federal farm loan bank unless he becomes a subscriber to the stock of the bank. These privileged individuals creating a joint-stock land bank are allowed to put a million dollars of capital stock in such a bank and then lend $15,000,000, and then sell bonds to the amount of $15,000,000 and make 1 per cent upon the transaction. In some cases they have owned lending institutions outside, and the men who wanted to make loans have applied to the joint-stock land bank and have been told perhaps that they could make a loan through So-and-so's institution, and it has developed that instead of 1 per cent, in many cases they have been charged another 1 per cent commission, and the people who have been interested in the other institution could get the loan when the original applicant could not.

Is that all? No. Listen:

That the borrower need not necessarily be engaged in the cultivation of the land on which the loan is sought.

Mr. KENYON. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. SMOOT. I am reading from the statement that is made through the joint-stock land bank of San Francisco, Calif., to the people of Utah, where they are asking subscriptions to enable them to establish a bank there.

Mr. KENYON. It is some particular bank.

Mr. SMOOT. This applies to every bank in the United States, as far as privileges are concerned. I do not care what joint-stock land bank has been created, under the law the banks owned by individuals have privileges over and above those of banks that are called Federal farm loan banks. The Senator from Nebraska was correct when he said that those loans were made for the very purpose of speculation in many cases, and, in fact, I think more often that is true than otherwise.

The Senator referred to a statement which I made here as to the profit the joint-stock land bank in Chicago had made. I want to say, Mr. President, that every figure which I quoted upon this floor in relation to that bank was furnished me by the Federal Reserve Board. Why should they not make money? Why should not the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Utah organize a joint-stock land bank? If we put in $100,000 we could lend $1,500,000, and when that was loaned we could pay ourselves a salary of $10,000 and could let the bank clerk take care of the collection of the 1 per cent a year for 33 years. We would not have to look for another loan.

Mr. FLETCHER. The money could not be loaned to the farmers at more than 6 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but from a list of farmers' loans in all of the Eastern States and in all of the Northern States it appears that the average rate for such loans is less than 6 per cent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The thing that disturbs me is how a bank with a stock of $100,000 can loan $1,500,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The law provides they may do so. The law gives them a right to sell those bonds in the market free from all taxation—State, school, district, city, and every other kind of taxation equal to fifteen times the capital stock.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa was correct when he stated that there were about $16,000,000,000 invested in tax-exempt securities. What is the result? When we passed the revenue law in 1918 imposing higher rates on income we collected from that tax $917,000,000 for the first year's business. On the next year's business we collected a little over $500,000,000. This year we shall collect only about $300,000,000. Why? Because the men who have been paying taxes upon the higher brackets of their income have purchased tax-exempt bonds. Why should they not do so? If a man's yearly income is $100,000 a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond is worth to him over 8 per cent; if his income is $300,000 a year such a bond is worth to him under the taxation laws about 15 per cent; if his income is over half a million dollars it is worth to him over 22 per cent. What is the effect? Instead of income being invested in business in this country it is tied up in tax-exempt bonds, and we are allowing individuals that privilege.

I wish particularly to call attention to the fact that there is a great difference between the Federal farm loan banks and the joint-stock land banks, but I must hasten on, Mr. President. This article further states that—

The borrower makes application for his loan direct, and is not required to become a member of the National Farm Loan Association.

The farmer who makes an application to a Federal farm loan bank must become a member of a Federal Farm Loan Association. Why should he not? He ought to be compelled to do so. Thereby he becomes interested not only in his own loan, but he becomes interested in the success of the whole system, not only in his own State but in every other State in the Union. In the case of the joint-stock land banks there is nothing of the kind. The borrower may make his application direct to the president of the bank; there is no one else to say him yea or nay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does the proposed amendment of the Senator from Utah, subjecting bonds of joint-stock land banks to certain classes of taxation, apply only to the proposed 5½ per cent bonds?

Mr. SMOOT. It only applies to bonds that are issued by the joint-stock land banks, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But that is not my question. Does the amendment apply only to bonds that pay 5½ per cent interest, or does it apply to bonds bearing 5 per cent interest, which have heretofore been issued?

Mr. SMOOT. It will not apply to any of the former issue, nor would it apply to any issue until after June 30, 1922.

Mr. KENYON. It would apply to all of the bonds. It would apply to 5 per cent bonds as well as to the 5½ per cent bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. After it went into effect on June 30, 1922.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would apply to all bonds issued hereafter, whether they were 5 per cent or 5½ per cent bonds?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it would apply to all bonds issued after that date. If the Senate thinks that the emergency is not going to be over in one year, I am perfectly willing to extend the period to two years.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I heartily agree with every word that the Senator from Utah has said, but he realizes the situation that exists to-day and the feeling of friendship which exists for the joint-stock land banks. He knows that representatives of these banks stated to the committee that in the present crisis they asked for the privilege of increasing the rate of interest to 5½ per cent in order that they might assist and relieve agricultural conditions. The Senator will see that the effect of this proposed law would be to cut off the profit.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. Without the passage of this bill, if these banks issue 5 per cent bonds they can make a profit of 1 per cent, while under this bill their profit will be cut to one-half of 1 per cent gross.

I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that I hope the pendency of this bill will result in inducing the Members of this body to give their attention to this question. I will say that I think that was one of the major reasons which induced the Committee on Banking and Currency to let the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not asking that the 5½ per cent provision be changed.

Mr. McLEAN. The joint-stock land banks, in my opinion, should never have been created; I think they are a menace to the Federal farm loan system. I think, as the Senator from Utah has said, they will compete as soon as they get an opportunity; and the danger is that they will so encroach upon the legitimate field of the Federal farm loan banks as to impair their usefulness. That is my opinion, but it seems to be difficult to impress that view upon those who are interested in this proposed legislation.

I hope the Senators who are present here will give the matter their consideration, because the Federal farm loan system is one that ought to succeed, and I believe it will succeed; I was heartily in favor of it when it was established years ago. We must remember that the industrial crisis growing out of the war is now being suffered by the American people and especially by the agriculturists. For this reason I think that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government to put the Federal farm loan system upon a basis where it can function, but that does not include the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely not.

Mr. McLEAN. The representatives of the banks assured the committee that if they were granted this increase they would sacrifice one-half of their profits for the purpose of assisting in the existing emergency; but, after the emergency is over, I hope that Congress will have the courage to remove the tax-exempt privileges from their securities. From my point of view it is economically wrong, and it will result in destroying its own purposes in the course of time. These are private institutions, organized for the purpose of making money; and I hope, if the Senator from Utah will consent to extend the time of his amendment another year, that the Senator from Iowa will accept his amendment and that the bill may then pass.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that suggestion is made now, but why can we not deal with that question later? If we are going to extend the time until 1923, why not wait until 1922 or something like that before attempting to legislate? Why legislate now for 1922?

Mr. McLEAN. For this reason: We have got the camel's nose under the tent now, and if we do not put the halter around him pretty soon it will be impossible to prevent his demolishing the tent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Senators proceed upon the hypothesis that the joint-stock land banks are private institutions. The law places them under the supervision of the Farm Loan Board precisely in the same way as the Federal farm banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Only so far as the law goes.

Mr. FLETCHER. They can not issue bonds to fifteen times the amount of their capital or anything of that sort at their pleasure at all; they can only issue bonds when they are authorized so to do by the Farm Loan Board; when back of them are mortgages to the full amount of the bonds, based upon a valuation of 50 per cent of the farm and 20 per cent of the improvements, all appraised by Government appraisers.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will allow me to proceed, I should like to get through.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the Senator from Utah pardon one suggestion in reply to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish the Senator from Florida would consult the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board in regard to this measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let the Senator ask them what they think about it.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not want to reveal any confidence, but I wish to say to the Senator that the Federal Farm Loan Board is concerned about the encroachments that may possibly be made by the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to make a prediction now that if the Congress of the United States does not take away the tax-exempt privilege from the bonds of the joint-stock land banks of the United States, those banks will destroy the Federal farm loan system.

Mr. McLEAN. I merely wish to add, in conclusion, that I welcome the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. I hope the Senate will have the courage to take the initial step now and put a limit upon the duration of the tax-exempt securities, because if that is not done and done in the immediate future it will be too late.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Utah, as he now has the floor. The suggestion has been made by the Senator from Connecticut, and affirmed very impassionedly by the Senator from Utah, that unless we put certain restrictions upon and begin to curb the joint-stock land banks they will absorb or destroy the Federal farm loan system. I should like to ask the Senator if he will not show us how that can be done, if he can do so within the length of time he intends to occupy the floor?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator read the report made by Secretary GLASS and Secretary Houston, of the Treasury Department, upon this very matter. I have recited here a number of particulars in which it is claimed that joint-stock land banks will have a greater privilege than have the Federal farm loan banks, and they will have.

Mr. SMITH. In what particular?

Mr. SMOOT. They can loan $37,500 to one borrower; and in one case I know they have loaned $78,000 on one piece of property. The borrower does not have to subscribe to the stock in making a loan from the joint-stock land bank, but the farmer has to subscribe for stock when he makes a loan from the Federal farm loan bank, and the bonds are sold in the same market under the some authority. The Government of the United States is responsible to the same degree for the payment of the bonds, whether they be issued by the joint-stock land banks or whether they be issued by these individual corporations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to indorse the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], that a compromise of this matter be made by setting forward to 1923 the date at which this amendment shall take effect.

Mr. SMOOT. I will perfect the amendment and make it 1923.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In doing that, I want to suggest another amendment in the interest of justice, and that is that when that date arrives these joint-stock land banks be relieved of the restriction upon the rate of interest that they may charge for their loans.

Mr. KENYON. How is that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That when that date arrives that their bonds become subject to this taxation, they be relieved from the restriction now existing in the law that they can not lend their money at over 6 per cent. If you take away from them the Government privilege, then you should take away the Government restriction on the rate of interest that may be charged to the farmer.

UMI

Mr. KENYON. The Senator means that they could charge the farmer any rate of interest?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They could charge a higher rate.

Mr. KENYON. That would destroy the very purpose of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather not mix up the two questions at this time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it ought to be done. I think now is the time to settle this matter, and it ought to be done by a compromise. I want to say to the Senator that, as he well knows, the insertion of the joint land banks into this law was due to the fact that we all had doubts whether the mutual banks would work. We felt that it was pretty doubtful whether the American farmer would go into the mutual-bank system; but the mutual-bank system has worked and is working, and that should now be the chief care of the Government; but having encouraged these joint-stock land banks to be formed, we ought to give them an opportunity and a reasonable time decently and in order to get out of their venture without a financial loss. I approve, at the same time, the Senator's suggestion that they should be in the future subjected to taxation upon their issues; but when that time comes we should relieve them of the restriction that applies to the farm loan banks as to the rate of interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the best way to do that would be this: On June 30, 1923, there should be a law passed providing that no more joint-stock land banks should be organized in the United States, but at the same time we should give every bank that is organized the full privileges of the law as it existed at the time the bank was organized. That is fair; and not only that, Mr. President, but some of them have already loaned fifteen times the amount of their capital stock, as the law authorizes them to do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I am impressed with the suggestion made by my colleague. I think, however, as I understand it, that he is not referring to the real difficulty. There is in the pending bill, as I understand, a provision that would prevent them from charging a farmer more than one-half of 1 per cent, instead of 1 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Now, the amendment of the Senator from Utah ought to have added to it, it seems to me, a provision to the effect that when the time arrives that their tax-exempt privileges expire the provisions of the pending bill preventing them from charging more than one-half of 1 per cent additional shall not any longer prevail, and let them operate under the old law.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me tell the Senator what is going to happen. What was this offer made for? Why, I know what it was made for. It was made, first, as they say, because of the emergency existing at the time; but, Mr. President, what these joint-stock land banks want is continued life, and the result will be that in a year or two, if no more legislation is passed by Congress, they will come back and tell Congress that it is impossible to do business on one-half of 1 per cent. Then they are going to remind Congress that they came to Congress with great liberality and because of their love of the farmer, actually asked a reduction in the amount of interest they were allowed to charge over and above the 5 per cent, and for that unselfish liberality they are going to ask us either to take off the one-half of 1 per cent or to add it onto the 6 per cent; and there is no man who can stand in the Senate and deny that the 1 per cent, if it were left, would be about right, particularly where money was a drug upon the market; not under conditions existing to-day. There is not a dollar in the United States but that would command to-day, outside of tax-exempt bonds, 7 or 8 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If this bill is what I understand it to be, I do not believe that it should be opposed by any Senator. The question which is now being discussed by the Senator from Utah involves an entirely different proposition, and one which, it seems to me, is not necessarily brought into the discussion of this particular bill. If I am able to understand this bill, it simply permits these farm loan banks to sell their bonds at a rate of 5½ per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Joint-stock land banks.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes. Now, it seems to me there can not be any objection to that if those banks are still required to loan the money to the farmers at the present rate, and the effect of this bill can only be to reduce the margin which the farm loan banks or the joint-stock banks would make in the transaction. This other broad question, it seems to me, if the Senator from Utah will permit the observation, might very well be left to a later date.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, that might be true as affecting existing conditions, but I anticipate that these 5½ per cent bonds, when normal conditions are restored, will go to a large premium, and it will be possible for these companies to issue their bonds at 5 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is what they will do.

Mr. McLEAN. And they will be enabled to make a large profit, and that they will do this just as soon as this emergency is past if we continue the tax-exempt provision.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, these banks are still restricted as to the amount of interest that they can charge. They can not loan their money for more than 6 per cent, if I understand the law; and by giving them a right to sell their securities at 5½ per cent we are simply giving them the privilege of reducing their margin of profit by 50 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, reference has been made so many times to "1 per cent." The law allows these banks to issue bonds to the amount of fifteen times their capital. Why not say it is 15 per cent? They do not put a dollar of money in and loan it, with the exception of the original capital. If that is a million dollars, under the law they can issue bonds for $15,000,000, and make 1 per cent upon the $15,000,000, not upon the $1,000,000 that they have invested.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the purpose for which I rose was to see if we could not reach the conclusion that the discussion of the advisability of having these joint-stock land banks should be deferred to some future occasion, because the purpose of this bill is simple; and there is not any doubt that if this bill is passed it will aid in loaning money to the farmers of this country at a reasonable rate of interest. That is the purpose of this bill, and it is the only purpose of the bill; and I submit that there is nothing in this bill to which any objection should be taken. If the Senator from Utah desires to abolish these joint-stock banks, that is another proposition. I am not certain but that he is right about that; but I do say that this is not the time to raise that question. We are simply seeking at this time to raise money so that these farmers can get money at 6 per cent; and whether the person who furnishes it to them pays 5½ or 5 per cent should not bother us at this time if the ultimate result is that the farmer gets the money at 6 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will allow me, Mr. President, this amendment does not interfere one iota with the rate of interest to be charged the farmer or the rate of interest at which the bonds can be sold. My amendment has nothing to do with that. But, Mr. President, it ought to be announced to the American people just as soon as it can be by the voice of Congress that these institutions, private in character, shall not enjoy the privilege of issuing bonds backed by the Government of the United States, exempt from every form of taxation, and the sooner that notice is given to the American people the better it will be for those men who are being asked to invest their money in that kind of institution.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I would like to get back to the practical question which we had up concerning the Senator's amendment a little while ago. If the amendment of the Senator were adopted, or even a 2-year period were fixed, would not this be the result: Bonds have been issued which are to run for 20 years. Mortgages, to run for 32 years, have been placed upon farms. The system is carried on interchangeably; you must have one or the other. You have a situation of mortgages out and nobody to look after them. The bonds are coming due in 20 years, and the institution which issued them has gone out of business. How could you expect anyone to buy bonds under those circumstances? Let us be frank about that. Would not the amendment absolutely kill the proposition? Nobody would buy the bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to be perfectly frank with the Senator. I have not a thing in the world to cover up in this matter. I am as earnest in the matter as a man can possibly be, because I see what is going to happen to the Federal farm loan banks of this country, and I am in full sympathy and accord with the object of those banks.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has no more sympathy with them than the rest of us have.

Mr. SMOOT. The bonds are issued, and the 1 per cent amortization takes care of the loan in 33 years, whether it is the joint-stock land bank or whether it is the Federal farm loan bank.

Mr. KENYON. What is going to happen at the end of 20 years, when the bond comes due, and who is going to look after the mortgage?

Mr. SMOOT. This provision will not interfere at all with any bond that is issued or with any bank which issues it.

Mr. KENYON. It would not interfere with the bonds that have been issued, but it would put the bank out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. Then you have bonds issued and nobody to look after them.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. McLEAN. Suppose it did put the bank out of business; the statute provides for the liquidation of these banks. The Senator will remember that at the last session a law was passed which permits any of these banks which are not doing well to go out of business, to liquidate.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a bank in the United States but what would take those bonds and pay the stockholders the interest as collected.

Mr. McLEAN. In reference to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], that at the expiration of the two years we remove all limit in regard to the rate of interest that these joint-stock land banks can charge, I question whether Congress ought to establish private mortgage loan companies, and give them the privilege of loan fifteen times their capital with no limit to the rate of interest they may charge.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to see that done.

Mr. McLEAN. I think it ought to be considered very seriously before we make such provision as an amendment to this law. I do not see that there is any practical difficulty in the liquidation of these companies, because it has been done, and I think the Senator will recall that within the last year three of these banks have gone out of business. I have no doubt that there would be no difficulty about that.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if that matter could be arranged so that there would be no question about it, I should not be antagonistic to an amendment providing for a reasonable period of time—two years or three years, something of that kind. But we have passed this law and we have invited people into these things. I am not speaking for the joint-stock land banks; I have been interested in it because of the agricultural phase of it. But you have to be square and honorable with those people who have gone into this and invested their money. If that can be taken care of, it might be that we could work out a compromise to handle this question.

Mr. McLEAN. Congress will take care of any situation of that kind.

Mr. KENYON. It is not fair to just boot these banks out.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to do that.

Mr. KENYON. That is what the Senator's amendment would do, it seems to me, clearly.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. If I had a suspicion that it would do that, I would not insist on it.

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator may feel that way, but the rest of us are entitled to some thought about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, as president of a bank, that I would like to make the collections on these bonds, at 1 per cent a year, and have the amount collected pass through the bank.

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator president of a bank?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I am president of a small bank in my home town, and I say here and now that I would be delighted to take such business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the proposition now is to increase the rate on these bonds to 5½ per cent, without increasing the limit of 6 per cent to the borrowers, and if the bonds are not selling now, when they draw 5 per cent, with all of the privileges attached to them, does the Senator think they will sell with the extra half per cent, the tax exemptions being removed?

Mr. SMOOT. A 5 per cent bond is being sold by the Federal Farm Loan Board; but I am perfectly willing that that should be 5½ per cent. I know what I am talking about, because I have talked to members of the board about it. But I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to make this 5½ per cent. I am not asking that any amendment offered by the committee shall be changed, not one. But I want to say to the Senator from Florida that it will not be many years before the holders of the 5½ per cent tax-exempt bonds will be able to realize on those bonds about $110 for every $100.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, that is a mere prognostication, and I do not know what it is based on. But what we are talking about now is getting money for the farmers.

Mr. SMOOT. My amendment would not stop that at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will stop it to a considerable extent if it puts these joint-stock land banks out of business. To repeal the tax-exempt feature as to their bonds would do that. But I will meet that when I get to it and have the floor. I am directly and positively and emphatically opposed to eliminating these joint-stock land banks, and especially unless you amend the law so as to allow farm land banks to increase their loans beyond $10,000. They are limited to $10,000. And I am prepared to give the reasons, which I believe will satisfy most people, when I get the opportunity.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the whole theory of the law was to lend money to the farmers to enable them to cultivate their land. As far as I am concerned, I want every advantage shown to the Federal farm loan bank.

Mr. President, if there is any money made by the Federal farm loan bank in the 1 per cent difference between the value of the bond and what the loan to the farmer is, the farmer gets his part of that gain; the farmer gets his dividend on the amount made over and above actual expenses of that 1 per cent. Why should he not? He is compelled to subscribe to stock, and he is entitled, Mr. President, to that dividend.

But with the joint-stock land banks the profit goes into the pocket of some individual, to whom the Government of the United States says, "You are better than all other individuals in the United States, and you can issue obligations with no power in cities or counties or States, or even in Uncle Sam himself, to impose a dollar of tax upon you."

I know the Senator from Iowa wants to do the right thing in this matter, and why not lay it aside now until we can see if we can not agree upon some proposition?

All I am trying to do is to carry out a policy which I know Congress will have to carry out sooner or later. I am betraying no confidence when I say that the Federal Farm Loan Board first brought this to my attention. I called on the board and saw the statements from these joint-stock land banks. I examined them. I saw what they were going ultimately to do to the Federal farm loan banks, and just as sure as we live, if they are not curbed and checked, and if they are allowed to go on the way they are going now, they will destroy the Federal farm loan system.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, did not the Federal Farm Loan Board admit that they made an error in that statement?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator refer to the Illinois bank?

Mr. FLETCHER. Regarding the profits made by joint-stock land banks.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never seen a statement from them that they made an error in the Illinois bank statement. I know a statement was made by way of explanation from the officers of the bank, and they came to my office and explained it to me. But, Mr. President, what happened, and what was the cause of the difficulty? Speculation, violation of the law! They wanted to cover it up, and when it was called to the attention of the board, the board made the statement as to the real situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course I do not know what the Senator refers to when he talks about speculation and that sort of thing.

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to just exactly what the officials or stockholders of the Illinois bank told me themselves.

Mr. FLETCHER. Was that the bank or the Farm Loan Board?

Mr. SMOOT. Both. It was but a few days after I made the statement upon the floor of the Senate, and read from the letter of the chairman of the Federal Farm Loan Board, that some of the officials of that bank from Chicago were here in Washington to see me.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, at the proper time, when we come to consider the relations of the joint-stock land banks to this system, and to show what they have done, and the reason for continuing them, I will be ready and able to go into that. For the present I am simply asking the Senator to yield for this statement, issued by the Farm Loan Board on April 30, 1921. It shows the total amount of business handled by the joint-stock land banks—and I can give the details if desired—but let us just take the consolidated statement of condition of the joint-stock land banks at the close of business April 30, 1921. It shows a total amount of assets, $100,508,489.11, and their undivided profits on all that business, net mortgage loans they made, amounting to $77,897,648.48, is given at $129,205.87.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, such statements as that made to the Senate tend to confuse the minds of Senators. That statement was made when a great many banks had been in business but a short time.

Mr. FLETCHER. The statement is dated April 30, 1921, and is by the Farm Loan Board.

Mr. SMOOT. But it has reference to the situation of the banks as a whole, not of the individual banks. I know there are banks which have been started up in different parts of this country which are not going to make very much money. There are banks, Mr. President, that come in contact with private concerns or organizations within States which can not get 6 per cent.

There is one other reason given here as showing the advantages of the joint-stock land banks over the Federal farm land banks, and it is this:

That the individual borrower may obtain any sum up to $37,500. Borrowers from the Federal farm land banks can not get more than $10,000.

That is true.

The Senator from Iowa has not yet answered as to whether he would like to lay the bill aside to see if we can agree upon an amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I feel this way about it: If Senators desire to kill off the joint-stock land banks, they may as well kill them now. I am convinced the Senator's amendment will do that thing. I wish the Senator would wait until the question can come up after we get through the trouble that we are in now. I have sympathy with many things the Senator is advocating, but it is perfectly apparent that when we put the banks out of business we end any sale of bonds. There is no use arguing that for a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. This does not put any organized bank out of business.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, of course it will.

Mr. SMOOT. It will very likely keep any bank from going into the business hereafter, but every bond that is sold, every obligation that is made to a farmer, will be carried out to the very end. This does not interfere with any bank in that respect.

Mr. KENYON. It seems clear to me that it does, and I am sorry I am so dense that I can not get the viewpoint of the Senator. The Senator is opposed to the whole system, as he has a right to be, and wants to destroy it. I think his amendment will succeed admirably in accomplishing that purpose. I am perfectly content to let the Senate vote on it, and to take the sense of the Senate on it. If they want to destroy it, all well and good.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say no more if we can have a vote upon it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair suggest to the Senator from Utah that the Secretary has not yet received the amendment offered by him.

Mr. SMOOT. I send it to the desk now. I will say to the Chair that I have changed the year to 1923.

Mr. SMITH. Let the amendment be read as now offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "annum" on page 2, line 6, to insert:

The income from joint-stock land bank bonds issued after June 30, 1923, shall be subject to all graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think this is rather too important a measure to be disposed of practically without any real discussion except the remarks of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in support of his own amendment.

In a time of normal conditions I do not know that I would not be in sympathy with the views of the Senator from Utah. If conditions were the same as those which obtained at the time the Federal land-bank proposition became a law, I think probably there would be very great force in the position of the Senator from Utah, but the situation originally calling for the existence of this form of a bank is not now by any means whatsoever what it was at the time of the enactment of the law. Even then it was very difficult for the agricultural classes of the country to obtain adequate accommodations through the commercial banks of the country; the funds of those banks were preempted for use in other industries and in speculation.

The situation with respect to this phase of our banking problem is very much worse now, so far as the farmer is concerned, than it has ever been heretofore. We have the statement from the Federal Reserve Board that there is a superabundance of money in the country just at this time, and that the Federal reserve banks have ample money to accommodate all the requirements of the business in the country. This is not the first time that observation has been made, not so directly, not so emphatically, but made in a way which implied the same thing, by the governor of the Federal reserve system. During all the months when the agricultural classes of the country have been striving for money with which to transact their business to protect their interests we have had the same statement emanating from the same source, that there was an abundance of money in the country. Probably it was true to the extent that there was enough money in the country to supply the people who could get that money, but the farmers have not been able to get it.

Mr. President, it is a matter of common knowledge in the agricultural sections of the country that farmers, without regard to the amount of security they might offer, without regard to their requirements or necessities, have not been able to secure money through the commercial banks. The situation of agriculture in the country at this time is a desperate one, largely because the farmers have not been able to get the money with which to grow their crops or to finance the exportation of their surplus crops. That situation has not grown any better. Business in many lines has improved, no doubt, but the condition of the farmers of the country is as bad to-day as it has been at any time since the armistice. Instead of the situation getting better it is getting worse; and the foundation of the distress which the farmers are experiencing at this time is largely because the commercial banks of the country either are not able or are not willing to assist them with the money necessary to carry on their business properly.

I know the situation which developed in my State early in the beginning of the present year. Farmers were unable to secure the necessary money to meet the mortgages upon their farms. Being pressed for payment and being unable to get money from the banks, they resorted to the insurance companies. There was one insurance company in my State, and I do not say it to its credit either, that had gotten together, I have been reliably told, $3,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds, which it offered to the farmers of the State in return for notes at par secured by mortgages upon their land, the suggestion being made that the Liberty bonds could be used to realize money. That amount was immediately taken by the farmers of my State, their notes and mortgages executed at 6 per cent interest, and they took in return Liberty bonds worth at that time 86 cents on the dollar.

I simply state that to show to what extremities the farmer has been reduced with reference to securing money to save his property from the hammer of the auctioneer and the sheriff. In every agricultural State in the Union I undertake to say the same situation has existed for the past six or eight months, and it is no better to-day along these lines than it was at the beginning of this era of difficulty. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] suggests to me, and I believe he expresses the truth, that the situation is worse now.

Yet we are told that the Federal reserve banks in the country to-day control $2,400,000,000 in gold and that in the vaults of those institutions, the member banks of the Federal reserve system of the country, there is an abundance of money to supply all the needs of the country. We are told that in the face of the fact that the farmers in the country to-day to my knowledge are paying not 6 per cent, the maximum amount that joint-stock land banks are permitted to charge, not 7 per cent, not 8 per cent, but nearer 12 per cent; and I have no doubt in the world that the information of Senators from the South, the same section of the country from which I come, and from the Middle West and the Far West will bear me out in this statement.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any other class of business in the country that is in as bad condition. I do not think the manufacturers of the country are having to pay such high rates of interest. I do not think the merchants of the country are having to pay such high rates. I do not think those people who are now borrowing money on time loans, even to speculate, are having to pay such high rates. Why has this condition been brought about? It is because the commercial banks of the country, the member banks of the Federal reserve system, the nonmember banks of the Federal reserve system, especially in the big cities, are using their money for the purpose of supplying the requirements of other industries than those of agriculture at this time.

I do not mean to criticize them. I suppose they are moved by the considerations which ordinarily move bankers. They do not regard farm paper as liquid; they do not regard farm securities as of a character that can be easily converted into money in case of defalcation in payment. They are right in that respect. The farmer is at a disadvantage in competition for money with other industries for the very reason that his paper is not liquid. It is not liquid because his crops are seasonal; he has money only during the season of the year when his crops are ready for the market.

The Federal farm loan bank was instituted by the Congress of the United States in response to a demand that came from one end of this country to the other that some special agency be created by the Government that would minister solely and exclusively to the requirements and the wants of the farmer.

Those of us who supported with zeal that proposition did so because we felt that the facilities of commercial banks were largely monopolized by other interests; that they were not specially adapted to the needs of the farmer with respect to long-term loans; and that it was, therefore, necessary to establish some special financial institution which would be adapted to his requirements and which would so function as to meet his needs. So, Mr. President, we created the farm loan banks.

At the same time we created the joint-stock land banks. The one bank accommodates one condition of the farmer, while the other accommodates another condition of the farmer. Federal farm loan banks can not lend to one borrower in excess of $10,000; but there are many cases in which the loan of $10,000 would be of no help to the farmer. There are many cases where such a loan would be sufficient; but there are more cases where it would be insufficient and worthless to him.

There is another qualification which limits the availability of the Federal farm loan banks to a limited number of farm owners and farm operators. The farmer must reside on his farm and must himself be a farmer in order to get the benefit of a loan from that character of bank; he has got to operate and own the farm.

Mr. President, there are in the southern section of the country—and I think the statement is also true of the Middle West whether or not it is to any extent in the Far West—an immense number of people who indirectly operate farms, who own large tracts of land, and who secure the cultivation of those tracts of land through tenants. Such a farmer, although he may own thousands of acres of land, may not himself operate a single farm nor cultivate a single acre of this land. He cultivates that land through his tenants. That is a bad system, I grant you, and it ought to be stopped, but it is common in the South. Is that man to have no protection through the banking system? He has none, except through the joint-stock land bank, because the terms of the law creating the Federal farm loan banks exclude him from the benefits of those banks. His tenants can not borrow because they do not own the land. So that vast area of land in the South, which is cultivated by tenants rather than by the owners of the land, would be deprived of all benefit under the Federal farm loan act if the joint-stock land banks were destroyed. It was the situation to which I have referred, Mr. President—and I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to that fact—as I understood it at the time, that suggested the creation of this additional character of bank with power to accommodate farmers who needed more than $10,000, and with power to lend to men who own farms and who operate them not directly but through the tenant system.

The amendment which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] proposes will beyond peradventure, Mr. President, according to my judgment, inevitably destroy the joint-stock land bank scheme. The Senator from Utah seems to be amused at that statement. The Senator has great confidence in his opinions; he does not think it will destroy them.

Mr. SMOOT. It will destroy them hereafter; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will destroy them hereafter; and the process of destruction will begin right now, from the date the amendment may be adopted.

Why do the possessors of the vast capital which is invested in the joint-stock land banks consent to have the interest which they may charge as the profit they make upon the investment of their money fixed by the Federal Government and limited to 6 per cent? Why is private capital to-day investing money and ready to invest more money in the joint-stock land banks with the United States saying to them, "You shall charge but 6 per cent interest"? It is for but one reason, and that reason is found in the fact that the Government says, "In consideration of your agreement to put your money into this venture, in consideration of your promise and assurance that you will help the farmers and provide them adequate money with which to cultivate their crops to enable them to feed the world—if you will agree to do that and agree that you will not charge a rate of interest in excess of 6 per cent per annum, we will exempt your bond interest from the income tax and from the excess-profits tax which the Federal Government imposes." That is the reason capitalists invest money in such enterprises. Can Senators conceive of any reason why they should desire to invest in such banks, in view of the limitation on the amount which they may charge as interest, and the fact that they are subjected to all sorts of Federal supervision, unless it be to get the benefit of this exemption? The money was badly needed in order to help the farmers. An institution adapted to the farmers' needs and the farmers' requirements was essential, and so the Government created these banks. It said to those who might invest their capital, "If you will furnish the money and agree to have your interest rate fixed at 5 or 6 per cent, then we will give you this exemption." Of course, if we now take that exemption away from them they will retire from the business.

Mr. President, I am not defending generally the privilege of tax exemption; I think, with the Senator from Utah, that just as soon as conditions will permit, it is the imperative duty of this Government to do what may be done constitutionally—if necessary, to amend the Constitution for that purpose—to put an end to the tax exemption benefit enjoyed by certain securities. Such securities are piling up day after day, month after month, and year after year, assuming all the time a more and more menacing volume. With the movement among the States and among the municipalities of the country to issue bonds for roads and all other kinds of public improvements, for industrial, educational, charitable purposes, all of which bonds are tax exempt under the present law, with the demands upon the Federal Government making it necessary that it shall go into the market from time to time in order to borrow money to carry on the great projects that in the near future it is going to be called on by the people to carry on, either itself or in cooperation with the States, no man can tell, if that movement continues, what enormous amounts of the capital of this country are going to be locked up in tax-exempt securities, thereby casting a heavier burden upon those who do not enjoy the privilege of clipping coupons. But right now I can not see why this one instrumentality, devised and provided by law to help the farmer, and which I have shown if destroyed will leave a certain class of farmers in this country without the help that the Congress intended to extend when it adopted the Federal farm loan banking system, should receive the first blow. Why do we begin this process of reducing the number of tax securities with the farmer as the first objective, the man who is in the most distress, the man who is in the direst need of help, the man who can not stand upon his own legs, the man who is appealing to the Government for help and who has a right to appeal to the Government for help, because his present distressful condition is due very largely to the usurpations of power by an agency of the Government, creating a deflation just at the time when he was about ready to market his crops, and involving him in a loss in six months of $8,000,000,000, thereby reducing him to poverty?

I have no hesitation in saying that the narrow policy of the Federal Reserve Board with respect to agriculture and agricultural loans in the matter of deflation and in the matter of restriction of credit at the wrong time, and going too far in both directions, coupled with the fact of their taking the lid practically off of the interest rate charged by the Federal Reserve Board, is largely responsible for the condition in which the farmer finds himself to-day. Now, when one agency of this Government contributes so powerfully to the farmer's embarrassments and to the predicament in which he finds himself, will you start in this process of destroying these tax-free securities by laying the ax to the tree which alone bears the monetary fruits that he now so badly needs?

Mr. President, I do not want to go into details in the discussion of this question of the farmer and our financial prices and system as they affect him and his interests. It is a big question, and one that I want a little bit later to discuss with some degree of elaboration and after some preparation, and not in the off-hand way in which I am speaking to-day. While under some circumstances I might agree with the Senator from Utah, I should regard the success of his amendment as destroying one arm of the farm loan system at a time when it needs both, cutting off all hope of supply from this direction to at least one-third of the farmers of the South, and I believe I might say one-third of the farmers of the West as well.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Utah will not prevail.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] seems to think that my amendment is going in some way to jeopardize the interests of the farmer. I can not see it for the life of me, but I do not want to do anything that will do that. I simply want to give notice now that this question will have to come before Congress. I recognize the fact that we have not time to discuss it thoroughly now. I recognize the fact that we could not get a vote directly upon the question if it is in the form of an amendment to this bill, and therefore I am going to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. I present the conference report on the second deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33½, 34, 36, 38, 39, 40, 45, 46, 50, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 72, 73, 74, 78, 91, 93, 98, 102, 103, 104, 109, 110, 111, 112, 115, and 118.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 15, 16, 17, 32, 33, 37, 43, 47, 48, 51, 70, 71, 75, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 116, and 120, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"General Land Office: For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Law examiners—4 at $2,000 each, 8 at $1,800 each, 20 at $1,600 each; 8 clerks at $1,400 each; in all, $65,600."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"For continuation of the investigation of structural materials, such as stone, clays, cement, etc., including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000: Provided, That as much of this sum as necessary shall be used to collect and disseminate such scientific, practical, and statistical information as may be procured, showing or tending to show approved methods in building, planning, and construction, standardization, and adaptability of structural units, including farm buildings, building materials, and codes, economy in the manufacture and utilization of building materials and supplies, and such other matters as may tend to encourage, improve, and cheapen construction and housing."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$336,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"For printing and binding for the Smithsonian Institution, including $26,702.70 for the National Museum, $10,000 for the Bureau of American Ethnology, and $5,000 for the annual reports of the American Historical Association, fiscal years 1921 and 1922, $41,702.70."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert "District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Sixty per cent of the sums contained in this section for the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 19, 21, 41, 42, 49, 67, 68, 69, 76, 86, 88, 89, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 105, 106, 107, 108, 113, 114, 117, and 119.

F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the report as read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, this is a partial report.

Mr. WARREN. I have here several amendments of the House that I shall move to concur in, with another amendment on which I shall ask a further conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But what I mean is that the Senator moves to concur in the report, and it is only a partial report. The Senator wishes to concur in it as far as it goes?

Mr. WARREN. So much of it as has been read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the report cover the items that were not deficiency items at the end of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Very largely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can the Senator point them out?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will speak of some particular one, I think I can.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As the report is not published, and I can not follow it, I want to know what we are voting on. What items in the back part of the bill that were for 1922, and not deficiency items, are left in disagreement in the report.

Mr. WARREN. So many of them as were supposed to transgress the lately adopted rule of the House had to go back to the House, not for amendment but for acceptance. Those have been largely accepted, and come back to us here with a list that I will give in a few moments; but very generally, of course, in the matter of these amendments, we agreed. We struck out the $50,000,000 that we had added on this side, and some of the other amendments for 1922; for instance, the hospitals were agreed to on the House side. There was the matter of passport agencies at various points, also agreed to on the House side, and the public schools as a whole were agreed to on the House side as the Senate had inserted them, all of which, of course, are 1922 amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to ask about the 1922 items in the House bill, did he not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate committee struck out all the 1922 items and put them back at the end of the bill to separate them from the deficiency items. There were a large number of important items there, and I wanted to know what was in the report and what was in disagreement before we came to a vote. I just wanted to know the status.

Mr. WARREN. I may assure the Senator that almost every one of those matters that came over from the House was finally agreed to. I do not recollect one now that was not finally agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the conference report agrees on all the matters as to which the Senate committee originally took issue with the House?

Mr. WARREN. We have had a full agreement on all of those items.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The items in dispute are Senate items?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
June 8, 1921.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 19, 21, 41, 42, 49, 67, 68, 69, 88, 94, 97, 99, 101, 107, 108, and 117 to the bill (H. R. 6300) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes," and agrees to the same;

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: After the sum "$10,000" in said amendment, insert the following:

": Provided, That no part of this appropriation or of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1922 for this bureau shall be available for the payment of any salary at a rate of compensation exceeding the rate paid on July 1, 1920, except the chief of the bureau, whose salary shall not be in excess of the rate of $7,500 per annum."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to transfer, without payment therefor, to the Government Printing Office, one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$75,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 15 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the following: ", $10,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD.

"The duties and powers conferred upon the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board by chapter 15 of the Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918, with respect to the expenditure of the appropriations made therein are extended and made applicable to the appropriations for similar purposes made in this act;

"For expenses of the board, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, books of reference and periodicals, printing and binding, traveling, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1922, $25,000;

"For assisting the States in protecting the military and naval forces of the United States against venereal diseases, fiscal year 1922, $200,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in assisting reformatories, detention homes, hospitals, or other similar institutions in the maintenance of venereally infected persons;

"In all, Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, $225,000."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

"Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, fiscal year 1922, $10,000.

"Division of Printing and Stationery: Clerks—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; multigraph operators—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; skilled laborer, $840; 4 laborers, at $720 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; in all, fiscal year 1922, $11,380.

"Division of Mail and Files: Distributing clerk, $1,400; reading and routing clerk, $1,400; assistant file clerk, $1,100; assistant mail messenger, $900; in all, fiscal year 1922, $4,800."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

"For salaries, fiscal year 1922, at annual rates of compensation as follows: Clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each, 5 at $1,400 each; clerk-counters—2 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; 2 messengers at $840 each; in all, $37,880.

"The Comptroller of the Currency may designate a national-bank examiner to act as chief of the examining division in his office."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 100, and agrees to the same with the following amendment:

In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following words: "at a limit of cost not to exceed."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"WAR DEPARTMENT.

"Office of the Secretary: For additional amount required for the salary of the Assistant Secretary of War, in accordance with section 5a of the act 'To amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice,' fiscal year 1922, $5,000.

"Water system, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii: For installation of a pipe line to replace the present water main from Koolau Reservoir to Schofield Barracks, fiscal year 1922, $600,000.

"Quartermaster Corps: To complete the acquisition of land required for the Infantry School at Camp Benning, Ga., there may be expended from the appropriation 'General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps,' for the fiscal year 1919 the sum of $400,000, which amount shall be in addition to the sum of $515,252, the expenditure of which for the same purpose was authorized by the act approved February 28, 1920, entitled 'An act to amend the Army appropriation act of 1920, and for the purchase of land and to provide for construction work at certain military posts, and for other purposes.' The said sum of $400,000 herein authorized to be expended shall remain on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation 'General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps, 1919,' until June 30, 1922."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

In line 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "and," insert the word "of," and in line 13 strike out the following: "in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

"BUREAU OF FISHERIES.

"Expenses of advisory committee: For the expenses of an advisory committee of not to exceed two members from the Atlantic coast, two members from the Pacific coast, and four members from the inland waters, Great Lakes, and Alaskan sections of the United States, to be designated from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce, to consist of men prominently identified with the various branches of the fishery industry, qualified in aquatic research, and experienced in fish culture, who shall visit the Bureau of Fisheries at such times as the Secretary of Commerce may deem necessary and report to the Secretary of Commerce on the conditions and needs of the service, the members to serve without compensation, but to be paid the actual expenses incurred in attending the meetings, fiscal year 1922, $2,500."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

"Not more than $25,000 of the appropriation for 'Promoting commerce, Department of Commerce, fiscal year 1922,' may be used for personal services in Washington, D. C.

"Commercial attachés: The appropriation for 'Commercial attachés, fiscal year 1922,' shall be available for the compensation of a clerk or clerks for each commercial attaché at the rate of not to exceed $2,500 per annum for each person so employed. And not to exceed two commercial attachés employed under said appropriation may be recalled from their foreign posts and assigned for duty in the Department of Commerce without loss of salary."

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

"In order to keep the expenditures within or under the appropriations for the fiscal year 1922 for printing and binding, the heads of the various executive departments and Government establishments are hereby authorized to discontinue the printing of any annual or special reports under their respective jurisdiction: Provided, That where the printing of said reports is discontinued, the original copy thereof shall be kept on file in the offices of the heads of the respective departments or Government establishments for public inspection."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 76, 86, 89, 92, 95, 96, 100, 105, 106, 113, 114, and 119.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Now I move, Mr. President, that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, insist on said Senate amendment, and ask a conference thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. GLASS as conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that House bill 6320, the unfinished business, may now be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Federal live stock commissioner act."

TITLE I.—DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 2. When used in this act, unless the context indicates otherwise—

The term "person" includes a partnership, a corporation, or an association of two or more individuals, and the members of a partnership or the directors, officers, receiver, or other person charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a corporation, partnership, or association.

The term "commissioner" means the Federal live stock commissioner created by this act.

The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

The term "commerce" means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory or possession of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory or possession and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State, Territory, possession, or foreign nation.

The term "live stock" means live or dead cattle, sheep, and swine.

The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and owned or controlled by a packer.

The term "stockyard" means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market and consisting of pens or other inclosures, and their appurtenances, in which live cattle, sheep, and swine are received, held, and sold for shipment or slaughter in commerce.

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering of live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce, or of marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

The term "operator" means any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard in which live stock is handled in commerce, and any trader or commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

The term "registrant" means any person to whom a certificate of registration has been duly issued under the provisions of section 25 and whose certificate remains in full force and effect.

The term "corporation" includes any public, quasi public, or other corporation or cooperative association, and any agency controlled or operated by any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States or any political subdivision thereof.

TITLE II.—POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMISSIONER.

SEC. 3. There shall be in the Department of Agriculture a Federal live stock commissioner, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $7,500 a year, payable monthly.

The commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary, shall administer and enforce the provisions of this act, and the rules, regulations, and orders issued hereunder.

The commissioner shall not be directly or indirectly interested in the business of any packer or operator. The commissioner may be removed by the President or by concurrent resolution of Congress for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.

SEC. 4. The commissioner is authorized to appoint such officers, employees, and agents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and to make such expenditures for rent, furniture, office equipment, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, stationery, motor-propelled vehicles or trucks used for official purposes, traveling expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4 for officers, agents, and other employees, and for other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, as may be necessary efficiently to execute the purposes of this act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time. All such appointments of officers, employees, and agents shall be made from lists of eligibles supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil service law.

The principal office of the commissioner shall be in the District of Columbia, but he may exercise all his powers at any other place. The commissioner may prosecute any inquiry necessary in connection with his duties in any part of the United States. The powers and duties conferred or imposed upon the commissioner by this act may be exercised by him through such agency or agencies as he may designate, subject to the approval of the Secretary.

SEC. 5. The commissioner, the courts, and all persons shall have the same powers, rights, remedies, and duties with respect to all persons subject to investigation or regulation under this act, and heretofore subject to the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, and such persons heretofore subject to such act shall, except as otherwise provided in this act, have the same obligations, duties, liabilities, and rights as are conferred or imposed by such act on the Federal Trade Commission, the courts, and such persons. All hearings shall be open to the public. Upon the taking effect of this act the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, in so far as it relates to live stock and live-stock products, in domestic commerce, shall be terminated, except in such cases where the Federal Trade Commission is directed to make an investigation by the President, the Secretary of Agriculture, or either branch of Congress.

SEC. 6. The commissioner, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to, the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock or live-stock products, including operations of and the ownership of stockyards. He shall likewise compile and furnish to producers, consumers, or distributors by means of regular and special reports, or by such other methods as he deems most effective, information respecting the condition of the live-stock market and the supply, demand, prices, and other conditions affecting the market.

SEC. 7. The commissioner shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, records, and correspondence relating to any matter under investigation. The commissioner or any examiner designated by him may sign subpœnas, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such books, papers, records, and correspondence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpœna, the commissioner may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such books, papers, records, and correspondence.

Such court may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the commissioner, or to produce books, papers, records, and correspondence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

SEC. 8. The commissioner may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation under this act at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the commissioner having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce books, papers, records, and correspondence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce such evidence before the commissioner, as hereinbefore provided.

Witnesses summoned before the commissioner, or any examiner, as herein authorized, shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the person taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like depositions or services in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying, or from producing books, papers, records, or correspondence before the commissioner in obedience to the subpœna of the commissioner on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence before the commissioner in obedience to a subpœna issued by him: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution for perjury committed in so testifying.

SEC. 9. Any agent or employee of the commissioner who, without his authority, unless directed by a court of competent jurisdiction, makes public any information obtained by the commissioner shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 10. The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

SEC. 11. The several departments and agencies of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish to the commissioner, upon his request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any person subject to any of the provisions of this act and shall from time to time detail to the commissioner such officers and employees as the President may direct.

TITLE III.—DUTIES OF PACKERS AND OPERATORS.

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any packer to—

(a) Engage in any unfair, or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce; or

(b) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers, or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce; or

(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce; or

(d) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to apportion territory for carrying on business, or to apportion purchases or sales of any live stock or live-stock products, or to control prices thereof in commerce; or

(e) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to engage in any course of business or to do any act for the purpose of preventing any person from carrying on a competitive or similar business in commerce; or

(f) Otherwise act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or abet the doing of any act, contrary to the provisions of this act, or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to refuse, neglect, or fail to act in accordance with the provisions of this act; or

(g) Otherwise act or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or aid or abet the doing of any act, or to refuse, neglect, or fail to act contrary to the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders made hereunder.

SEC. 13. After two years from the date when this act becomes effective, no packer engaged in commerce shall own or control or have any interest in, directly or indirectly, by community of stock ownership or otherwise, any stockyard, unless the commissioner shall determine that such ownership or control or interest is not in violation of the purposes of this act or that such packer has been unable, despite due diligence, to dispose of such ownership or control of or interest in such stockyard, in which case the commissioner may, by order, extend the period during which such ownership, control, or interest may continue.

SEC. 14. No operator shall engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce, or charge, collect, receive, or demand any unreasonable charge or rate for any service in commerce performed in connection with the business of such operator.

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may after hearing, upon complaint or upon his own initiative, determine and fix, and by rule, regulation or order prescribe, fair and reasonable practices, charges and rates to be observed by operators, and fair and reasonable terms and conditions upon which the services of operators in commerce shall be rendered or performed.

SEC. 15. It shall be the duty of every packer and operator to comply with the provisions of this act, and the rules, regulations, and orders which the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe in conformity with this act.

SEC. 16. Every operator and packer engaged in commerce shall keep such records and statements of account, and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as the commissioner shall require, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in its business, and the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherwise, in such form and at such times as the commissioner shall by order require. The commissioner may, in his discretion, prescribe uniform systems of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, or of verifying any such reports or returns, any officer or agent of the Government designated by the commissioner may, during the usual hours of business, enter and inspect any place used by any packer or operator in its business, and examine any books, papers, records, or correspondence relating to such business.

SEC. 17. For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act and in order to provide information for the use of Congress, it shall be the duty of any packer or operator, or any officer, agent, or employee of such packer or operator, when requested by an officer or agent of the Government designated in accordance with the provisions of this act, to answer correctly to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, as may be required, all questions touching his knowledge of any matter authorized to be investigated under this act, or to produce any books, papers, records, or correspondence in his possession or under his control relating to such matter. Any packer or operator, or any officer, agent, or employee of such packer or operator, who, within a reasonable time prescribed by the officer or agent making the request, not exceeding 30 days from the date of the receipt of the request, willfully fails or refuses to answer such questions or to produce such books, papers, records, or correspondence, or who willfully gives any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Any information secured under this act, except secret processes or formulas, shall be available for the use of either House of Congress at its request, and the commissioner may cause such information to be published from time to time when deemed necessary.

SEC. 18. Any person who willfully—

(a) Fails or refuses to make full and true entries, or makes any false entry in the accounts or records required to be kept by a packer or operator; or

(b) Alters, mutilates, conceals, or destroys any such account or record; or

(c) Makes any false or fraudulent statement in a return or report required under this act; or

(d) Hinders, obstructs, or resists any duly authorized officer or agent of the Government in the performance of his duties under this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Each day during any part of which a condition, practice, omission, or course of action punishable under this section is maintained or continued shall constitute a separate violation thereof and shall be punished as a separate offense.

SEC. 19. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any agent, officer, or other person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, partnership, association, or corporation as well as that of the person.

TITLE IV.—PROCEDURE FOR VIOLATIONS.

SEC. 20. Whenever the commissioner believes that any packer or operator is violating any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall cause notice in writing to be served upon such packer or operator, specifying the alleged violations, and requiring such packer or operator to attend and testify at a hearing before him at a time and place designated therein; and at such time and place the commissioner shall afford to such packer or operator a reasonable opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. If, after such hearing, the commissioner finds that such packer or operator has violated any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall make a report in writing in which he shall state his findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on such packer or operator an order requiring such packer or operator to cease and desist from continuing such violations. The testimony taken at the hearing before the commissioner shall be reduced to writing and filed in the records of the Department of Agriculture. Until a transcript of the record in such hearing shall have been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the commissioner may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as he shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by him.

SEC. 21. An order requiring a packer or operator to cease and desist from violating any provision of this act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, shall be final and conclusive unless within 30 days after service the packer or operator appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the commissioner's order be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such packer or operator will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the commissioner, and he shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the packer or operator, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the commissioner, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such court may affirm or set aside the order of the commissioner or may direct him to modify his order. No such order of the commissioner shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such packer or operator for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of the commissioner.

If the court determines that the just and proper disposition of such an appeal requires the taking of additional evidence, the court shall order such additional evidence to be taken before the commissioner in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The commissioner may modify his findings as to the facts, or make new findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file such modified or new findings and his recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order with the return of such additional evidence. If the circuit court of appeals affirms or modifies the order of the commissioner, its decree shall operate as an injunction to enjoin the packer or operator, and its officers, agents, and employees from further violating the provisions of the order or modified order.

SEC. 22. The United States circuit court of appeals shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review such orders of the commissioner, and may affirm, modify, or set aside any such order of the commissioner; but the decree of such court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, if such writ is duly applied for within 60 days after entry of the judgment or decree complained of, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 23. Any packer or operator, or any of his or its officers, directors, agents, or employees, who fails, neglects, or refuses to obey any order of the commissioner issued under the provisions of section 20, or such order as modified, after such order, or such order as modified, has been sustained by the courts, as provided herein, or in case such order, or such order as modified, has been sustained by the circuit court of appeals, and no writ of certiorari has been applied for within 60 days thereafter, after the expiration of such period, or after the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition in the circuit court of appeals to set aside such order, in case no such petition has been filed within such time, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months or more than five years, or by a fine of not less than $500 or more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 24. The commissioner shall report any violation of this act or of any rule, regulation, or order made hereunder to the Attorney General of the United States, who shall cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay.

TITLE V.—VOLUNTARY REGISTRATION OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS.

SEC 25. (a) The commissioner may, upon application by any individual, partnership, corporation, or municipality, issue to such applicant a certificate of registration to engage in or carry on, under this section the business, whether in interstate or foreign commerce, or both, of conducting or operating stockyards, or slaughtering live stock, or processing, preserving, or storing live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs, provided that—

(1) The location, character, and extent of grounds, buildings, and other facilities provided or to be provided by the applicant are found suitable and adequate for the proper conduct of the business sought to be registered; and

(2) The financial resources, credit, and standing of the applicant are sufficient to assure the safe conduct of the business; and

(3) The applicant agrees as a condition to the granting of the certificate of registration to comply with and abide by the provisions of this section and the rules, regulations, and orders made hereunder. The certificate shall not be assignable, except with the approval of the commissioner, and shall be valid for such period as may be prescribed in rules and regulations made by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) It shall be the duty of every registrant—

(1) To provide and maintain or secure, when necessary and practicable, adequate railroad connections with its place of business;

(2) To furnish the services and facilities of its business on fair and reasonable terms and without unjust discrimination to persons applying for such service and facilities: Provided, That it shall set aside such portion of the facilities of its business, as determined by the commissioner, as may reasonably be necessary to accommodate small shippers and local patrons;

(3) To impose only such charges and rates as are reasonable for the service or facility afforded;

(4) To exercise such care of the live stock, live-stock products, perishable foodstuffs handled by it as may be necessary to prevent undue loss in connection therewith;

(5) To maintain sanitary conditions in the conduct of its business;

(6) To refrain from unfairly discriminatory or deceptive practices or devices in the conduct of its business;

(7) To keep complete and accurate accounts and records of its business and to submit reports when called for and in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner; and

(8) Otherwise to conduct its business in such manner as may be prescribed in rules, regulations, and orders issued under this section by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to carry out the purposes hereof.

(c) Reports of registrants, when filed with the commissioner, shall be open to public inspection. The commissioner may from time to time cause inspections to be made of the places of business and operations of registrants to determine their compliance with the provisions of this section and the rules, regulations, and orders issued hereunder.

(d) It shall be the duty of the commissioner to:

(1) Furnish to registrants reports embodying existing knowledge concerning satisfactory and economical appliances and methods of food preservation by cold storage, freezing, cooking, dehydration, or otherwise, and of all improvements in the art, and to detail persons experienced in such art to consult and advise with registrants;

(2) Cooperate with registrants in procuring for them adequate services by common carriers, by rail or otherwise, including provision for special cars needed in the proper transportation of live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs;

(3) Furnish to registrants all available information as to supplies of foodstuffs handled by such registrants and the location and movement and transportation costs of such foodstuffs; and

(4) As far as practicable, when requested by any such registrant, provide for the inspection by agents of the commissioner of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such registrant to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof, and for the issuance by such agents of certificates showing the results of such inspection; and in the conduct of such inspections to cooperate with duly authorized local authorities. Such certificates shall be accepted in the courts of the United States and of the States as prima facie evidence of the quality, quantity, or condition at the time and place of inspection of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs covered thereby.

(e) No registrant shall take title to any products handled by such registrant. The commissioner shall administer and enforce the provisions of this section and of all rules, regulations, and orders which he may issue hereunder.

(f) Any certificate of registration issued under this section may be suspended or revoked by the commissioner for any violation of this section or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, under such procedure as the commissioner may prescribe. Every person who shall forge, alter, counterfeit, or, without proper authority, use any certificate of registration issued under this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

TITLE VI.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 26. Nothing contained in this act, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the enforcement of or the procedure under the provisions of the antitrust acts, the acts to regulate commerce, the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, the act entitled "An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes," approved April 10, 1918, or sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1894, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" approved February 12, 1913, or with any investigation, proceeding, or prosecution begun and pending at the time this act becomes effective, nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal such acts or any part or parts thereof, except as specifically provided in this act.

SEC. 27. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 28. This act shall become effective, except as otherwise provided herein, on and after its passage.

SEC. 29. The sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, for carrying out the provisions of this act, including the compensation of attorneys, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees, and expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, and other supplies and equipment as the commissioner may find necessary.

SEC. 30. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is but one amendment, although that amendment is an entire bill. I think probably I ought to explain to the Senate the present parliamentary situation of the bill.

The pending measure is a House bill, and there is pending a committee amendment to strike out all of the House bill after the enacting clause, and insert the bill as passed by the Senate at the former session.

The investigation of the packing industry, which the bill seeks to control, was commenced over two years ago by the Senate Committee on Agriculture. At that time we conducted an investigation which lasted six or eight weeks, the committee sitting morning and afternoon. I think it was the most exhaustive investigation of the subject ever made by a committee of either branch of Congress. It was absolutely unlimited. There was no limit as to the people who were allowed to appear, and no time limit was put upon the testimony of anyone. There were witnesses from all over the United States. The so-called Big Five were all present, and their principal officers testified. They had with them an army of assistants, experts, auditors, and so on, and I think nearly all of them were represented during the entire hearings by attorneys. A large number of so-called small packers also appeared, and commission men from all the commission houses in the United States, practically, were there. They were all permitted to testify without limit, and the investigation closed only after everybody was willing to quit.

At that time, Mr. President, the committee did not have before it the bill now pending. In fact, I do not remember now just what bill or resolution was pending under which the investigation was made, but the committee went into all details of the meat-packing industry, into every ramification. Out of that investigation came the so-called Kenyon bill and the so-called Kendrick bill, introduced some time after the investigation was closed. A great many conferences were held by members of the Committee on Agriculture, between themselves, and also with other people.

In the next Congress those bills were introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], being practically the same measure, and hearings were again had on those bills. Personally, Mr. President, I did not attend the hearings which were held the second time, but during the first investigation I have mentioned as being exhaustive, I was there practically all the time. In fact, the then chairman of the committee, Senator Gronna, was also a member of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Banking and Currency. He was compelled to be absent a great deal of the time; and for most of the time during that investigation I was acting chairman of the committee.

At the time of which I speak, when the so-called Kenyon bill and the so-called Kendrick bill were pending, quite extensive hearings were again held. The same people, to quite an extent, testified again. After those hearings the bills were reintroduced, several modifications having been made after conferences of various members of the Committee on Agriculture. In most of the conferences I participated, in my weak way.

The outcome of it all, after various changes had been made, was the reporting of the bill by Senator Gronna, the chairman, representing the committee. The bill was taken up during the last session of the last Congress. That was the first action of the Senate after all the investigation had taken place, lasting over two years, and the Senate passed that bill during the last session of Congress, late in the session, however; at least, it was so late that the bill was not finally acted on.

I do not remember now whether it even got into conference. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if he remembers whether that bill did get into conference?

Mr. KENDRICK. The bill passed by the Senate was reported to the Committee on Agriculture in the House and was considered by that committee to a conclusion, as I understand it, and then it was moved and carried that the bill, or something like the bill which we now have before us, be substituted for the bill which passed the Senate. That action was taken, and the bill as passed upon was reported favorably to the House.

Mr. NORRIS. And the House did not reach the consideration of it?

Mr. KENDRICK. The House did not reach the consideration of the bill in the last Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. So, Mr. President, my statement was correct, that it never got as far as a conference.

Mr. President, at the beginning of the present session of Congress, Senator Gronna, the former chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, having retired from the Senate, I was made chairman of the committee, and as such chairman I reintroduced the bill in this Congress, in April, soon after we convened. I reintroduced it in the exact form in which it passed the Senate during the preceding Congress. My idea was at the time that it would be a formal matter, when the bill was reported to the Senate, and that it would be reported back at once with a recommendation that it pass, and that there probably would be no opposition, because the Senate had debated it very fully at the time the bill was passed. I was not present, on account of illness, during that debate, and was only brought here when the final vote was taken on the bill, but I know, and Senators remember, that the bill was very fully discussed on the floor of the Senate. It was the unfinished business for quite a long time, and the Senate devoted time to it to the exclusion of other business for some days, and finally, as the result of that investigation and all of that debate by the Senate, the bill passed the Senate in the same form in which I reintroduced it at this session of Congress.

When it was reintroduced and referred to the committee, instead of the committee taking the action that I anticipated would be taken, it was referred to a subcommittee. There was some opposition; of course, there always had been some opposition from some members of the committee. But it was thought that by referring it to a subcommittee with a view of suggesting amendments to it the opposition might be allayed, and that we might, by compromising in some way, reach a unanimous conclusion.

So the bill was delayed for some time. The subcommittee reported it and made quite a number of recommendations which were agreed to by the full committee and the bill was reported by me to the Senate and is now on the calendar, being Calendar No. 39, Senate bill 659. After it had been reported to the Senate the House passed a similar bill and it came over to the Senate. That bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of course, as a matter of form.

The Senate committee having already reported one bill with several amendments, the House having passed a bill on the same subject, and that having been referred to the Senate committee, the committee decided, as I think everybody will agree they ought to have decided, that the parliamentary situation was then such that they ought to take up the House bill rather than the Senate bill. So I was instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report back the House bill with an amendment striking out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the Senate bill as amended by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

That is the condition of the bill that is now before the Senate. I thought I ought to make that much of an explanation because I have received very many inquiries from Senators as to why we are taking up the House bill instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire if the bill as passed by the Senate at the last session has received similar treatment in the committee of the House? Was the Senate bill stricken out and the House bill substituted as an amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that was done. Of course, the Senator appreciates, as I think we all do, that that was the proper procedure and that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would have been subject to criticism had they undertaken now to take up the Senate bill, because we would be in the position then of the House having passed one bill and then afterwards the Senate passing another bill, and there would be no way of getting the two Houses together.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate bill was considered in detail by the Committee on Agriculture in the House and every amendment offered to the bill was voted down during that consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. During consideration in the committee?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; every amendment offered in the committee was voted down, and when the bill had been passed upon to the last stage a vote was taken and the House bill substituted for the Senate bill, and it was so reported to the House.

Mr. NORRIS. We now have before us the House bill, with one committee amendment. That committee amendment is the Senate bill which I have mentioned, Calendar No. 39, Senate bill 659, just as it was printed, with the exception of one committee amendment that was agreed upon by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry after the Senate bill had been reported to the Senate. It is absolutely correct to say, and is the exact fact, that the amendment proposed by the committee is the Senate bill as amended by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I think I ought to say now, in answer to a great many inquiries of Senators and to some criticism——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know that I quite understood the Senator. Am I correct in understanding that the one amendment which the committee made to the House bill is to substitute the bill which the Senate passed at the last session?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; as amended by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is substantially the same bill?

Mr. NORRIS. It is substantially the same, and I will point out the difference.

I was about to say, when the Senator from North Carolina interrupted me, that when the bill was reported by me on behalf of the committee at this session there were a great many requests that came to members of the committee, particularly to the chairman, and also to a great many Members of the Senate, for hearings on the bill. A great many Senators wondered why the committee would not have any hearings. I think the explanation I have made of what the committee had done is a sufficient reason why the committee decided, as it decided unanimously, that they would have no further hearings.

That was agreed to by those who favored the legislation and by those who opposed it. We felt that we had exhausted the subject as far as hearings could exhaust them, and had at least exhausted the members of the committee, although we were flooded with telegrams and requests, and for days I was continually explaining to Senators why the committee was so cruel as not to permit further hearings. I think practically all the great packers wired and wrote to a great many Senators, and a great many small packers and some shippers and some commission men did likewise, demanding that hearings be held.

There is no doubt that the men engaged in the packing business could continue hearings for the next 10 years, and probably we would have been able to get some further useful information, and it is true that some time had elapsed since the last hearings; but the committee without an exception and without any objection decided that they would not hear anyone and that they would proceed with the consideration of the bill without any hearings. Therefore whatever criticism, if any, can be attributed to them for taking this course, can be attributed. I merely desire the facts to be known. The reason why we declined to have hearings was because we felt that we had gone very much further than we could reasonably be expected to go in having hearings.

The various bills, as they were introduced from time to time, varied in some of their administrative features and varied in some of their legal propositions. The committee took the legal advice of a very able lawyer with reference to the legal provisions contained in the bill, when they finally reported the last bill, the one which was passed in the last Congress. We had, sometimes after compromise and conference, changed our ideas as to some of the administrative features. I think it is safe to say that the bill in all its details was perhaps not satisfactory to any one of the persons who were active in putting it together.

There was one time when the Senate bill provided for one method of enforcing the law which was afterwards changed and then changed back again. The bill as it finally passed through the Senate at the last session provided for the administration of it by a commission of three men to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, each of them drawing a salary of $10,000. It was in that form that it passed the Senate. When it went back to the committee at this session of Congress the committee decided to change that administrative feature and to eliminate the commission and put in a commissioner, one person to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Personally, I think I would have preferred it in the other form, but there was some very strong opposition to it in that form because it created a new commission; and there is a good deal of argument, of course, in these times that can be made logically against such a provision. We reduced the salary to $7,500 a year and provided for a commissioner whose term of office would be five years. It is the theory of those who are favorable to the legislation that the commissioner shall be entirely removed from politics, and they fixed his term of office with that in view in order that he shall become an expert on this question.

Although when we began the discussion I was originally opposed to a commission, I later came to that conclusion, because I believed, after all the consideration we had given to the subject, that it was such a large undertaking, that the packing industry was so extensive and so connected up with the cost of living and with all the people of all kinds and with all communities that it would be desirable to have a permanent commission of men who would eventually become experts on that subject. It was provided that the members of the commission should devote all of their time to the business. It was intended that they should become and keep themselves posted as to the supply of all kinds of stock, when it would be ready for shipment, so as to know in advance and give information as much as they could in advance as to what kind of stock and what quantity of stock would be forced on the market in any given length of time.

One of the reasons for some of the difficulties that existed in the past was because there has been no reliable source of information through which the public could gain a knowledge of just what future conditions were likely to be, how much stock of various kinds was going to be put on the market, how much of other kinds, and when it would be in marketable shape. I believe that that was one of the important features considered in an effort to take away the uncertainty of the market, to stabilize it as much as possible, and to provide a governmental source, an unprejudiced source, of information that would be accessible to everybody. Such a condition has not existed in the past, but I think a thorough study of the subject will convince any unbiased mind that not all the difficulties, of course, but a great many of the uncertainties of the market and the wild fluctuations that have sometimes taken place have in part been caused by false reports as to conditions in the country, or ignorance on the part of the buyer or the shipper as to conditions when looked at from the viewpoint of the entire country. We thought that a commission having nothing else to do, required to devote their entire time to that matter, would in a few years be able to give to the country reports and information upon which everybody would not only rely but would have a right to rely and could rely with perfect safety. These administrative features are still in the bill as the committee has reported it, but to carry them out there is a commissioner provided instead of a commission of three men.

It is realized, Mr. President, that the execution of this proposed law can be made effective, either for good or bad, depending upon the men who administer it. An evil result might be conceived of, and, it is possible, if the commissioner did not do his duty or his position became one of partisan politics and was given to a man for political purposes rather than because of efficiency, the good he might otherwise accomplish would be to a great extent nullified. Not only was it the duty of the commission under the former bill, but it will be now under the provisions of the Senate bill the duty of the commissioner to disseminate the information after he has acquired it; but it was believed that the commission, now the commissioner, would become familiar with all of the difficulties of the packing situation; that he would have access to the packers' books; that he would have general supervision of the business, and would be in a position to ascertain exact conditions, and in that way would be able to submit reports in which the shipper, the consumer, and the packer would all have absolute confidence.

UMI

The commissioner is given powers to which some people object; and there are, of course, many arguments, with many of which I have a great deal of sympathy, against officials of the Government interfering in business of this kind; but, Mr. President, the product of the packing industry of this country enters every home; it reaches every individual; it has some thing to do with the cost of living for every citizen; its ramifications extend everywhere; and if we are going to get any information, if we are going to have any supervision of this business which is effective, which can accomplish any good for the people generally, sufficient power must be given, whatever Government instrumentality is used for the purpose, in order that the Government officials who are appointed to execute the law may go into the details of any matter which may be connected with the packing industry. I do not believe, however, that any power is conferred on the commissioner by the Senate bill beyond that which is necessary to fully execute the intent and purpose of the law.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall yield in just a moment.

Although undoubtedly a great many powers are given which probably never will be utilized, the necessity of being able at times to exercise them I think will appeal to those who want any regulation of the packing business. Now, I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Nebraska speaks of the powers vested by the bill in the commissioner. I think, properly speaking, the powers are vested in the Secretary of Agriculture, who is the principal, and the commissioner is only the agent and instrumentality through whom the Secretary of Agriculture works.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably I should modify my statement in that way, although I still maintain that there are a great many things which the commissioner may do, and which I think he ought to be permitted to do, which the Secretary of Agriculture can not control.

The House bill, Mr. President, while it differs from the Senate bill very greatly in many respects as to the matter of the regulation of the business, puts the regulatory power in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. At first blush to an ordinary person I think that course might appeal as being desirable, and, indeed, it does appear to a great many people after full consideration that that would be desirable. To my mind, however—and I think that is the view of the committee of the Senate—perhaps a good many of the administrative features of the bill would be nullified if the House bill prevailed, even though many of the Senate provisions were retained in the bill.

I hope that what I am about to say concerning the Secretary of Agriculture will by no one be construed to mean that I have reference to any particular Secretary of Agriculture. I do not think there is a Senator in the Senate who has more confidence in the present Secretary of Agriculture than have I; so that I am not speaking of a man, but I am trying to speak in a much broader sense; but, as everybody knows, the Secretary of Agriculture is appointed, as a rule at least, in part from political motives; at any rate, we could not expect the President to appoint a Secretary of Agriculture whose only qualification was his ability to execute the pending bill if it were enacted into law. The Secretary of Agriculture can do but very little personally except to supervise in a general way the administrative features of the law. The Secretary of Agriculture changes with every administration and oftener than otherwise during one administration. So that we should not long have, under the provisions of the House bill, the supervision of any one Secretary of Agriculture who would really ever become personally familiar with the details of the work as we should have if a man should devote his entire time to it and was not considered a political partisan appointee.

There are a good many other features of difference between the two bills; but, speaking in a general way, I think it may be fairly said that the House bill is not so drastic as is the Senate bill. I think it will be found that Senators who are opposed to any legislation on this subject will be advocating the House bill.

Let me say here, Mr. President, that I say that without meaning any disrespect to Senators. I am not finding fault with the Senator who favors the House bill; I am not finding fault with the Senator who opposes any legislation on the subject; I am not questioning any Senator's motives; but I think I ought to say that, as a general proposition, those who are opposed to legislation on this subject or who are opposed to any regulation by the Government of the packing industry will be found fighting in the Senate for the House bill.

There is one feature of the Senate bill which I think I ought to mention now. It is a separate title and has no direct connection with anything in the bill; it could be stricken out of the bill without interfering in any way with any of its other provisions. It is a title that permits what are termed "voluntary slaughterhouses" for meat products. It is an experiment in this country. It provides that a municipality may establish a slaughterhouse to which persons having cattle, sheep, or swine to slaughter may bring them for slaughter without giving up the title to the property, and the meat thus derived may be stored and kept in refrigerators by paying a charge for the work that is done, whatever it may be. We were informed that in some cities in Europe such a system had been very successful, and that a number of cities desiring to go into the business had provided public slaughtering houses. The facilities afforded vary in degree; in some instances they go to the extreme of having all the modern methods on a large scale provided for slaughtering, refrigerating, and curing meats of all kinds. It was stated that such activity on the part of the municipality resulted in bringing into the community from the surrounding country, as well as being shipped in from more distant places, stock of various kinds to be slaughtered and the meat to be cured, the owner paying a commission for the service afforded.

In order to prevent the right being abused, the Senate bill provides that a municipality or corporation or individual entering into this kind of business shall not be allowed to take title to any of the meats derived from the animal which is slaughtered.

Mr. President, there is another quite important difference, I think, between the two bills. The House bill—and there are some things about it I do not understand; some of the definitions I have not yet been able to grasp fully—if passed, as I understand it, will take away from the Federal Trade Commission all of its power and jurisdiction over packing establishments of every kind, whereas, if the Senate bill is passed, it will in part take away such power and jurisdiction. The Senate bill provides that when the act shall become operative—that clause is found in section 5, if Senators care to read it—the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission in domestic commerce in connection with the packing industry shall cease except in any case where the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the House of Representatives, or the Senate shall ask that they make an investigation.

Mr. President, unless there is some question desired to be asked, I do not know that I care to go into any further explanation of the bill at this time.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. STANFIELD. I should like to ask the Senator if in the hearings before the committee there appeared any insistent demand upon the part of the producers that legislation of the kind now proposed should be enacted, or whether there was disclosed any particular desire for such legislation?

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the Senator, while the judgment of different men might not agree, I will say, so far as my judgment goes, there was a very insistent demand from producers, from stockmen, and from consumers for the enactment of the proposed legislation. The Women's Consumers' League made a campaign all over the country a year ago in behalf of legislation of this kind. There were, however, some producers, some of whom testified before the committee, who were satisfied with present conditions, and did not want any legislation enacted on the subject.

Mr. STANFIELD. The reason why I ask the question is because I happen to be a member of some western live-stock associations, and I know that our associations are uniformly opposed to this character of regulation.

Mr. NORRIS. That reminds me of another matter that developed in the investigation. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who has been a member of live-stock associations all his life, knows more about their operations than I do, but I was impressed in the hearings by the fact that the so-called big packers were always active with the live-stock associations, and very often succeeded in their efforts. We had before us instances of officers of associations who had gone on record once as favoring such a law as is proposed, but who changed their minds after the packers had been working with them. I do not know that I care to go into that, but it is a fact, I think developed in the hearings, that in the case of nearly every livestock association throughout the country there was an attempt made, at least, by the packers to control their action.

I say that without any criticism of them. They had a perfect right to do it, but I know I was impressed with the idea that the live-stock associations had been on all sides of this proposition, or at least many of them had.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. STANFIELD. I should like to ask by what method the packers controlled the individual live-stock producer or the individual member of an association?

Mr. NORRIS. They had various ways of doing that, and if we go into that it will probably lead to quite a lengthy discussion. I have in mind now some that they controlled by lending them money. I have in mind instances where attorneys who were influential in various quarters, not only with live-stock associations but with legislatures, were put on the pay roll for no other purpose than something of that kind. I remember an instance that came, I think, from Texas, where the editor of a paper bought the paper and borrowed the money from two of the packers, Swift and Armour. He bought a paper that had not been friendly to the packers, and when his note came due and he asked for an extension, I remember the letter which called the attention of the packers from whom he was asking an extension, to the policy of the paper "before taking and after taking."

There are endless ways in which these attempts might be made to influence associations or anybody else. I did not intend to go into that subject, and do not intend to do so in debate here, because it is only a sidelight, I admit, after all.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Have not the big packers established, in different sections of the country, branch establishments?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Small local packing houses?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The influence of those different branch establishments has also been utilized by them in their fight against this bill, has it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think that can be safely said.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator know to what extent they have established those branch houses?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know just what the Senator means by "branch houses."

Mr. SIMMONS. The packing houses in South Carolina, for instance. I understand that they have established there one or two local packing establishments that are quite extensive.

Mr. NORRIS. There are not so very many of those. Of course, the larger packers have often established even retail butcher shops in various places through the country, but the packing houses proper are not very numerous.

Now, Mr. President, if there is not anything further, I suppose we must go through the formality of having this amendment read; and I ask that the Secretary may proceed to read it.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. STANFIELD. In your investigation, what developed relative to the profits of the packers? How did you find what the profits were, or was that question gone into?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that was gone into very fully. I have here some information on the general development of it. It was very fully brought out; and I thought that during the course of the debate here, if it were called for, I would probably go into it to some extent. I did not intend to take it up to-night. It would take some time if I went into the subject, but I should prefer to let the debate proceed for a while, and I will decide then how far I will have to go into it in answer to questions or suggestions.

Mr. STANFIELD. The question involves a very broad scope.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. Of course, the development of the packing industry is a story by itself. It has been a wonderful development, and the profits as a rule have been great. There is not anything in this bill that attempts to limit the profits or control the capitalization in any way.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator if it would not be better to read the bill to-morrow, when we will have more Senators present than we have now. It is not very long, and it will not take a great while to read it to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that the only reason why I want to have it done to-night is that I think there are about as many Senators here now as we will get at any ordinary time, and it will expedite business. I am not going to move to take a recess; but just as soon as the amendment is read, if it is read, I am going to move to adjourn, and to adjourn until 12 o'clock, and have a morning hour, so that several Senators who have some little matters they want to call up can probably get them up during the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. It would save only about 10 minutes. Why not do it to-morrow morning when we begin to discuss the bill? It is not the 10 minutes that I care about.

Mr. NORRIS. We shall have to have the amendment read. Nobody cares anything about the Secretary reading it, but I want him to do it and get it out of the way; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, why not waive the reading of it?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. It is just one amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill for amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has already agreed that the formal reading of the bill shall be dispensed with.

Mr. NORRIS. That was only the formal reading. If the Chair holds that that applies to the amendment, I am content.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order now to read the proposed amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The result will be that some Senator will come into the Chamber and say: "What is the pending amendment?" There is only one amendment, and he will ask that it be read, and it will be read again, and we will lose just that much time. That is all I care about.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe that will occur. There will be other amendments offered.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let it be read.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senate committee substitute is subject to amendment as well as the House text, and this is what will happen: We will proceed to take up amendments that may be offered to either bill until they are exhausted, and when we get through with them the vote will come as to whether we will have the House bill or the Senate bill, which is the only amendment of the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator withdraws his request, I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I guess so. As no Senator desires to speak on the subject to-night, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 10, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 9, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We have heard Thy voice, O God, and we acknowledge Thy sovereignty; but the mystery is too profound and the issues are too far-reaching for us to measure alone. Give us the spirit that urges us upward. We beseech Thee to instruct, direct, and lift us up to a plane of understanding, that we may be qualified for excellency of service. Every life has its pain, every heart has its shadow, and even every prayer may have its doubt. O make us to feel the touch of Thy wisdom and mercy, with the tenderness of a father's love. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what he expects to do with regard to the $200,000 appropriation placed on this bill by an amendment of the Senate, which is the beginning of a program of expenditure of several million dollars on additional waterworks for the city of Washington?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman refers to the District water-supply project?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Or to the Great Falls power project?

Mr. BLANTON. Both. There is an initial appropriation of $200,000 for each one of them put on this bill by a Senate amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that both these propositions will have to come back to the House for consideration before they are agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to know the gentleman's attitude about them.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know nothing about the power project, and will have to go into it very carefully.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on these two propositions—the Great Falls project and the District water-supply project.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I have sought this permission, Mr. Speaker, to warn my colleagues of this latest proposal for the extravagant expenditure of more millions of the people's money. By amendments the Senate added $54,000,000 increases to the deficiency appropriation bill, $98,000,000 increases to the naval appropriation bill, and $16,000,000 increases to the Army appropriation bill. Of this last $16,000,000 there is a proposal to spend $200,000 as an initial expenditure on a program running ultimately into millions of dollars to provide an additional water supply for the District of Columbia.

The main water conduit that supplies water to this city of 457,000 people was paid for wholly out of the United States Treasury, and wholly by the money of the whole people of the United States, and though the 457,000 people living here have personally reaped the benefit of it through cheap water rates they enjoy, we are continually hearing them clamor for the Government to be made to pay for what water it uses.

No posted person will deny that all during the war we had at least 100,000 people here in Washington more than are here at present, and more than will be here again for a long time. We who have taken the time to investigate know that we now have at least 40,000 surplus employees, civil service and patronage positions, who ought to be separated from the pay roll and sent home. All during the war there was not a day when there was not a great wastage of water in almost every building in Washington, and yet the supply was ample, and no steps whatever were taken to conserve this wasted water by requiring leaky faucets to be repaired. And water is still being wasted here. And I will guarantee that there is not another city in the whole United States where the water rate is as cheap as it is in the District of Columbia.

But now that the war is all over, and the 100,000 transients have all gone home, and we are daily hoping to disconnect the thousands of surplus employees from the Government pay roll and send them home, and when there is no reasonable probability that in 20 years we will ever again have as many people here as were here during the war, all of a sudden we are called upon to embark into an extravagant program to spend millions to provide an additional water supply. And the people of the United States will be required to pay a large per cent of this expenditure. They have had to pay for the entire water conduit, and for 50 per cent of the operating and maintenance expenses in the past, and will have to pay at least 40 per cent of same in the future.

Until lately the 457,000 people living here in Washington had to pay only 1½ per cent taxes on their personal and real property. Now they have to pay only 2 per cent taxes on their personal and real property, and only three-tenths of 1 per cent tax on intangibles, and are allowed an exemption on $1,000 for their libraries, wearing apparel, family portraits, and household belongings. There is not another city in the United States with as low a tax rate. After paying the above small tax, then the whole people of the United States are called upon to pay the balance of the city expenses from the Public Treasury.

No wonder this city has become such a mecca for rich tax dodgers. No wonder that practically all the streets are paved for miles and miles, and it is not a long walk between million-dollar bridges. No wonder that we have the finest lighting system in the Nation. No wonder that it is hard to find a real estate dealer who is not a millionaire, and no wonder the real estate men give inspiring banquets. No wonder that citizen committees are continually hammering at Congress to build this and to construct that, when much of the expense is coming out of the United States Treasury.

But the Senate has placed another amendment on the Army appropriation bill to spend $200,000 in an initial expenditure on a proposed water-power program at Great Falls that is estimated to cost $60,000,000 ultimately.

Read the following from to-day's Washington Times:

$200,000 GIVEN FOR INCREASED SERVICE AND $200,000 FOR GREAT FALLS PLANT.

The project of giving Washington an increased water supply was passed upon favorably by the Senate yesterday in appropriating $200,000 for this purpose and another item of $200,000 with which to begin construction on a hydroelectric power plant at Great Falls. Both items were contained in the Army appropriation bill as it passed the Senate.

Senator KING said that the completion of the Great Falls project as outlined in the report of Maj. Tyler would cost ultimately between $44,000,000 and $60,000,000, and that, he said, was entirely too huge a sum to authorize without first giving it thorough consideration.

We have all heard that certain business men of Washington have this property to sell up at Great Falls and hope to clean up a fortune by getting Congress to embark on this proposed $60,000,000 power project. We hear economy preached from the mouth every day. We hear sermons lip deep daily against extravagance. Yet with few dissenting votes the millions are voted out constantly. Note the following report on this Great Falls project, just given me by Mr. J. Edward Cassidy, one of the leading engineers of our country:

JUNE 8, 1921.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As a taxpayer and an engineer, I take the liberty of calling your attention to certain features of the water-power project for Great Falls inserted in the Army appropriation bill by the Senate to-day, as per memorandum attached. I wish to say that I have no interest whatever in this matter except as a taxpayer.

Yours, truly,
J. EDWARD CASSIDY.

MEMORANDUM ON THE GREAT FALLS POWER PROJECT INSERTED IN THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL BY THE SENATE JUNE 8, 1921.

During the consideration of the Army appropriation bill in the Senate, sitting in the Committee of the Whole, an amendment was introduced by Senator NORRIS providing for an appropriation of $200,000 to start the work of construction on a hydroelectric project at Great Falls, near Washington, on a project with which no Senator was familiar and a project which is to involve a total expenditure of from $44,000,000 to $60,000,000. This amendment was adopted on a division of the Senate with but 17 Members present, 9 voting for the amendment and 8 against it. The bill was later passed without a record vote on this plan to commit Congress to an unknown expenditure on an unknown project, it being conceded that the expenditure would be at least $44,000,000. This amendment was never before any committee of the Senate or House for proper consideration, and its introduction was so timed by the War Department as to prevent its consideration by a committee of Congress, as it was not introduced until after the Army bill had been reported out of the committee. A study of the measure from a technical and financial standpoint shows quite clearly that the reasons for the handling of the bill in this manner were that it would not bear investigation. This measure has no place in the Army appropriation bill, but was introduced in the manner indicated above, to prevent any investigation being made and to get Congress committed to the scheme before any investigation was possible. I do not believe that there has been such an audacious attempt by the War Department to raid the Public Treasury in the past history of the country.

If this measure could bear a searching investigation, it would not have been put through in the bald-faced manner in which it has been presented, but would have been introduced in the proper manner as a legislative matter instead of as a rider on a bill to which it does not belong in any sense.

For the benefit of the House Appropriations Committee I wish to present a few comparisons in a general way to show what the Senate proposes letting the taxpayers of the country in for.

In making the comparisons the power for Great Falls is based on the official records for a 15-year period, the average being used.

COST OF PLANT PER HORSEPOWER AS COMPARED WITH OTHER PROJECTS.

The plant cost per horsepower of the proposed project would be about six times the cost of the proposed plant at Muscle Shoals and about five times the cost of the Keokuk, Iowa, project on the Mississippi River.

AMOUNT OF POWER AS COMPARED WITH MUSCLE SHOALS AND KEOKUK, IOWA.

The possible power production of the Great Falls project as proposed would be about one-sixth that of Muscle Shoals and about one-third of that of the Keokuk project.

FINANCIAL ASPECTS.

As noted above, the output of power of the proposed project would be about one-third that of the Keokuk project and the plant cost per horsepower would be about five times as much. Considering the fact that after about 10 years' operation the Keokuk project has not yet been able to pay dividends on its stock issue, the Great Falls project would be a great financial frost with which to burden the Treasury and the taxpayers of the country. If this project is allowed to go through, there is going to be a lot of explaining to the people who have to pay the taxes, and a project which will not bear the light of investigation before its enactment into law will hardly prove to be an easy matter to explain. Another interesting feature of the plans covering this project is that the plans appear to be arranged so as to be of particular benefit to certain financial interests who are interested in power and light projects as well as traction projects all over the country.

This connection may be accidental, but it is painfully apparent.

COST OF POSSIBLE POWER AS COMPARED WITH THE COST OF STEAM POWER.

The Senator introducing this amendment stated that the power produced would be produced at about half the cost of power by the use of coal. On the contrary, with the excessive cost of the proposed plant and the small amount of power (by comparison) possible, the cost would be much greater than the cost of steam power with coal for fuel. In plain English, it is proposed to construct a plant which can only be a liability to the Public Treasury, and this at a time when the whole country is groaning under enormous taxation, waiting patiently for the party which came into power on March 4, 1921, to redeem its promise to reduce taxation.

Counting in the water-power project referred to and the water-supply project, aggregating more than $50,000,000, the Army and Navy bills as framed and passed by the Senate amount to about $800,000,000 for next year or a figure about two-thirds of the entire expenses of the Government prior to our entry into the war.

Inasmuch as a large percentage of the House of Representatives must go before the people and account for their work during the next three years, it appears to be logical that the House will be somewhat careful in looking after the interests of the taxpayers, and not accept such a proposition as this involves until after a proper investigation has been made by the proper committees and information other than that furnished by the War Department secured.

Those of you who were present will remember that I opposed these projects when they were before the House, and since then I have learned of no reason for changing my mind. It is an unnecessary, wasteful extravagance and ought not to be seriously considered by the House.

If my colleagues think that the people of the United States are not waked up on the question of economy, they are mistaken. And our constituents are going to hold us responsible for our votes on these appropriations.

We are going to have an opportunity to vote on each one of these two propositions, and I hope that the House will not agree to either one of these Senate amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if the minority Members were aware of the fact that he was going to make this request at this time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is ill and has not been on the floor for some time, and I have not been able to see the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the matter ought to go over until the minority can understand the situation. I do not know what Mr. SISSON may think about this matter or what Mr. HARRISON may think about it; but it does occur to me that before asking unanimous consent to send a bill like this to conference the gentleman from Kansas ought at least to have consulted with the minority Members.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will it be satisfactory to the gentleman if I make the statement that we will not go into conference until Mr. SISSON and Mr. HARRISON are agreeable?

Mr. GARNER. I understand that, but you will already have gotten consent. You can get the consent later this afternoon. Mr. SISSON was on the floor the other day. I saw him last night. I do not know whether he wants to go on the conference or whether he would want some one else to take his place.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would not desire to go into the conference without Mr. SISSON.

Mr. GARNER. Probably the gentleman is right, but he could do that just as well later this afternoon, after Mr. SISSON has been consulted.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a mere formality.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate placed additions of $53,000,000 on the deficiency bill and $98,000,000 on the naval bill. How much additional have they placed on this Army bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand about $14,000,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Kansas states that he would not want to go into conference without knowing who the minority conferees will be, and in view of Mr. SISSON's physical condition, I hope the gentleman will defer making his request until this afternoon after the committee rises, and in the meantime I will try to get in touch with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. ANTHONY. I will do that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. MCKELLAR as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

VETERANS' BUREAU.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose there was pending an amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Indiana: Page 5, line 10, after the word "exceeding," strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and forty."

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, is it in order for me to make a motion to limit the time for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move, Mr. Chairman, that debate on section 6 and all amendments thereto be terminated in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the debate on section 6 and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion by making the time 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend by making the time 45 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to offer a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. FISH. I offer a substitute that the time be extended to one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana that the time be extended one hour.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I accept that.

Mr. MACGREGOR. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I have an amendment that has not yet been read. Will that be included within the limit of time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks if the gentleman is recognized within the hour he is entitled to offer his amendment.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Suppose I am not recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would be recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment, but if the time expires the gentleman would not be in order to debate the amendment.

Mr. LAYTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAYTON. Do I understand that amendments will be in order at any time within the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I object.

Mr. RANKIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. I have an amendment to offer to this section, and I would like to know whether or not it would be proper to offer it and submit a statement within that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would have the right to offer the amendment to the section, but if the time had expired he would not have the right to debate it.

Mr. RANKIN. Would a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the substitute.

Mr. RANKIN. I offer an amendment to the substitute that the time be extended to two hours.

Mr. FISH. And the gentleman from New York accepts that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from New York that the time for debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to two hours.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Chair hold that on a motion to limit debate endless amendments may be offered under the guise of a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that all the amendments that are in order have now been offered, and the question, therefore, comes on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] that the time for debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 45 minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be permitted to withdraw my amendment and substitute the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STEVENSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is adopted, then can we go ahead and vote on the substitute for that amendment after we have adopted it? What becomes of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Is not the first question on the proposition for two hours?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the end of 45 minutes instead of 30, as proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. When will we vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi making it two hours?

The CHAIRMAN. The next question will be on the substitute. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. FISH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. If the vote is in the affirmative for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana for 45 minutes, if that prevails, then can we offer an amendment to extend it to two hours?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the next question in order would be a vote on the substitute, which would be the 2-hour proposition.

Mr. FISH. If this prevailed, should those who desire the 2-hour extension of time support the 45-minute amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and on that the gentleman from Indiana demands a division.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the demand for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late to withdraw the demand for the division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 0.

So the amendment of Mr. BLAND of Indiana to the motion of Mr. WINSLOW was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that the time for debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the end of two hours.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas) there were—ayes 58, noes 59.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WINSLOW and Mr. RANKIN were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 74.

So the amendment of Mr. RANKIN to the substitute of Mr. FISH was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the substitute of the gentleman from New York to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as amended, to limit the debate to 1 hour instead of 45 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is the important section of this veterans' bureau bill. The bill as I understand it is to put in operation decentralization, to get the service of this bureau down to the boys who need the service, to carry the service back home to them in their own neighborhood, where they can have it first hand. After some thought on this subject and some investigation my opinion is that that can not be done with 50 suboffices in the United States. Before gentlemen vote for this section as it now stands I suggest that they investigate the condition of affairs in their own districts. When this bill was presented to the House I did not know, first hand, the conditions in my own district, but I have studied them since, and I have found out something about them. I hope that all of you who do not know what this will do to the boys in your own districts will vote against this section as it stands now, at least until you find out what is happening.

I represent the Toledo district, and I find that we have a suboffice in Toledo, Ohio, which would go out if this section, as it stands, is agreed to. We have 442 maimed ex-soldiers in our city, in this district, who are being educated now, to-day, by that suboffice. There are three placement officers, with offices in the Nasby Building, who are out among those boys all of the time, helping them in their school work, helping them to get through training, so that they can go on and do a man's work. They are placing these boys in the factories and in the stores of Toledo. They are placing them in barber shops and are preparing these men so that they can earn an honest living—442 of them in Toledo alone. But that does not tell half the story. There are some 1,300 boys in the Toledo district that these three placement officers keep in contact with from day to day and week to week.

These placement officers in that district and the placement officers in other districts receive a salary of $200 per month, $2,400 a year. They are allowed $5 a day for traveling expenses, and they are allowed also their railroad fare. We have 20 counties in northwestern Ohio in the Toledo district. These placement officers are out among these boys all of the time, keeping in touch with them, placing them in jobs, as soon as they are able to do the work, standing by them until they are able to stand alone and go alone and do a man's work, no matter where they are. Are you going to cut these boys off, are you going to send them 215 miles down to Cincinnati, in order that they may receive service? That is what you are going to do if you vote for this section as it stands. Beyond that, you are going to make it more expensive for the Government. The expense of travel coupled with the loss of time in covering a large district is greater than the expense of maintaining suboffices. I find out from the Director of the Bureau for Vocational Training that the principal element of decentralization is to eliminate travel. That is the key to the whole situation—to eliminate travel, time, and expense. Here we have all told about 2,000 boys in the Toledo district who are being served by this substation that you would cut off permanently from this service. They can not go to Cincinnati. Many of them would die on the way.

There is no charm in the number 50. Why not leave the number as it is now at 140? Why not give the administrative officer some discretion in his executive capacity?

As I understand, it is the intention to make Col. Forbes the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the veterans' bureau. In my judgment no more suitable appointment could be made. Since Col. Forbes has been in charge of the War Risk it has made remarkable strides toward efficiency. Then do not tie his hands. Let him have something to say about service.

A gentleman of the committee says he is not an expert. He does not know just how many offices should be opened. Well, let me say to the gentleman from Indiana, I have asked the opinion of a man who does know—the greatest expert in this country, the man who is chief of industrial relations for the Federal Board for Vocational Education. Yesterday I asked Capt. H. L. Brunson what he would do if the number of suboffices should be reduced from 140 to 50. Mr. Brunson's answer was, "Mr. CHALMERS, God knows!"

I read in my home paper of yesterday of four funerals held in Toledo in one day for World War heroes—John P. McNerney, 23; Arthur Daly, 21; Tony Woblewski, but 17 when he enlisted in the service; and Vernon McCune. We can not bring these martyrs back to life, but we can take care of their comrades who have come back to us maimed and crippled. They do not want to be State charges. All they ask of us is to show them the way to become self-supporting citizens. There are 2,000 of them in the Toledo district, and now, just as they are beginning to rise into the sunshine of hope, by this vicious section you are knocking the crutches out from their support and letting them fall back into dismal despair.

I ask you to vote down this number 50 and leave the number as it stands now—140.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] may be again reported.

There being no objection, the Bland amendment was again reported by the Clerk.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, in five minutes, of course, it is impossible to say much about this situation. I myself have been very doubtful from the beginning whether or not the decentralization of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is a wise thing. Those in charge of the bureau, those in charge of the rehabilitation division of the Federal Board, those in charge of this part of the Public Health Service, and the American Legion, all believe that some decentralization at Washington is necessary. I finally yielded on the proposition, as did the committee, to give 14 regional offices, the number that the Public Health Service has in the country and the number, I understand, that the Vocational Board has. In the original Wason bureau the regional offices were given no power whatever to pass finally on claims, either for insurance, compensation, or anything, but under the Wason bill the regional offices and suboffices were provided simply to gather information and try to help the service men with his papers before they came here, and prevent delay. This bill provides for further decentralization and that these 14 regional offices shall have the power to make awards in compensation, insurance claims, and so forth. It provides for 50 suboffices as auxiliary to the regional offices. I myself think that is enough suboffices. I believe that the more of these offices you establish the harder it will be at the end of the 5 years or the 10 years, or whatever time we set, to get this system done away with.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I can not yield in five minutes. The situation in Indiana is one of the situations that we want to do away with. We want to get away from giving somebody the power to go out and indiscriminately establish suboffices.

In Indiana they say they have three or four suboffices under some department of the Government which we may do away with. Well, if they had a dozen of them in Indiana or a dozen in Ohio, of course they would be here to-day wanting to raise the number up to a point that would cover all the offices in that State. It matters not whether it is for one proposition covered under this bill or for all propositions covered under this bill. I want to submit what is going to happen. Some men here want all of these little suboffices over the country given power to make final adjudication on claims, insurance compensation, and vocational rehabilitation. I think that would be a serious mistake. Now, in the 14 regional offices they are given the power to pass upon claims finally. Do you know what is going to happen? Every soldier whose papers are filed and whose case is passed upon by a regional office, much less a suboffice, if he is aggrieved, what is he going to do? He is going to appeal that case, he is sending to his Congressman, and ultimately 90 cases out of 100 will come to Washington anyhow. I do not believe the amendment will be of service to the ex-service men, but will bring about more delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be read for information.

Mr. SWEET. That is the purpose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 24, after the word "training," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The regional offices and suboffices, with all authority to establish such offices, shall terminate on June 30, 1926, and upon such termination all records and supplies pertinent thereto shall be delivered to the central office."

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Chairman, after conferring with members of the committee and also some of the Members of the House, it is the general consensus of opinion that this amendment be introduced. The question of vocational training, of hospitalization, and also questions pertaining to the adjustment of compensation, will be practically disposed of by that time, and it is thought that if the House or the Congress makes any mistake in the question of decentralization that at the end of five years, without any further legislation, all the regional offices and suboffices would be abolished and the whole matter again come back to the central office in Washington. I yield back any time I have remaining.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do we have to wait until the conclusion of the hour's debate before voting on any of these proposed amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is the parliamentary procedure under the practice of the House.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman and fellow members of the committee, your committee having in charge the Sweet bill, H. R. 6611, have attacked the problems presented with full knowledge of the needs of the ex-service men and the absolute necessity of making more workable the departments of our Government having to do with the rehabilitation, payments of insurance, and vocational training of these men—men who want only what is their due.

During the past year the Sweet bill has been discussed wherever ex-service men congregate, in every legion post throughout this broad land of ours. I congratulate your committee for placing before us such a piece of remedial legislation. We are all for it, and I feel sure that any suggested changes or amendments made therein spring from the heart of the Members of the House offering them.

We want the soldiers of the World War taken care of now, at once. We feel that the director of the veterans' bureau should be unhampered in his work throughout the Union for a term of years. It is my opinion that the work of this bureau will reach its peak within a year. It will then show a steady decline. We now have throughout our country approximately 140 stations similar to what are called suboffices in this bill. To permit of a proper functioning of the bureau we should not have a lesser number for a term of years. Many States should have a regional office and two or more suboffices. No State should have less than one suboffice.

If there ever was a time to not only speak but to practice economy, it is now. The care of the ex-service men and economy are not to be spoken of in the same breath. To take care of the ex-service men with 100 per cent efficiency at once is true economy. By practicing this form of economy now we obtain in return love of country and flag; undying devotion to everything making up this glorious country of ours, its tradition, its laws, and institutions, in the hearts of the sons and daughters of ex-service men and their sons and daughters through generation and generation.

True economy does not consist in the retention of offices after they cease to render service. The ex-service man does not now or ever desires to have these regional or suboffices adding to the expense of our Government a single day after they cease to perform the work for which they were created. The law, the purpose, the emergency, giving these offices birth is clear to us all to-day. Years from now these will become very indistinct through the mist of time and political expediency. These offices must never become mere political plums.

For this reason I am in favor of limiting the life of the State branches of the veterans' bureau to five years. It makes little difference to the ex-service man whether the director of the veterans' bureau is an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury or a Cabinet member or what not, just so that he has the needs of the ex-service man at heart, is deeply sincere, and has behind him some real constructive achievement to his credit and a decided punch in his activities—in other words, a real live man on the job. Then and only then will the regional and suboffices function to the everlasting gratitude of the boys who stepped out of the life of peace into the hell of war. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment and ask that it be read for information.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I would like to have read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 14, strike out the sentence beginning on line 14 and ending on line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Such regional offices shall, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the director, have the power to hear complaints, to examine, rate, and award compensation claims, to grant medical, surgical, dental, hospital, convalescence care, and necessary and reasonable after care, to make reasonable awards, to grant vocational training, and, if delegated to them by the director, may exercise such other powers as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this suggested amendment is purely to clarify the language which appears in the bill and which I propose to eliminate and replace by the pending amendment. I think there is no doubt as to the purpose of the committee in reporting this bill and as to the wishes of the House in this matter. What we desire, I think, is to have these 14 regional offices in the possession of final and undisputed power to make awards of compensation, of insurance, and of vocational training.

We want these 14 offices to be independent in their jurisdiction, subject only, of course, to the general control of the director of the veterans' bureau. In my judgment the language reported by the committee does not accomplish that, and I will explain why I think so. If gentlemen will refer to the text of the bill in line 20, on page 5, they will find that the words "delegated to them," meaning the regional offices, "by the director" are employed. Structurally those words "delegated to them by the director" refer to all the specified powers, as well as to the immediately preceding phrase, "and all other matters." What we want is to have the outright power given to each regional office to make awards, to grant hospital care, and the like; and then, as to other powers, meaning powers not enumerated specifically, we want to have those powers exercisable by the regional offices, provided they are delegated to them by the director of the veterans' bureau.

I have conferred with members of the subcommittee, and I think they are in agreement as to the intention of the language, but, frankly, I suspect the effect of the language as drawn is to exclude from the regional offices all the powers except so far as they may be delegated to those offices by the director of the veterans' bureau.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield.

Mr. CONNELL. Do I understand that your amendment will give the 14 regional offices absolute authority to settle claims?

Mr. ROGERS. The 14 regional offices under my amendment—and I think it is the intent of the committee—will have power to make final awards in these enumerated cases, and they will also have the right to exercise other powers if granted to them by the director of the veterans' bureau.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I come from the forty-sixth State, only 14 years old now; twenty-first in population; thirteenth in point of wealth; tenth in revenue for the support of the Government; first in the production of oil; second in the production of winter wheat; fourth in the production of cotton; sixteenth in the number of troops sent to the war; eleventh in the number of casualties of those troops. There were over 95,000 men sent from Oklahoma, and now over 100,000 former service men are in the State. There is not one regional office in the State. So far as I know, our boys must be sent outside. Our State is so young that we have no hospital facilities beyond a few beds available at present. Our State had fewer exemptions asked from the draft by our people, and especially our Indian people, the percentage of Indians who asked exemption being 1.26 of 1 per cent, while the general plea for exemption in the United States was, white men, at the rate of 10 per cent and negroes at the rate of 12 per cent. There is no State in the Union that has the patriotic record of Oklahoma. We ought to have it made possible to care for our men at home.

I will not tell you what our boys are going through in Texas hospitals. You know, we said in Oklahoma, where we were a prohibition State, that they really did not need prohibition in Texas, because under the Army ruling liquor could not be sold within 10 miles of an Army or Navy post. The whole State was covered with them. [Laughter.] And so they had many temporary hospitals; we had none. Do not send us to Texas now. We sent our men to war; we paid the expense of many others. We are trying in Oklahoma to rehabilitate men from other States as well as our own. Help us. [Applause.]

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MACGREGOR: Page 5, strike out lines 22, 23, and 24 and, after the word "office," line 22, insert: "The suboffices shall have the power to make temporary compensation and to grant temporary vocational training pending final determination by the regional office and shall have such other powers as may be delegated to them by the director."

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I assume if this bill goes through in the shape in which it is, so far as the State of New York is concerned, the regional office will be established in the city of New York, and in my experience thus far in handling four or five thousand ex-service men's cases I find if they get tied up in the city of New York they are hopeless. It is very distressing that week after week I keep sending letters to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the answer comes back that a request has been made for a medical report from the Public Health Service in New York City, and there is no report forthcoming. I think that the board or the doctors who examine a man should have some latitude to give relief.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Very hurriedly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman's amendment provide that the suboffice may grant temporary compensation and award?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the suboffice has no funds, how can that be done? Papers have to come to the central office before a check is issued.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not know anything about the structure of the rest of the bill. If a man is distressed, there certainly should be some method of giving him relief and not have weeks and months go by before the man can be given relief. That is what I want to cure. I want the suboffices, or whoever is in close touch with the man, given some power to do something rather than to wait for the unwinding of the miles and miles of red tape that we have. If this does not correct it, I hope something will be put in the bill that will correct it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The suboffices can only do that by having funds put in their hands for the purpose. To simply say that they shall make the award, without giving them power to do that, would not bring any result.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Where does the regional office get it from?

Mr. BARKLEY. From the director of the bureau.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Could not that be done in the case of the suboffices?

Mr. BARKLEY. Have you provided that? If the regional office or the suboffice makes an award it has got to be certified by the director before a check can be issued for it. You can not provide any other way unless the funds are put in these offices for the relief of men who are in distress.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I will.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman has referred very properly to the misfortune of the ex-service men in that they have to suffer from the bad results of red tape by the medical examining boards. I do not understand that this bill carries with it any machinery that will improve the medical examination of the ex-service men.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. In each one of these 140 suboffices that exist now the Public Health Service has a doctor—it has not been stated on the floor of this House yet, but that is the truth—and when you do away with the one hundred and forty and odd service stations that are there to take care of the boys now and limit them to fifty, you would do away with the hundred doctors that take care of the men.

Mr. KINDRED. I wanted to bring that point out. It must be made in connection with the present relations of the Public Health Service.

Mr. MACGREGOR. At the present time I find it very inefficient so far as New York is concerned.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, before speaking on some of the amendments that have been offered to section 6 of the bill, I desire to call attention to what has heretofore been done for the disabled service men, some of the mistakes that have been made in administration and the effort of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which I have the honor to be a member, to correct these mistakes by the enactment of this bill into law.

There is no more important problem confronting the Nation than the proper and adequate care of the disabled service men.

Congress anticipated the effects of the Great War by several legislative acts in an endeavor to provide for the service men and especially the disabled ones. In October, 1917, Congress passed the war risk compensation act, providing allowances for service men with dependents, compensation for disabled service men or for their dependents in the event of death, and for war-risk insurance up to $10,000. In June, 1918, Congress provided for vocational training for disabled men and for their maintenance while undergoing training. Following the signing of the armistice, in March, 1919, Congress passed a hospitalization measure authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury "to provide immediate additional hospital and sanatorium facilities for the care and treatment of discharged, sick, and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines." This bill transferred various hospitals with equipment to the Public Health Service, and authorized and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to erect new hospitals and to make the necessary contracts and leases for the taking over of private hospitals. That summer the House of Representatives passed the Sweet bill, improving and greatly liberalizing the beneficiary provisions of the war risk insurance act. This bill passed the Senate in December, 1919, and became a law shortly thereafter. This was followed by provisions improving and liberalizing the soldiers' rehabilitation act.

In these measures Congress has endeavored to provide for the disabled service men.

In addition to this, to carry out the provisions of these acts Congress has appropriated from the time of the enactment of the war risk insurance act in November, 1917, until the present date the sum of $1,414,263,766.96. I have asked our most efficient clerk of the Committee on Appropriations in the House, Mr. Shields, to prepare a table of these various appropriations, and at the suggestion of several Members of the House I am attaching it as an appendix to my remarks.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education informs me that on May 1, 1921, it had in training 80,066 disabled service men. Of this number 72,056 were being provided with maintenance as well as tuition. Three thousand five hundred and sixty-two men have completed their training. The first 2,000 men who were trained, and to that extent rehabilitated, were placed in 153 different kinds of employment at an average annual wage of $1,463.33. The average prewar wage of the same men was $1,072.71. The Federal board is making use of 2,000 schools and 8,000 plants and factories in retraining these men. Up to May 1, 1921, this board has spent $111,619,893.25 since the passage of the soldiers' rehabilitation act in June, 1918. Of this amount $96,992,973.88 has been spent directly in maintenance and tuition, books, supplies, and so forth. The overhead for this, including rent, office equipment and supplies, salaries, printing, travel, and subsistence of employees, and so forth, was approximately 13 per cent. The overhead charges are decreasing, and I am informed that they were only 8 per cent in the month of May.

There are many more men to be provided for, and these provisions should be made quickly, both for the sake of the men and for the sake of the country.

Furthermore, while this training has been going on, much work has been done by the United States Public Health Service and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. There is much more that these two agencies can do and this should be done immediately.

There have been numerous complaints in reference to lack of necessary hospitals in caring for the disabled service men, and there have been even more complaints in reference to his inability to receive adequate compensation.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the House, with these complaints in mind, conducted exhaustive hearings in January and February, at which hearings appeared medical officers, war-risk insurance experts, and members and officers of the various ex-service men's organizations. This committee reported the bill to the House just preceding the adjournment of the last Congress. There was insufficient time in which to act upon the report of the committee, and immediately upon the convening of the present Congress the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this Congress took up the problem.

They conducted hearings which were supplementary to the hearings of the preceding Congress. The complaints heard were not directed against the lack of legislation but to the methods of administration. The feeling was prevalent among the greater number appearing before the committee that while Congress had provided the necessary legislation and the necessary money, yet for some reason or other the disabled service men were not getting the benefits of that legislation because of too much red tape, a tendency to centralize too much in Washington, and the failure upon the part of the War Risk Bureau, the Federal Board, and the Public Health Service to properly coordinate their work.

This bill therefore is an attempt to cure these evils of administration. In my judgment many of these evils in administration could have been remedied without any additional legislation whatever from Congress. For example, the War Risk Bureau and the Public Health Service are both in the Department of the Treasury. There is no reason whatever why these two activities should not have coordinated their work without legislation from Congress. This is illustrated by the fact that the present Secretary of the Treasury, on the 19th of April, issued his order coordinating these two activities.

It will be observed that this bill has been drawn up broadly, and that it confers broad, general, and great discretionary powers upon the director, who will be in charge of all three activities. We provide for decentralization by authorizing 14 regional offices and 50 suboffices. These regional offices are to have the power of the present central office, subject, of course, to a review by the central office at Washington. The suboffices are to have such power, not including the granting of training, compensation awards or insurance awards, as may be delegated to them by the director.

This leads me to some of these amendments in reference to these suboffices and other provisions. We are all agreed that everything should be done to make the administration of the war risk insurance act and these other laws more helpful and effective in caring for the disabled service men. We disagree only as to a few details.

The original suggestion to the committee, coming from the director of the bureau, as I recall it, called for an unlimited number of suboffices, to be vested with unlimited power, even to the extent of permitting the suboffices to create other suboffices, which other suboffices were also to be vested with unlimited power. This would mean that the suboffices would have the right to grant insurance awards, compensation awards, and to confer all the benefits of vocational training.

Now, as to the question of suboffices and their powers, we have all had our troubles in reference to the awarding of compensations by the War Risk Insurance Bureau. Most of my trouble has arisen out of the fact that there has been filed with the War Risk Bureau in support of the claims for compensation inadequate proof. The affidavits submitted are insufficient. This is not to be wondered at. These boys know nothing about the laws of evidence and of proof. In a great many instances these affidavits are mere conclusions arrived at on the part of some doctor or of some layman that the man is sick and that he ought to be compensated. I have always been of the opinion that we could eliminate much of the delay and annoyance in handling war-risk insurance cases if we could furnish the service men with a conscientious adviser, who would assist them in the gathering of the affidavits and in the submission of the proof. These men should be helped in the drawing up of those affidavits and in the detailing of facts set forth therein. I venture to say that my experience in this connection is not any different than that of many others here.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If that be true, why not have a large number of suboffices to prepare these papers and eliminate a number of regional offices?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. You do not need a large number of suboffices. In the past the agents have not been sent out properly throughout the districts where men make claims and where there is evidence to show that they have a just claim. In such cases men should be sent out into that community. You do not have to establish a suboffice and grant to that suboffice all the powers in creation in order to correct the abuses of administration.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. From the standpoint of efficiency of service, in the gentleman's judgment, which would be the better, the regional or the suboffice?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. My judgment would be that we should have the 14 regional offices established by the bill, with general powers over the administration of the act.

Mr. CHALMERS. Why, then, does the regional office establish a suboffice in the same city, as in Cincinnati, Ohio, for instance?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not know what has been done in particular instances. The action may have been taken for lack of space, or something of that kind.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The functions are entirely different.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Oh, no. You can have a regional office and a suboffice right in the same building, as is the case in my city.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Does not the gentleman know that the powers of the suboffice are different from those of the regional office? The boys go there and get that service.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; I know; but you do not have to have suboffices scattered over every county in order to get that kind of service.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Why should we not follow in some degree the method followed in taking care of the veterans of the Civil War? In that case they had a very few examining boards composed of surgeons. It was found that that was a great hardship to the soldiers. They had to travel hundreds of miles, and pay hotel bills, and all that sort of thing. But a satisfactory adjustment was made when they established an examining board in every county north of Mason and Dixon's line, and their findings were practically binding upon the Pension Bureau unless the Pension Bureau thought there was ground of fraud.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Now, what did it result in? In all kinds of fraud. Every State in the Union had cases, all kinds of fraud and scandal, growing out of that very practice. Your committee thought that if we granted to these suboffices the power that the gentleman from New York would take away—if we granted that power to them we would have that very kind of trouble with the suboffices.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman is mistaken. There was no scandal in connection with the examining boards. But there were people who were making money out of the pension business, and they would sometimes put up false affidavits, and whatever scandal arose came about in that way.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman's recollection of that and mine are greatly different.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; but mine is better because I am older and I served on a board. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is all right; but the gentleman did not live in the same territory that I lived in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, and ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEEDY: Page 5, line 14, after the word "act," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "Provided, however, That in States having but a single suboffice no such suboffice shall be abolished within five years next following the approval of this act."

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I submit that protracted argument is unnecessary to justify the wisdom of this amendment to members of the committee. I am doubtful of the wisdom of but one provision in the Sweet bill. I have no fault to find with the number of regional or suboffices which it seeks to fix, nor do I criticize the powers conferred upon such regional and suboffices. I accept the judgment of the committee in those respects.

I desire to call your attention specifically to the nature of those duties performed by the suboffices, and then to direct your attention to the situation which obtains in the State of Maine. Records of the department show that suboffices have served ex-service men in the following respects, among others. They have arranged for loans; have provided temporary medical care; have located relatives; have assisted with affidavits; have visited homes for information; have secured passports, employment, sick leave, reports on family welfare, and so forth. This is the kind of service the ex-soldier boys want. They should not be deprived of all facilities of this nature.

In the State of Maine there is but one suboffice rendering this service to the ex-soldier. I introduce this amendment providing that in the reorganization of the bureau no State which has but a single suboffice shall be deprived of that one office. I do not wish the State of Maine to lose the only office which she now has at the disposal of ex-soldier men. I trust the committee will adopt my amendment, and so make possible the doing that which this bill professes to do, namely, to bring closer to the soldier boys those agencies for service and relief to which they are entitled. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 5, line 9, after the word "Columbia," strike out the words "and not more than 14 regional offices," and in line 14, same page, after the word "act," strike out down to and including the word "office," in line 22.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to cut out entirely these regional bureaus, which you will find in practical application will complicate the service, increase the red tape, embarrass the Congressmen who have to handle these claims, and at the same time put the relief one step further from the ex-soldier. I believe that if you will increase the suboffices so that every man will be within reasonable reach of one, where he may go to be examined and have his case investigated and his papers made out and sent directly to the head bureau in Washington, you will afford far more speedy and complete relief than you will if you attempt to scatter this bureau out under 14 regional heads. In my judgment there is just as much reason for dividing the Supreme Court of the United States into nine divisions and sending a justice of that court to every one of those divisions as there is for thus dividing up this veterans' bureau.

There is another grave objection to this proposition. These boys are going to appeal to you; you will be in Washington, and the papers in connection with their cases will possibly be in New Orleans, Cincinnati, Atlanta, or New York, or wherever the regional bureau for their district happens to be located. They will be just as far removed from you as they would be from the soldier if they were here in Washington. You will write to the regional bureau, and it will take three weeks possibly for you to get an answer, and by that time you will have half a dozen letters from the boy at home inquiring why you do not do something for him, and you never can explain to him why it is that you can not get service in the bureau that you have voted to create.

Another thing I fear is that it is going to cost more than twice as much money to operate under these 14 regional bureaus as it will under one central bureau and a vast number of suboffices. In the first place you are creating berths for at least 14 directors of these regional bureaus, who will draw large salaries, and you are going to have to keep a copy of every publication, every letter, every petition, every bit of testimony in the central bureau. You will have to have it all copied and sent to the head office in Washington in order that you may keep any trace of it at all. It is not going to do the ex-soldier any good in the world to scatter this bureau out under 14 different heads, and in my opinion it will practically double the expense of this work and increase infinitely the red tape about which we are now complaining, and instead of bringing relief to the soldier it is going to remove it one step further from him. [Applause.]

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAYTON: Page 5, line 8, strike out all of section 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the director shall establish a central office in Washington, D. C., and not more than 14 regional offices and such suboffices within the territory of the United States and its outlying possessions as may be deemed necessary by him and in the best interests of the work committed to the veterans' bureau and to carry out the purposes of this act. Any such regional office or suboffice may exercise such powers, including the establishment of agencies for hearing complaints and for examining, rating, and awarding compensation claims, granting medical, surgical, dental, and hospital care, convalescent care, insurance awards, pension awards, and all other matters delegated to these agencies by the director as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office."

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, of course most of you are aware of the fact that this is nothing more nor less than a desire on my part to substitute section 6 of H. R. 3 for section 6 of H. R. 6611. I want to say before I go any further that this section 6 of H. R. 3 does not represent altogether my views upon this question. I am offering it because of the fact that the soldiers of my State of Delaware have requested me to stand for section 6 of H. R. 3. That is their wish. If we are going to pay any attention at all to the soldiers, I, as the Representative of the State of Delaware, feel bound to introduce this amendment in accordance with their desire. In addition to that the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Wilmington have also advised me that it is their desire, and I am trying to carry out that desire.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Under the gentleman's amendment the director can establish as many suboffices as he thinks necessary.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; exactly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word and I shall feel that I have discharged my duty and have placed the matter before the House. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Did the committee in considering this great and grave subject consider utilizing the machinery of the Civil War that has grown up in such splendid capacity?

Mr. SWEET. The gentleman means the doctors who examine applicants for pensions?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. SWEET. The Public Health Service?

Mr. LAYTON. I do not refer to the Public Health Service.

Mr. SWEET. The gentleman means the doctors who examine applicants for pensions?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; I mean that north of Mason and Dixon's line—and I do not mean any reflection upon my brethren on the other side of that line, because there do not happen to be so many of them down there—but north of Mason and Dixon's line, as a gradual evolution, as a necessity, for the benefit of the Civil War veterans, they established boards of examining surgeons, three in each board. These boards are already established all over the country, and I am unable to understand why the machinery already at hand was not utilized in providing for the necessities of the veterans of the late war.

Mr. SWEET. No; we did not consider that, because we were dealing with the veterans of the World War.

Mr. LAYTON. What I want to get at is this: You have splendid machinery in this country to-day in these pension boards already existing, covering thousands of men, trained surgeons and physicians. Why were they not utilized in making up this bill? Why was not the splendid structure already built up made by enlargement to serve as the machinery for all the purposes of the soldiers of the late war in view of its record in providing for those of the War of the Rebellion?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in discussing so many amendments and considering so many amendments as we will have to consider at the end of the debate, it is very important to know the different questions presented. As I gather from the amendments that have been introduced to date, there are going to be two important questions for the committee to consider at the termination of this hour of debate. One of these questions is whether or not we are going to increase the number of suboffices in accordance with the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. BLAND]. The other is a proposition embraced in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Delaware to increase the power of the suboffices. They are two entirely different questions, and I hope the committee in giving them consideration will remember that these are two different questions and that they will weigh each question carefully.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it also ought to be considered that the gentleman from Delaware confers upon the subagencies the power to create others.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not only gives a suboffice complete power but delegates the power to other agencies, which would make as many suboffices as it wanted to delegate—it might have 1,000 or 1,500 suboffices.

Gentlemen of the committee, I realize what is responsible for the sentiment in favor of increasing the number of suboffices. It is the desire in the heart of every Member of this House to bring to the soldier these activities, so that the soldier may reach immediate relief that may be given to him. All of us want to do that; but, after all, in every proposition there are two principles involved. You not only have the principle of bringing the activity home to the soldier but you have the principle involved as to whether or not the tribunal created by this legislation shall give effective and just relief to the soldier. I assert that if there are created 140 suboffices, given jurisdiction to deal with all of these questions, and deal finally, that you will jeopardize the rights and the interests of the American soldier, who is supposed to be benefited by this legislation.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. The gentleman does not mean that we want to give the suboffices final jurisdiction?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I hoped to make myself plain. There are two different amendments, one to increase the number and the other to increase the power of the suboffices. Both amendments are for the consideration of the committee, and both might be adopted, and if both are adopted the result would be as I have stated.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman does not mean to say that increasing the suboffices from 50 to 140 would give any power to the suboffices to pass finally on claims?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; I do not mean to say so; the gentleman's amendment deals only with the number of suboffices.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the gentleman think that if you want expediency in the relief of these ex-service men, in the event of establishing 140 suboffices, it would be better to cut out the regional bureau?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, I have not given such consideration to that kind of organization to be able to express an opinion.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Would not it save time?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I have no pride of opinion in the provision of the bill, and if the committee thinks that we have adopted an unwise provision, of course the committee should amend it, but after mature study on how to give these men effective relief I think you ought not to create 140 suboffices. [Applause.]

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no fixed opinion based on experience or investigation as to what the number of suboffices should be, but I have received a telegram which has a very important bearing on the subject. It reads as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 7, 1921.

HON. JOHN J. GORMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

House bill 6611, relating to rehabilitation disabled soldiers, limits local offices to 50, a number altogether too small. The present number of local offices established by the Federal board is not in excess of the need. If present number of local offices is decreased, work now in progress will be seriously handicapped.

WM. J. BOGAN,
Principal Lane Technical School.

My correspondent, Mr. Bogan, is an eminent educator in Illinois. He has given unselfishly of his thought, time, and efforts to the needs of the ex-service men. He has charge of a great institution for the education of the former service men and is constantly studying their requirements, both in the matter of education and relief for them from the afflictions inuring to them in the great World War. I value Mr. Bogan's opinion in the matter, to which I respectfully defer, and for that reason I will support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 8, strike out all of section 6 and insert:

"SEC. 6. The director shall establish a central office in the District of Columbia and such suboffices within the territory of the United States not exceeding 140 in number, as he may deem necessary for the best interests of the work committed to the veterans' bureau and to carry out the purposes of this act. Such suboffices shall have such powers as may be delegated to them by the director for hearing complaints and for examining, rating, and awarding compensation claims, granting medical, surgical, dental, and hospital care, convalescent care, and necessary and reasonable after care, making insurance awards, granting vocational training, and all other matters delegated to them by the director as could be performed lawfully under this act by the central office.

"Provided, however, That an appeal to the central office may be had from the findings of the suboffice by the ex-service man under such rules and regulations as the director may prescribe."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if there is one duty resting upon the American Congress which at this time rises above all others, it is to enact such laws as will properly care for those men and officers of the World War whose bodies were broken and whose health was shattered in fighting for our common country. Any failure on our part to live up to this high responsibility would be unworthy of the representatives of the people of a grateful Nation.

On several occasions I have visited amongst the wounded soldiers at Walter Reed Hospital, and once I had the privilege to speak at one of their gatherings in the Red Cross hut. As I looked upon them, armless and legless, their faces maimed, their bodies bent and scarred by wounds of battle, I prayed that I might have the privilege and power in some way to render service to them. Then and there I firmly resolved, that so long as I live and so long as I am a Member of Congress, I would never permit an opportunity to pass to use my best efforts in seeing that this Nation discharge its stupendous obligations to them. Many of you have visited Walter Reed, and I know your hearts yearned for some magic power by which you could restore those heroes to all the strength and happiness which was theirs in the fullness of their physical manhood.

We are all of one mind, gentlemen, in our appreciation of the sacrifices of the ex-service men. We are all of one accord in a desire to see the highest measure of justice done unto them. This legislation is worthy of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whose every member has labored long and faithfully to write such a law as would best care for those who gave their all for the honor and glory of the American flag.

It was the purpose of the committee, I am sure, and it is the purpose of every Member of this Congress, by consolidating all the activities for the ex-service men into one bureau to obviate a great deal of "red tape" and delay in getting final action on their claims.

There has been much delay. There can be no doubt that errors have occurred in the handling of business for 4,000,000 men. The War Risk Bureau was a new venture, and we did not expect it to be perfect, yet in a few cases of my own knowledge it has seemed inexcusable for long delays, which have worked great hardships on the soldiers and their families. I will not cite all the instances, but I do wish to call your attention to one case in which the failure of the War Risk Bureau to answer a letter has resulted in a gross injustice and great loss.

In September, 1919, Mr. George St. J. Tucker, of Mobile, Ala., whose splendid son, William Sikes Tucker, served on the battle line in France, wrote the bureau, asking them to advise him the balance due on the insurance policy of his son. This young man was honorably discharged and sought a position in St. Louis, at the same time asking his father to keep his policy alive. The letter asking what amount was due or necessary to keep up the policy was mailed in Mobile on September 22. After two weeks Mr. Tucker wrote again, and still no answer was received from the bureau. Finally, a third attempt was made to get information from the bureau, and he was answered by the bureau on January 22, the following year, four months after that first letter was written, which was received here at Washington in due course of time. On January 14 this young man died after an operation for a disease undoubtedly brought on by service on the firing line. A week after his death the War Risk Bureau answered his father's letter, but then it was too late. Now, I am told his father can not collect on the policy, which had lapsed, because the bureau can not assume that the father would have paid the premiums and kept the policy alive had he secured the information he so much desired. What sort of business would you term that? The bureau may be right, as a technical proposition of law, but, morally, is not the Government bound to pay this policy? I understand there are only a very few similar cases. This Congress would not set a bad precedent in passing an act to relieve those who have suffered by the negligence of the bureau. Are you gentlemen of the committee not willing to so amend this bill as to take care of cases like this one? As a business proposition, should not the Government be held responsible for the negligence of its agents?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in section 6, for which I have prepared the substitute which the clerk has just read. This, gentlemen, is the very heart of this bill. As I understand it, the chief purpose of this legislation is to expedite the settlement of the claims of World War veterans. In other words, to avoid delay and so much "red tape" in their claims for compensation, treatment, vocational training, and so forth, and to bring the bureau closer to them in its activities. Here you have provided for 14 regional bureaus, in addition to the central office at Washington, and 50 suboffices throughout the country. To the suboffices you have not given the power to finally dispose of anything. I take it that the suboffices will simply furnish the soldier such information as he needs in fixing his papers to be forwarded to the regional offices. I presume you permit him to appeal from the findings of the regional office to the central office in Washington.

I very much fear that the purpose sought for in this section will not be accomplished. If you wish to expedite matters, why not have suboffices, not exceeding 140 in number, with such powers delegated to them as may be designated or prescribed by the director? Why not let these suboffices inform the men, fix up their papers correctly, make recommendations, and forward them to the central office at Washington, where, if necessary, the soldier can get the cooperation of his Congressman, as he now does? Why should you make him take three steps to accomplish that which he can accomplish by taking two?

I fear you are going to have more delay than now obtains if you permit this section to remain as it is. The final word about all the claims will eventually come from the central office at Washington. The check or money will have to be sent out from here; then why have regional bureaus which might result in more expense, more employees, more letters, more examinations, and more "red tape"? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], an ex-service man, sounded the keynote when he said that it would be far better to have more suboffices and no regional offices than to have the 14 regional offices and only 50 suboffices. The ex-service men of the country and those of this House believed we should have more suboffices.

I am going to support this bill, for I believe its purpose is good. I believe in the consolidation feature. We can accomplish nothing in decentralizing the power to finally dispose of these claims. The soldiers probably know better than we do just what they wish in the way of legislation, and let us, as nearly as possible, give them what they desire. This committee, which has given so much study to the situation, may know better than I do, yet I have great misgivings about section 6 as it is written in the bill.

There is another vastly important feature of this bill, to which I called the committee's attention a few days ago, and that is the section giving so much power and authority to the director. Doubtless a big man has been selected, and I believe the director is such a man. He should be a big man, for the responsibility he will have under this legislation is immeasurable. The expenditure of a billion dollars is under his supervision and control. You permit him under this bill to appoint thousands of employees and such staff officers and experts as he may deem necessary. You give him use of every governmental agency he may deem necessary, and even permit him to employ such private persons outside of regular Government employment in any number he may prescribe anywhere in the United States. Mark you, he fixes the salaries also. It may be that your committee could not work out a feasible plan otherwise, but let me warn you that it is very dangerous to clothe one man with such powers, it matters not how great a man he may be. I doubt if the director himself cares to have so much authority and responsibility. You are opening the way right here for the building up of a great political machine and permitting the placing of probably thousands of additional employees upon the pay rolls of the Government. If additional bureaus and employees are necessary, I say we must spare no expense in caring for our wounded soldiers, but who is to judge whether or not they are necessary? No one except the director, who will, of course, make his report to Congress each year. You should provide in this bill, my friends, that preference in employment be given to ex-service men in this new bureau whenever and wherever they are eligible. Let them in this way also get the benefit of this legislation.

Let us not in our enthusiasm run amuck in framing this legislation. The soldiers themselves are patriots. They were patriotic enough to save their country in time of war, and I know they are still patriotic enough to have us do the wisest and best thing for them and their country in times of peace. They do not wish you to open the doors of the Treasury for unnecessary employees. They are not asking this Congress to put in this legislation unnecessary burdens upon the masses of this country in our efforts to do justice by them. They know the needs for economy in the expenses of their Government. I believe, if we were to ascertain their views, they would prefer our saving some of the hundreds of millions of dollars you are appropriating for a big Army and Navy and great fighting machines at a time when there is no immediate danger of war and when our people are staggering under the burdens of excessive taxation. None who loves our flag would be stintingly economical when it comes to dealing with the needs of the wounded soldier. Whatever the disabled ex-service men need of the United States Treasury I say give them, but do not forget they are as wise as they are patriotic. They only ask simple justice at the hands of this Government.

We can not measure a man's patriotism in dollars and cents. God pity this Nation should the day ever come when her people measure their duty to the flag in money values. We can not reward these men for their services in terms of money, but it is the solemn duty of this Government to see that proper care is taken of those who were disabled in serving that flag. This our Government has never yet and never will fail to do. Every man who served in the World War will be pensioned or cared for by the Government whenever he becomes disabled. I repeat, the soldiers are men of sound judgment as well as great patriots and heroes. They do not wish more than is properly due them, but they do ask that, and I know you will give it. Every man in this Congress is earnestly endeavoring to have the Government do its full duty by them. The only question is what is the best course to pursue.

When this bill becomes a law it will be the result of honest effort of the membership of this body. Let us hope that it will bring about the relief sought and add to the comfort and happiness of those ex-service men and their families throughout the Nation whom it is our duty to honor and serve. Let us hope that this legislation will bring some measure of happiness and some little consolation to the loved ones of those who made the supreme sacrifice that we might still enjoy the blessings and hopes of American civilization. The generous heart of America will never fail to respond to the needs of those who baptized with their rich red blood the hoary hills of Europe.

They lived up to the highest traditions of their fathers. These young men turned the tide of battle on the western front, while at Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry they added new glory to the flag of their country and gave to the world a brilliant example of the genius, courage, and valor of American soldiery.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use a portion of the time allotted to me voicing an expression of grief and sorrow concerning the late Col. Frederick W. Galbraith, whose untimely death was announced in the morning's press:

Whereas, Col. Frederick W. Galbraith, national commander of the American Legion, a valiant and distinguished soldier of the American Expeditionary Forces in the World War, met an untimely and tragic death on June 8, 1921. Therefore, the Members of the House of Representatives, reflecting the sentiment of the American people, hereby expresses the sorrow of the Nation at the loss of this courageous soldier and exemplary citizen, whose life, character, and services will be an inspiration to every American patriot and a lasting heritage to the bereaved family.

I am sure that these sentiments are voiced by every Member of this House where the unalloyed Americanism and fine traits of character of the late Col. Galbraith were so well known and thoroughly appreciated.

When Col. Galbraith was elected to the national commandership, the highest position within the gift of his comrades of the American Legion, the following biographical sketch was published in the American Legion Weekly, the official organ of the American Legion:

THE NATIONAL COMMANDER.

On September 29, 1918, Col. Frederick W. Galbraith, jr., commanding the One hundred and forty-seventh Infantry, Thirty-seventh Division, performed the act of heroism which won for him the distinguished service cross.

Two years later to the day—on September 29, 1920—Frederick W. Galbraith, jr., was elected national commander of the American Legion.

Mr. Galbraith enjoys the distinction of having been both soldier and sailor in the course of his career. His early surroundings did not lack for military atmosphere, for he was born in Watertown, Mass., where a large Government arsenal is located, and later attended grammar school in Springfield, Mass., where there is a United States armory and from which city the American Army rifle derives its name.

Mr. Galbraith was graduated from the Nautical Training School at Boston, Mass., in 1893, and served as apprentice coxswain, third mate, and second mate aboard American sailing ships following his graduation. In 1898 he went to Cincinnati, becoming treasurer of the Western Paper Goods Co.

The future national commander was commissioned major in the First Infantry, Ohio National Guard, in 1916, and was promoted to colonel the same year. In 1917 he was assigned to command the One hundred and forty-seventh Infantry and remained at the head of this Thirty-seventh Division unit throughout the war. The regiment was composed principally of the First and Sixth Infantry Regiments, Ohio National Guard. Commander Galbraith won the distinguished service cross and the croix de guerre for heroism in action during the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He also participated in the St. Mihiel attack and served in the Baccarat and Ypres-Lys sectors.

His citation for the distinguished service cross reads:

"For extraordinary heroism in action near Ivoiry, France, September 29, 1918. When an enemy counterattack was imminent he went into the front lines under a violent artillery and machine-gun barrage, and by the coolness and certainty of his orders and the inspiring example of his personal courage reorganized his own command and took command of other units whose officers had been lost or diverted in the confusion of battle. Knocked down by a shell, he refused to be evacuated and continued to carry on the work of reorganizing his position and disposing the troops to a successful conclusion."

At the first State convention of the American Legion held in Ohio, Mr. Galbraith was unanimously elected department commander. When his successor—J. R. McQuigg—was elected at the 1920 convention the title of past department commander was conferred upon Mr. Galbraith, and it was provided that he should be a delegate to all future conventions of the American Legion of Ohio. During the last year Mr. Galbraith, in addition to being Ohio department commander, served as a member of the national executive committee of the legion.

John Thomas Taylor, the vice chairman of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, commenting upon the great loss that the legion has suffered in the untimely death of Col. Galbraith, made the following statement:

From the very moment that Col. Galbraith was elected he assumed active leadership in the fight for the ex-service man. Immediately he went from one end of the country to the other, visiting every hospital in which the disabled were located, and then determined to devote his entire activity during his administration to seeing that the terrible wrongs they had been suffering were righted. He took an active interest in national legislation upon this subject. The bills pertaining to vocational training, hospitalization, war-risk insurance, and the care and treatment of disabled ex-service men became his life work. Notwithstanding the tremendous number of other matters which daily occupied his attention he made it a point to visit Washington and to personally lay the necessities for new legislation before the President and before the Senators and Members of Congress.

Many of the Members of the present Congress came to know him personally and to admire him for his tremendous activity in the cause which he represented. He was honest and fearless in the expression of his convictions, and it was as a result of his personal attention in Washington that the legislation was gotten well under way and reached the point where it now stands on the calendar.

It is to be deeply regretted that he did not live to see the bills at present under discussion for this purpose become laws, for night and day, throughout the country, he worked to that end.

His tremendous personal vitality was used in building up the organization of the legion, both among the people and among the business organizations, and under his guidance it has grown to be the tremendous conservative fighting organization that it is to-day—fighting not only for the welfare of the men and women who belonged to it but fighting for the welfare of the country as well. On every occasion he took advantage of the opportunity to state that the first thought and consideration of the American Legion was the country and that the legion placed it first, and that nothing would be advocated by it not in conformity with the opening words of the preamble to its constitution—"For God and country."

He built up the great Americanism commission of the American Legion, which has been fighting for the past six months to wipe out radicalism in the country and to supplant it with 100 per cent Americanism.

These things had become his life work, and in his death not only the American Legion but the country itself suffers a great loss. He was a great man and a noble character, taken from this life at the very height of his career. He had gone through the war, had been seriously wounded in battle, had returned to this country deeply impressed with what war meant, and had profited by the lessons that he had learned. The country joins with the legion in mourning his loss.

I am sure that this House is profoundly moved by the untimely death of so great and good a man as Frederick W. Galbraith.

I shall call this resolution up when the Speaker resumes the chair. I desire now to have read the amendment which I offer and which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LINEBERGER: Page 5, lines 23 and 24, after the word "director," strike out "except to make compensation and insurance awards and to grant vocational training."

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I want now to read a request which was perhaps the last request made by the national commander regarding soldier legislation, and contained in a letter written to me at his direction on June 4, in which I am asked to offer the amendment which I have offered.

I shall quote the pertinent paragraphs of the letter:

The national commander has directed me to request you to offer an amendment upon the floor of the House to section 6 of H. R. 6611, the amendment to be the striking out of the following words on lines 23 and 24, page 5: "Except to make compensation and insurance awards and to grant vocational training."

This is the same amendment offered and so ably presented yesterday by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], and he and I agreed that I should make the motion to-day.

Mr. Chairman, the object of this is in order to facilitate the suboffices in carrying out the work which is contemplated by the bill. In the State of California the regional office is located at San Francisco, whereas the office in Los Angeles is a suboffice where perhaps 50 per cent more business is carried on than in the principal regional office located at San Francisco. The director should certainly retain the power to delegate full powers to any suboffice which he may deem advisable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain that request.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Then I ask unanimous consent to insert the letter to which I have referred as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be incorporated in the gentleman's remarks.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1921.

Hon. WALTER F. LINEBERGER, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LINEBERGER: The national commander has directed me to request you to offer an amendment upon the floor of the House to section 6 of H. R. 6611, the amendment to be the striking out of the following words on lines 23 and 24 of page 5, "except to make compensation and insurance awards and to grant vocational training."

The reason for this is perfectly evident. There was considerable discussion on the floor of the House yesterday in response to Col. Galbraith's letter to the Congressmen on this subject which, apparently from the debate, was misunderstood.

The American Legion has always stood for decentralization that actually carried service to the men right out in the field. In order to do this job properly the man's case must be handled and be disposed of out in the field and not by correspondence, whether such correspondence be with regional offices or with Washington, as heretofore. Correspondence has been the cause of the delay, and we have always advocated the principle of examinations and ratings and the granting of awards in the field where observation can be made of the applicant and where direct contact with him will clean up the case immediately. As the bill was first written, suboffices were given this authority. The subcommittee reported it favorably to the Committee of the Whole, but the Committee of the Whole in reporting the bill to the House took away this authority from the suboffices. This is the principle for which we have been fighting, and unless it is included in the law we feel the legislation will not produce the necessary results.

Col. Galbraith's letter to the Congressmen was perfectly clear upon this, but apparently it was misunderstood.

Will you kindly see that the amendment is introduced?

Sincerely,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Vice Chairman National Legislative Committee.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, as our colleague, the lady from Oklahoma [Miss ROBERTSON], said, the only purpose of the present discussion is to develop the best possible means of doing what we are all agreed upon. I wish to speak especially on the Bland, the Sweet, and the Rogers amendments, because in the great number of amendments we are apt to be confused. The Rogers amendment makes more clear the purposes of the committee in the section. The Sweet amendment very properly limits the suboffices to an existence of five years, in order that we may not have permanently fastened upon us these suboffices after the need for their existence has expired. The Bland amendment increases the number of suboffices from 50 to 140. It seems to me that if we have 14 regional offices, with the powers conferred, and 140 suboffices, with the powers conferred by the bill as it stands, subject to the limitation of the Sweet amendment, we will have at least the best system to start with. No one can tell which is the best method yet, but that is the method that the committee has worked out, subject to the extension of the number of offices from 50 to 140. When we have 48 States, 150 suboffices only gives an average of 3 suboffices to each State.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not understand why there should be so much quibbling concerning the number of suboffices to be established under this section. While I am opposed to creating unnecessary offices and to appropriations not absolutely justifiable, I can not find cause for objection in this instance. First, the entire Nation is demanding that everything that can be legitimately done for deserving and suffering ex-service men should be done now and without delay. The President has recently and frequently expressed himself most forcibly on this subject. Throughout the entire country, in meetings of every character which offer opportunity for touching upon or referring to the subject of relief for disabled ex-service men the people in pronounced manner demand that whatever is just and necessary be done without delay. We are voting millions and millions with merely superficial knowledge of the manner in which they are to be expended. I am simply appalled at the manner in which we are authorizing the expenditure of millions of dollars upon the mere statement of some one that it is necessary. In many instances there has been no adequate or intelligent explanation of what they are to be expended for. For this reason it is difficult to understand just why there should be such firm opposition to the continuance of a few suboffices of a temporary nature and intended solely to serve the interests of disabled ex-service men.

This is purely emergency legislation. It is to cover but two or three years, and intended almost wholly to meet an exigency of such vital character that we can not disregard it and go before the people of the country and justify ourselves.

Mr. Chairman, I ask some member of the committee or any gentleman opposed to the proposed amendment to tell why they are so persistently objecting to retaining the 140 suboffices, in view of the limited powers granted them in most of the amendments. I do not insist that the suboffices should be empowered to do all the things that the regional offices are authorized to do, but when the purpose is merely to facilitate and hasten bringing the disabled men in touch with the assistance which the Government desires to extend them, I can not understand why objection is made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
